BRITISH AND FOREIGN

State Papers.

SPEECH of The Queen, on the Opening of the British Parliament.—Westminster, February 1, 1849.

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

THE period being arrived at which the business of Parliament is usually resumed, I have called you together for the discharge of your important duties.

It is satisfactory to me to be enabled to state, that both in the north and in the south of Europe the contending parties have consented to a suspension of arms for the purpose of negotiating terms of peace.

The hostilities carried on in the Island of Sicily were attended with circumstances so revolting, that the British and French Admirals were impelled by motives of humanity to interpose, and to stop the further effusion of blood.

I have availed myself of the interval thus obtained to propose, in conjunction with France, to the King of Naples, an arrangement calculated to produce a permanent settlement of affairs in Sicily. The negotiations on these matters is still pending.

It has been my anxious endeavour, in offering my good offices to the various contending Powers, to prevent the extension of the calamities of war, and to lay the foundation for lasting and honourable peace. It is my constant desire to maintain with all foreign States the most friendly relations.

As soon as the interests of the public service will permit, I shall direct the papers connected with these transactions to be laid before you.

A rebellion of a formidable character has broken out in the Punjab, and the Governor-General of India has been compelled, for the preservation of the peace of the country, to assemble a considerable force, which is now engaged in military operations against the insurgents; but the tranquillity of British India has not been affected by these unprovoked disturbances.

I again commend to your attention the restrictions imposed on commerce by the navigation laws.

If you shall find that these laws are in whole or in part unnecessary for the maintenance of our maritime power, while they fetter trade and industry, you will no doubt deem it right to repeal or modify their provisions.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I have directed the estimates for the service of the year to be laid before you; they will be framed with the most anxious attention to a wise economy.

The present aspect of affairs has enabled me to make large reductions on the estimates of last year.

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

I observe with satisfaction that this portion of the United Kingdom has remained tranquil amidst the convulsions which have disturbed so many parts of Europe.

The insurrection in Ireland has not been renewed, but a spirit of disaffection still exists; and I am compelled, to my great regret, to ask for a continuance, for a limited time, of those powers which in the last session you deemed necessary for the preservation of the public tranquillity.

I have great satisfaction in stating that commerce is reviving from those shocks which at the commencement of last session I had to deplore.

The condition of the manufacturing districts is likewise more encouraging than it has been for a considerable period.

It is also gratifying to me to observe that the state of the revenue is one of progressive improvement.

I have to lament, however, that another failure in the potatoe crop has caused very severe distress in some parts of Ireland.

The operation of the laws for the relief of the poor in Ireland will properly be a subject of your inquiry; and any measures by which those laws may be beneficially amended, and the condition of the people may be improved, will receive my cordial assent.

It is with pride and thankfulness that I advert to the loyal spirit of my people, and that attachment to our institutions which has animated them during a period of commercial difficulty, deficient production of food, and political revolution.

I look to the protection of Almighty God for favour in our continued progress; and I trust that you will assist me in upholding the fabric of the Constitution, founded as it is upon the principles of freedom and of justice.

SPEECH of The Lords Commissioners, on the Closing of the British Parliament.—Westminster, August 1, 1849.

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

WE have it in command from Her Majesty to inform you, that the state of public business enables her to dispense with your attendance in Parliament, and to close the present Session.

Her Majesty has directed us to express her satisfaction with the zeal and assiduity with which you have discharged the laborious and anxious duties, in the performance of which you have been occupied.

Her Majesty has given her assent to the important measure you have passed to amend the navigation laws, in full confidence that the enterprize, skill, and hardihood of her people will assure to them a full share of the commerce of the world, and maintain upon the seas the ancient renown of this nation.

Her Majesty has commanded us to acquaint you, that the friendly character of her relations with foreign Powers affords her a just confidence in the continuance of peace.

The preliminaries of peace between Prussia and Denmark have been signed, under the mediation of Her Majesty; and Her Majesty trusts that this Convention may prove the forerunner of a definitive and permanent Treaty.

Her Majesty's efforts will continue to be directed to promote the restoration of peace in those parts of Europe in which it has been interrupted.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

We are commanded by Her Majesty to return you her thanks for the provision which you have made for the public service.

The public expenditure has undergone considerable reductions within the present year, and Her Majesty will continue to apply a watchful economy in every branch of the public service.

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

We are commanded by Her Majesty to congratulate you on the happy termination of the war in the Punjaub. The exertions made by the Government of India, and the valour displayed by the army in the field, demand Her Majesty's warmest acknowledgments.

Her Majesty has observed with gratification the spirit of obedience to the laws which has been manifested by her subjects during the period which has elapsed since Her Majesty last addressed her Parliament.

It is the characteristic of our Constitution that it renders the maintenance of order compatible with the fullest enjoyment of political and civil liberty.

The satisfaction with which Her Majesty has viewed the peaceful progress of her people in arts and industry has been greatly alloyed by the continuance of severe distress in one part of the United Kingdom.

Her Majesty has observed with pleasure your liberal exertions to mitigate the pressure of this calamity; and Her Majesty commands us to thank you for your unremitting attention to measures calculated to improve the general condition of Ireland. It is Her Majesty's fervent hope that it may please the Almighty Disposer of Events to favour the operation of those laws which have been sanctioned by Parliament, and to grant to her Irish people, as the reward of that patience and resignation with which they have borne their protracted sufferings, the blessings of an abundant harvest, and of internal peace.

*TREATY of Friendship and Commerce, between Great Britain and Abyssinia.—Signed at Ennowga, Nvember 2, 1849.

[Her Majesty's Ratification was delivered to the Ras of Abyssinia, March 1, 1852.]

WHEREAS commerce is a source of great wealth and prosperity to all those nations who are firmly united in the bonds of reciprocal friendship: and whereas the conclusion of a Treaty of perpetual Amity and Commerce between Abyssinia and Great Britain, which has already been desired by their respective Sovereigns, would tend to the mutual advantage of both countries: and whereas it is desirable that the conditions should be specified whereupon the commercial intercourse betwixt the 2 nations should be conducted: now it is hereby declared, done, and agreed as follows, between Walter Charles Metcalfe Plowden, Esquire, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul to His Majesty of Abyssinia, duly empowered to that effect by Her Britannic Majesty, and by his said Majesty of Abyssinia on the other part:

ART. I. A firm, free, and lasting friendship shall subsist between Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and her successors, on the one part, and His Majesty of Abyssinia and his successors, on the other part.

II. For the purpose of preserving and strengthening the friendly relations subsisting between the 2 nations, His Majesty of Abyssinia and his successors shall receive and protect any Ambassador, Envoy, or Consul, whom Her Britannic Majesty or her successors may see fit to appoint; and shall preserve inviolate all the rights and privileges of such Ambassador, Envoy, or Consul.

* Signed in the English and Amharic languages.

III. Her Britannic Majesty and her successors will, in the same manner, receive and protect any Ambassador, Envoy, or Consul, whom His Majesty of Abyssinia or his successors may see fit to appoint, and will equally preserve inviolate all the rights and privileges of such Ambassador, Envoy, or Consul.

IV. His Majesty of Abyssinia engages to grant to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and to the produce and commerce of her dominions, all favours, privileges, advantages, or immunities, either as regards duties, imposts, or charges, or in any other respect whatsoever, which His Majesty of Abyssinia has already granted, or may hereafter grant, to the subjects, produce, or commerce of any other foreign country.

V. An import duty of 5 for every hundred, and no more, may be levied and received by His Majesty of Abyssinia and his successors, upon all goods and merchandize imported by British subjects into the Kingdom of Abyssinia, for sale either therein or in the countries beyond.

VI. This import duty of 5 for every 100 shall be assessed upon the current value of the merchandize at the market-place of Gondar, and shall be paid at the rate of 5 for every 100, either in kind or in specie, at the option of the merchant.

VII. When the said import duty shall have been duly paid, the importing merchant shall be at full liberty to dispose of his goods at any place or places within the territories of Abyssinia, without any licence being required for the removal of the same, and without any prohibition, restraint, or further duty or impost of any kind being imposed upon the buyer; and the importing merchant may, if he pleases, carry away such goods to any other country or place, without any licence being required for the removal of the same, and without restraint or molestation, or the payment of any further duty or impost whatever.

VIII. British merchants shall be at liberty to purchase within the territories of Abyssinia all such commodities as they may think proper to buy, whether such commodities are the produce of those territories, or have been imported into those territories from other countries; and the said merchants may freely export the same without the payment of any duty whatever.

IX. The subjects of His Majesty of Abyssinia shall have in the United Kingdom the advantages which are already enjoyed, or which may hereafter be enjoyed, by the subjects of the most favoured nation; and no higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United Kingdom, of goods the produce of Abyssinia, than are or shall be payable upon the like goods the produce of any other foreign country imported in like manner.

The mails for Boston shall comprise all the correspondence for that city.

IV. Reciprocally, when the packets are despatched from Boston, or from New York to Liverpool, the mails forwarded from the offices of Boston and New York to the office of Liverpool, shall comprise the correspondence for all parts of the United Kingdom, with the exception of the city of London and its suburbs.

The mails for London shall comprise all the correspondence for that city and its suburbs, and for countries in transit through the United Kingdom.

V. When the packets are despatched from Southampton to New York, the mails forwarded from the offices of London and Southampton shall comprise the correspondence for all parts of The United States, and for countries in transit through The United States.

VI. When the packets are despatched from New York to Southampton, the mails forwarded from the office of New York to the office of London, shall comprise the correspondence for all parts of the United Kingdom (with the exception of Southampton), and for foreign countries (France and countries on the continent of Europe addressed viâ Southampton and Havre excepted), and for British colonies and possessions in transit through the United Kingdom.

The mails for Southampton shall comprise all the correspondence for that town, and for France and for countries on the continent of Europe, specially addressed viâ Southampton and Havre.

VII. If, hereafter, it should be deemed necessary to make a direct exchange of mails between other offices than those mentioned in Article I of the present Articles, other offices of exchange may be established by mutual agreement between the 2 offices.

CHAPTER II.—Regulations respecting the exchange of Correspondence, Progressive Rates of Postage, &c.

VIII. The respective offices shall mutually account to each other for the portion of the postage of the correspondence exchanged between them, which is due to each, both for that of the letters not prepaid, and also for that of the letters which are prepaid.

On all prepaid letters sent from one office of exchange to another, there shall be distinctly marked in red ink, in the upper right hand corner of each letter, the amount due to the country to which sent; and, in like manner, on all unpaid letters there shall be marked in black ink, the amount due to the country from which forwarded.

When either country is entitled to the packet or sea rate of postage in addition to its inland, the 2 rates shall be combined and marked in one sum on each letter.

IX. With respect to letters above the weight of a single letter which is fixed at half an ounce in either country, the respective offices in accounting to each other, shall employ the following scale of progression :

For every letter, not exceeding half an ounce in weight, 1 single rate.

Above half an ounce, but not exceeding 1 ounce, 2 rates.

Above 1 ounce, but not exceeding 2 ounces, 4 rates.

Above 2 ounces, but not exceeding 3 ounces, six rates.

Above 3 ounces, but not exceeding 4 ounces, 8 rates ; and so on, 2 rates being added for every ounce or fraction of an ounce.

X. The correspondence of every description which may be forwarded from one office to another shall be inclosed in sealed or locked bags, and each class of correspondence shall be tied up separately, and distinguished by a label, showing under what article in the letter-bill such correspondence is comprised.

XI. When closed mails are forwarded, under the stipulations contained in Articles V, VI, VII, and VIII, of the Convention of December 15, 1848, from the United Kingdom through The United States, or from The United States through the United Kingdom, the office which despatches the mails shall insert the net weight of the letters, and the number of newspapers contained in such mails in the letter-bill, in the table prepared for that purpose ; and, in like manner, when closed mails are received in the United Kingdom through The United States, or in The United States through the United Kingdom, the office which receives the mails shall insert the net weight of the letters and the number of newspapers contained in such mails, in the acknowledgment of receipt, which is to be returned by the next post.

XII. When closed mails are forwarded from one part of The United States to another part, through the territory of British North America, or from one part of British North America to another part, through the territory of The United States, the office which despatches the mails shall send a letter-bill, in which shall be entered the net weight of the letters, and the number of newspapers contained in such mails.

The letter-bill shall be addressed to the Post Office of the country through which the mail is forwarded, and shall be according to the Form (A), annexed to the present Articles.

XIII. Letters originating in The United States, and addressed to the foreign countries and British colonies and possessions contained in Table (B), and letters originating in the United Kingdom, and addressed to the foreign countries and United States possessions contained in Table (C), annexed to the present Articles ; and, vice versa, letters originating in such foreign countries, British colonies and possessions, and United States possessions, and addressed to the United Kingdom, or The United States, shall be delivered by one office to the other free of all postage, whether packet or inland.

XIV. With respect to letters passing through either country which cannot be forwarded unless the postage be paid in advance, the office of The United States shall pay to the British office the rates of British and foreign postage set against the names of the respective foreign countries and British colonies and possessions in Table (D), annexed to the present Articles; and, in like manner, the British office shall pay to the office of The United States the rates of United States postage set against the names of the respective foreign countries and United States possessions and territories in Table (E), annexed to the present Articles.

CHAPTER III.—Letter Bills, Acknowledgments of Receipts, Accounts, &c.

XV. Every mail passing between the respective offices of exchange in the United Kingdom and The United States, shall be accompanied by a letter-bill, specifying the amount of postage due to each office on each class of correspondence.

The office to which the mail is addressed shall return by the next post an acknowledgment of receipt to the office from which it was transmitted.

The letter-bills and acknowledgments of receipt shall be made according to the forms (F and G) agreed upon and annexed to the present Articles.

XVI. If it should happen at the usual period for making up the mails there should not be any letter or other correspondence from either of the offices of exchange, a blank letter-bill shall nevertheless be forwarded to the corresponding office.

XVII. The letter-bills and acknowledgments of receipt, indicating the correct amount of postage due to each office, shall serve as vouchers to the quarterly accounts.

If, in checking the mails transmitted to the respective offices of exchange, the amount of postage of any of the articles shall be found to differ from that entered in the letter-bill by the dispatching office, such articles shall be checked by 2 officers, and the corrected amount, which is entered by them on the verification side of the letter-bill, shall be accepted as the true amount.

XVIII. Accounts, showing the results of the mutual transmission of correspondence between the United Kingdom and The United States, shall be made out at the end of every quarter by the General Post Office in London, and having been examined, compared, and settled by the General Post Office in Washington, the balance shall be paid without delay by that office which shall be found indebted to the other.

The quarterly accounts shall be made out according to the Forms (H) and (I) annexed to the present Articles.

CHAPTER IV.—Dead, Mis-sent, and Returned Letters.

XIX. Dead letters, newspapers, &c. which cannot be delivered, from whatever cause, shall be mutually returned after the expiration of every month, or otherwise, as the regulations of each office will admit.

Such of those letters, &c. as shall have been charged in the account, shall be returned for the same amount of postage which was originally charged by the sending office, and shall be allowed in the discharge of the account of the office to which they were transmitted.

The Forms (K and L) to be used in claiming the return of postage, and to accompany such dead letters, newspapers, &c. are annexed to the present Articles.

XX. With respect to dead letters, &c. which may have been received in closed mails, or which cannot be produced by the office which has to claim the amount, they shall be admitted for the same weight and amount of postage which was originally charged upon such dead letters, &c. in the accounts of the respective offices, on a declaration, or on lists vouching for the amount of postage demanded, signed by the Inspector of the Dead Letter Office, or other officer duly authorized for that purpose.

XXI. Letters misdirected or mis-sent, or which may require the prepayment of the postage, shall be reciprocally returned, without delay, through the respective Offices of Exchange, and credit taken in the letter-bill for the amount of postage originally charged upon them.

Re-directed letters, or letters addressed to persons who have changed their residences, shall be mutually returned by the first post, charged with the rates of postage which would have been paid by the parties to whom they are addressed.

XXII. Letters sent for the purpose of annoying or injuring the parties to whom they are addressed (the postage on which either office may think proper to return), even though they may have been opened, are to be included and admitted with the dead letters.

XXIII. Whereas, by Article XIII of the Convention of December 15, 1848, it is stipulated that letters posted in The United States, addressed to the British North American Provinces, or vice versa, shall be charged according to the rates of postage which are now, or which shall hereafter be, in operation in The United States, and in the British North American Provinces, for inland letters; and whereas, by Article XIV of the said Convention, it is further stipulated that the rates of postage fixed by the preceding Article shall be combined into one rate, of which payment in advance shall be optional, both in The United States and in the British North American Provinces, and that it shall not be permitted to pay less than the whole rate; and as, owing to the various rates of postage now in operation in the 2 countries, which are governed by the distance that letters have to be conveyed in each, depending upon the point of intercommunication where the correspondence passes from one country to the other, it will not be possible to determine, by previous regulations, the true combined rates to which letters will be liable; and as, therefore, it will not be practicable to prescribe such forms, and settle such details as will carry the said Articles into due effect, it is agreed that further efforts for the adjustment of such forms and details, for carrying into operation Articles XIII and XIV of the Convention of December 15, 1848, shall be postponed until such alterations be made in the rates of postage as will allow of the provisions of the said Articles being effectually carried out, according to the true intent and meaning of the same.

XXIV. The present Articles, so far as they are not already in force, shall come into operation on the 1st day of July next.

Done in duplicate, in the City of Washington, the 14th day of May, 1849.

XIV. Les cautionnements des comptables dont la quotité n'est pas déterminée par une loi seront fixés par Ordonnance Royale, rendue sur le rapport du Ministre compétent, de concert avec le Ministre des Finances.

TITRE V.—Dispositions Générales.

XV. Toutes contributions directes ou indirectes, autres que celles autorisées par la présente loi, à quelque titre et sous quelque dénomination qu'elles se perçoivent, sont formellement interdites, à peine, contre les autorités qui les ordonneraient, contre les employés qui confectionneraient les rôles et tarifs, et ceux qui en feraient le recouvrement, d'être poursuivis comme concussionnaires, sans préjudice de l'action en répétition, pendant 3 années, contre tous receveurs, percepteurs, ou individus qui auraient fait la perception, et sans que, pour exercer cette action devant les tribunaux, il soit besoin d'une autorisation préalable. Il n'est pas néanmoins dérogé à l'exécution de l'Article IV de la Loi du 2 Août, 1829, relatif aux centimes que les Conseils Généraux sont autorisés à voter pour les opérations cadastrales, non plus qu'aux dispositions des Lois du 10 Mai, 1838, sur les attributions départementales, du 18 Juillet, 1837, sur l'Administration Communale, du 21 Mai, 1836, sur les chemins vicinaux, et du 28 Juin, 1833, sur l'instruction primaire.

La présente Loi, discutée, délibérée et adoptée par la Chambre des Pairs et par celle des Députés, et sanctionnée par nous ce jourd'hui, sera exécutée comme loi de l'Etat.

DONNONS EN MANDEMENT à nos Cours et Tribunaux, Préfets, Corps Administratifs, et tous autres, que les présentes ils gardent et maintiennent, fassent garder, observer et maintenir, et, pour les rendre plus notoires à tous, ils les fassent publier et enregistrer partout où besoin sera, et, afin que ce soit chose ferme et stable à toujours, nous y avons fait mettre notre sceau.

Fait en notre Palais de Neuilly, le 8e jour du mois d'Août, l'an 1847.

Par le Roi :

LOUIS-PHILIPPE.

Je remplis un devoir, M. le Chevalier, en vous réitérant mes sincères remerciements pour la part active que vous n'avez cessé de prendre aux négociations qui ont précédé la conclusion des 2 Conventions signées en dernier lieu à Berlin.

Le Roi aime à apprécier vos efforts, et Sa Majesté m'a chargé d'avoir l'honneur de vous en exprimer ici sa haute satisfaction.

Je m'empresse de vous transmettre sous ce pli une copie confidentielle des 2 Conventions, que je vous prie de porter à la connaissance de votre Gouvernement, qui je n'en doute pas trouvera, dans les nouveaux et grands sacrifices que le Danemark a faits dans l'intérêt du rétablissement de la tranquillité du Nord, et du commerce des Puissances amies et alliées, un motif de plus pour appuyer notre juste cause et pour nous conserver un concours si nécessaire pour assurer un résultat satisfaisant aux négociations définitives de paix qui vont incessamment s'ouvrir à Londres.

Je saisis, &c.

No. 4.—The Earl of Westmorland to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. July 23.)
(Extract.) Berlin, July 19, 1849.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting the legalized copy of the Protocol containing the Preliminary Articles of Peace, and of the Armistice, as they have been signed by the Prussian and Danish Plenipotentiaries and ratified by the King of Prussia.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

WESTMORLAND.

(Inclosure 1.)—Preliminaries of Peace between Denmark and Prussia, signed at Berlin, July 10, 1849.

PROTOCOLE.

LES Soussignés, Plénipotentiaires nommés respectivement par Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark et Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, à l'effet de poser les bases d'une paix définitive destinée à aplanir le différend qui s'est élevé entre eux sur les rapports du Duché de Slesvig, sont convenus, avec le concours du Comte de Westmorland, Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Berlin, comme Représentant de la Puissance médiatrice, des Articles Préliminaires de Paix suivants :

ART. I. Le Duché de Slesvig aura une Constitution séparée pour ce qui regarde sa législature et son administration intérieure, sans être uni au Duché de Holstein, et laissant intacte l'union politique qui rattache le Duché de Slesvig à la Couronne Danoise.

II. L'organisation définitive du Duché de Slesvig résultant de cette base, fera l'objet de négociations ultérieures, auxquelles les Hautes Parties Contractantes inviteront la Grande Bretagne à prendre part en qualité de Puissance médiatrice.

III. Les Duchés de Holstein et de Lauenbourg continueront à faire partie de la Confédération Germanique.

Le règlement définitif de la position que ces duchés occuperont dans le susdit corps politique, par suite des changements qui vont s'opérer dans la constitution de l'Allemagne, est réservé à une entente ultérieure entre les Hautes Parties Contractantes.

L'un des objets de cette entente sera de maintenir autant que le comportent le principe consacré par l'Article I de la présente Convention, et la position future du Duché de Holstein vis-à-vis des autres Etats Allemands, les liens non-politiques des intérêts matériels qui ont subsisté entre les Duchés de Holstein et de Slesvig.

Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck, Duc de Holstein, accordera à ce duché dans le plus bref délai possible, une Constitution Représentative.

IV. Il est entendu que les stipulations renfermées dans les Articles précédents ne préjugeront en aucune manière la question de la succession dans les Etats réunis sous le sceptre de Sa Majesté Danoise, ni les droits éventuels de qui que ce soit.

Afin de prévenir les complications qui pourraient résulter des doutes soulevés relativement à l'ordre de succession, sa dite Majesté, aussitôt après la paix définitive, prendra l'initiative de propositions tendantes à régler cet ordre de succession d'un commun accord avec les Grandes Puissances.

V. Les Hautes Parties Contractantes conviennent de réclamer la garantie des Grandes Puissances pour la stricte exécution de la paix définitive relativement au Duché de Slesvig.

Le présent Protocole, expédié en double, sera revêtu de l'approbation de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck et de Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, et les 2 exemplaires ainsi approuvés respectivement, seront échangés à Berlin dans l'espace de 8 jours, ou plus tôt si faire se peut, à compter du jour de la signature, après quoi communication de ce Protocole sera faite de part et d'autre à Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires ont signé ce Protocole, et y ont apposé le sceau de leurs armes.

Fait à Berlin, ce 10 Juillet, l'an 1849.

LA signature des Préliminaires de la Paix entre Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck d'une part et Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse de l'autre, ayant eu lieu ce jour, leurs dites Majestés ayant vivement à cœur de mettre dès à présent un terme aux calamités de la guerre et à l'effusion du sang, et croyant en outre devoir prendre par rapport au Duché

de Slesvig, des mesures propres à y préparer les voies à une pacification définitive et durable, en conformité du principe établi par l'Article I des susdits Préliminaires, ont résolu de conclure dans ce double but, une Convention d'Armistice, et ont nommé à cet effet pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :

Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck, le Sieur Holger Christian de Reedtz, son Chambellan, Commandeur de son Ordre du Danebrog avec la Croix d'Argent du même ordre, Commandant de l'Ordre Royal de l'Etoile Polaire de Suède, de celui de la Légion d'Honneur de France, et de celui de Léopold de Belgique ;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, le Sieur Alexandre Gustave Adolphe Baron de Schleinitz, son Chambellan, son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanovre, son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg, son Altesse le Duc de Brunswick, son Altesse le Prince de la Schaumbourg-Lippe, Chevalier des Ordres Prussiens de St. Jean de Jérusalem et de l'Aigle Rouge, 3ème classe, décoré du Nichan Iftihar ;

Lesquels, avec le concours du Comte de Westmorland, Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Berlin, comme Représentant de la Puissance médiatrice, et après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté les Articles suivants :

ART. I. A dater du jour de l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention, il y aura une suspension complète des hostilités par terre et par mer pendant 6 mois, et au-delà de ce terme, jusqu'à l'expiration de 6 semaines après que l'Armistice aurait été dénoncé de part ou d'autre.

Si le présent Armistice était dédit, les troupes Prussiennes et Allemandes pourront occuper la partie continentale du Duché de Slesvig, laquelle, dans ce cas, serait évacuée par les troupes neutres qui d'après l'Article V pourraient s'y trouver encore.

II. Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse fera transmettre au Général, commandant-en-chef l'Armée Prussienne et Allemande réunie dans le Jutland et dans les Duchés de Slesvig et de Holstein, l'ordre d'évacuer le Jutland, et de prendre, dans l'espace de 25 jours, les positions indiquées dans les Articles III et V.

III. Le Général-en-Chef des troupes Danoises et celui des troupes Prussiennes et Allemandes nommeront des officiers Danois et Prussiens, lesquels, dans le but de fixer la délimitation des territoires à occuper respectivement par les troupes Prussiennes et neutres, tireront et consigneront sur une carte une ligne de démarcation à partir d'un point sur la côte près et au sud-est de la ville de Flensbourg, jusqu'à un point sur la côte et au nord-ouest de la ville de Tondern, laissant la première de ces villes, ainsi que les enclaves Jutlandaises au nord, et la ville de Tondern au sud de la dite ligne de démarcation.

IV. Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse pourra conserver, pendant la

durée de l'Armistice, dans le Duché de Slesvig et au midi de la susdite ligne de démarcation, un corps d'armée dont la force n'excédera pas 6,000 hommes. Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck pourra continuer d'occuper militairement les Iles d'Als et d'Arroe.

V. Ces troupes Danoises et Prussiennes seront les seules forces militaires qui pourront rester dans le Duché de Slesvig pendant la durée de l'Armistice, à l'exception d'un corps de troupes neutres dont la force n'excédera pas 2,000 hommes et qui occupera la partie continentale du Duché de Slesvig située au nord de la ligne de démarcation.

L'entretien et la solde des dites troupes neutres seront à la charge de Sa Majesté Danoise.

Les Hautes Parties Contractantes inviteront Sa Majesté le Roi de Suède et de Norvège à vouloir bien fournir ce corps de troupes neutres.

Il ne sera pas mis de part ou d'autre, de garnison dans les enclaves Jutlandaises dans le Duché de Slesvig pendant la durée de l'Armistice.

VI. En même temps que les troupes, réunies sous les ordres du Général Commandant-en-Chef l'armée Prussienne et Allemande, prendront les positions désignées dans l'Article III, Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck fera lever les blocus des ports Prussiens et Allemands établis par ses forces navales.

Les ordres relatifs à l'exécution des Articles précédents seront expédiés le même jour aux généraux et officiers commandants les armées et les forces navales respectives.

VII. Tous les bâtiments marchands qui ont été amenés de part ou d'autre, depuis le commencement des hostilités, seront rendus, ainsi que leurs cargaisons, immédiatement après la levée du blocus. Quant aux bâtiments ou aux cargaisons qui auraient été vendus, leur valeur sera restituée.

En revanche Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse s'engage à restituer et à faire restituer les contributions en argent prélevées dans le Jutland par les troupes Prussiennes et Allemandes, ainsi que la valeur des chevaux requis militairement pour l'usage de l'armée Prussienne et Allemande, sans avoir été rendue depuis à qui de droit. L'approvisionnement et le logement des dites troupes, ainsi que les fourrages qui leur ont été fournis, demeureront à la charge du pays.

Afin de régler ce remboursement, un Commissaire nommé par Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck, et un Commissaire nommé par Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, se réuniront sur les lieux 6 semaines après l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention.

Ces Commissaires régleront cette affaire dans l'espace de 4 semaines, et si à l'expiration de ce terme il y avait encore des réclamations contestées à l'égard desquelles ils n'auraient pas pu tomber d'accord, ces réclamations seront soumises à la décision définitive d'un arbitre que les Hautes Parties Contractantes inviteront le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique à vouloir bien désigner.

Le montant des différentes compensations sera remboursé au plus tard 6 mois à compter du jour de l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention.

VIII. Tous les prisonniers de guerre et politiques seront mis en liberté de part et d'autre sans restrictions. L'échange des prisonniers sera effectué à Flensbourg tout au plus tard 25 jours après l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention.

IX. Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse invitera tous les Gouvernements qui ont pris une part active à la guerre actuelle contre le Danemarck, à déclarer, aussi promptement que possible, leur accession à la présente Convention, dont les stipulations deviendront par là obligatoires pour eux, en même temps qu'elles recevront leur pleine application pour ce qui les concerne.

X. Il sera établi, pour la totalité du Duché de Slesvig, une Commission Administrative (Landes-Verwaltung), qui, pendant la durée de l'armistice gouvernera ce pays au nom de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck.

Elle sera composée de 2 membres, dont l'un sera choisi par Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck, et l'autre par Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, aux quels sera adjoint un commissaire que Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne sera invitée à nommer pour décider, en qualité d'arbitre, en cas de diversité d'opinions entre les 2 autres membres.

Les fonctions de cette Commission seront d'administrer le Duché de Slesvig conformément aux lois en vigueur et d'y maintenir l'ordre et la tranquillité. Elle sera investie, dans ce but, de toute l'autorité nécessaire, à l'exception toutefois du pouvoir législatif, qui restera suspendu pendant la durée de l'armistice.

Quant aux lois, ordonnances, et mesures administratives quelconques émanées pour le Duché de Slesvig depuis le 17 Mars, 1848, la dite Commission aura la faculté d'examiner et de décider lesquelles de ces lois, ordonnances, et mesures administratives, il conviendra d'abroger ou de maintenir, dans l'intérêt bien entendu du pays.

XI. Les forces militaires nécessaires pour le maintien de l'ordre seront fournies à la Commission Administrative, et sur sa requisition : pour les Iles d'Als et d'Arroe, par le Général commandant les troupes Danoises ; dans la partie méridionale du Duché de Slesvig, par le Général commandant les troupes Prussiennes ; et pour la partie continentale du Duché de Slesvig située au nord de la ligne de démarcation, par le Commandant-en-Chef des troupes neutres stationnées respectivement dans ces districts.

XII. La Commission Administrative du Slesvig s'entendra avec

le Gouvernement Danois pour convenir d'un pavillon intérimaire, sous lequel les navires Slesvigois pourront naviguer pendant la durée de l'armistice, en jouissant des mêmes avantages que les bâtimens Danois.

XIII. Les postes et autres communications intérieures reprendront leur cours regulier. Le passage libre des postes par le Duché de Holstein, et le maintien de l'établissement postal à Hambourg, sont expressément réservés.

XIV. La présente Convention sera ratifiée, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Berlin dans l'espace de 8 jours, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut, à dater du jour de la signature.

La présente Convention, expédiée en double, a été dressée en langue Française, Danoise, et Allemande. Il est convenu que les doutes qui pourraient s'élever sur l'interprétation de la Convention, seront décidés d'après la teneur du texte Français.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires ont signé la présente Convention, et y ont apposé le sceau de leurs armes.

^{May 1,} 1849.*

(Translation.)

HIS Imperial Majesty the Most High and Most Mighty Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, and His Imperial Majesty the Most High and Most Mighty Emperor and Padishah of the Ottomans, animated by an equal solicitude for the well-being of the Principalities of Moldavia and of Wallachia, and faithful to the antecedent engagements which secure to the said Principalities the privilege of a distinct administration and certain other local immunities, have recognized that in consequence of the commotions by which those Provinces, and more particularly Wallachia, have been agitated, it becomes necessary to adopt by common agreement extraordinary and effectual measures for the protection of those immunities and privileges, either against revolutionary and anarchical convulsions, or against the abuses of power which paralyzed the execution of the laws therein, and deprived the peaceable inhabitants of the benefits of the administration which the 2 Principalities ought to enjoy in virtue of the solemn Treaties concluded between Russia and the Sublime Porte.

For this purpose we, the Undersigned, by order and by the express authorization of His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and his

Highness Reschid Pasha, Grand Vizier, and his Excellency Aali Pasha, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, by order and by the express authorization of His Majesty the Sultan, after having duly communicated and concerted together, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:

ART. I. Considering the exceptional circumstances brought on by the recent events, the 2 Imperial Courts have agreed, that instead of following the mode established by the regulation of 1831 for the election of the Hospodars of Moldavia and Wallachia, those high functionaries shall be nominated by His Majesty the Sultan, according to a mode especially agreed upon for this occasion between the 2 Courts, with the view of confiding the administration of those Provinces to the candidates most worthy, and enjoying the best reputation among their fellow-countrymen. For this occasion likewise, the 2 Hospodars shall only be nominated for 7 years, the 2 Courts reserving to themselves, a year before the expiration of the term fixed for the present agreement, to take into consideration the internal state of the Principalities, and the services which may have been rendered by the 2 Hospodars, in order, by mutual agreement, to consider of the further determinations to be taken.

II. The Organic Statute granted to the Principalities, in 1831, shall remain in force, saving the alterations and modifications of which the necessity shall have been proved by experience, specifically in regard to the ordinary and extraordinary assemblies of the Boyards. These assemblies, in the form in which they have heretofore been composed and elected, having more than once given rise to deplorable conflicts, and even to acts of open insubordination, their convocation shall continue to be suspended, and the 2 Courts reserve to themselves to come to an understanding on the subject of their re-establishment on bases settled with all requisite deliberation, at the time when they shall judge that that measure can be carried into effect without inconvenience as regards the maintenance of public tranquillity in the 2 Principalities. The deliberative functions shall be provisionally entrusted to councils or divans ad hoc, composed of the Boyards who are the most notable and the most worthy of confidence, and of some members of the higher clergy. The principal attributes of these Councils shall be the assessment of the taxes, and the examination into the yearly budget in the 2 Provinces.

III. In order to proceed with all necessary deliberation to the organic improvements required by the actual state of the Principalities and the administrative abuses which have been introduced there, 2 Commissions of Revision shall be established, one at Jassy and the other at Bucharest, composed of the Boyards most commendable from their character and abilities, to whom shall be entrusted the task of revising the existing regulations, and of pointing out the modifications best calculated to confer upon the administration of the country the regularity and unity in which they have frequently been deficient.

The work of these Commissions shall be submitted with the shortest delay possible to the examination of the Ottoman Government, which, after having come to an understanding with the Court of Russia thereupon, and having thus proved their mutual approbation, shall grant to the said modifications its definitive sanction, which shall be published in the usual manner by a hatti-sherif of His Majesty the Sultan.

IV. The troubles which have so deeply disturbed the Principalities having demonstrated the necessity of affording to their Governments the support of a military force capable of promptly repressing every insurrectional movement, and of causing the established authorities to be respected, the 2 Imperial Courts have agreed to prolong the presence of a certain portion of the Russian and Ottoman troops which at present occupy the country; and specifically, in order to preserve the frontiers of Wallachia and of Moldavia from casualties from abroad, it has been determined to leave therein, for the time, from 25,000 to 35,000 men of each of the 2 Parties. After the tranquillity of the said frontiers shall be re-established, there shall remain in the 2 countries about 10,000 men on each side, until the completion of the work of the organic improvement and the consolidation of the internal tranquillity of the 2 Provinces. Thereupon the troops of the 2 Powers shall completely evacuate the Principalities, but they shall still remain at hand to re-enter immediately, in case the occurrence of serious events in the Principalities should require that measure to be again adopted. Independently of that, provision shall be made for completing without delay the reorganization of the native militia, so that by its discipline and efficiency it may afford a sufficient guarantee for the maintenance of legal order.

V. Pending the duration of the occupation the 2 Courts shall continue to cause an Extraordinary Russian Commissioner and an Extraordinary Ottoman Commissioner to reside in the Principalities. These special agents will be commissioned to watch over the progress of affairs, and to offer in common to the Hospodars their advice and counsel whensoever they shall observe any serious abuses or any measure prejudicial to the tranquillity of the country. The said Extraordinary Commissioners shall be furnished with identic instructions agreed upon between the 2 Courts, which shall prescribe to them their duties and the degree of interference which they will have to exercise in the affairs of the Principalities. The 2 Commissioners will likewise have to agree together upon the choice of the members of the Commissions of Revision to be established in the Principalities, as has been stated in Article III. They will give an account to the respective Courts of the work of those Commissions, adding thereto their own observations.

VI. The duration of the present arrangement is fixed at 7 years, at the expiration of which the 2 Courts reserve to themselves to take into consideration the situation in which the Principalities may then be, and to determine upon the ulterior measures which they may judge most suitable and proper to insure for a long time hereafter the well-being and the tranquillity of those Provinces.

VII. It is understood that by the present instrument, occasioned by exceptional circumstances, and concluded for a limited time, none of the stipulations existing between the 2 Courts in regard to the Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia are set aside, and that all previous Treaties confirmed by the Separate Act of the Treaty of Adrianople retain their full force and effect.

The 7 preceding Articles having been agreed upon and concluded, our signature and the seal of our arms have been affixed to the present Instrument, which is delivered to the Sublime Porte, in exchange for that delivered to us by His Highness the Grand Vizier and his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs aforesaid.

M. L'AMIRAL,

Paris, le 19 Avril, 1849.

J'AI l'honneur de vous envoyer ci-joint copie de 2 dépêches que je viens d'écrire, l'une au Chargé d'Affaires de France à Vienne, l'autre à notre Ambassadeur auprès du St. Père et à notre Envoyé auprès de la Cour de Naples, pour leur faire connaître les motifs et le but de l'expédition qui va partir pour Civita Vecchia sous le commandement de M. le Général Oudinot. Je vous prie de vouloir bien en donner lecture à Lord Palmerston. Nous ne doutons pas que le Gouvernement Britannique n'apprécie comme il convient une détermination dont l'objet est tout à la fois de maintenir, autant qu'il dépendra de nous, l'équilibre politique, de garantir l'indépendance des Etats Italiens ; d'assurer aux populations Romaines un régime libéral et régulier ; et de les préserver des dangers d'une réaction aveugle, aussi bien que des fureurs de l'anarchie.

(Inclosure 1.)—M. Drouyn de Lhuys to M. de la Cour.

MONSIEUR,

Paris, le 17 Avril, 1849.

LES événements accomplis avec tant de rapidité depuis quelques semaines dans le Nord de l'Italie ; les mouvements opérés par l'armée Autrichienne à la suite de la lutte si courte contre l'armée Piémontaise ; l'intention hautement annoncée par M. le Prince de Schwarzenberg d'intervenir dans toutes les contrées de la Péninsule voisines de la Lombardie ; enfin la délibération même de la Conférence de Gaëte, qui n'a cru pouvoir se rallier à aucune des idées suggérées par nos Plénipotentiaires : toutes ces circonstances nous ont fait penser que la France, pour conserver dans le règlement des affaires de l'Italie Centrale, la part d'influence qui lui appartient légitimement et dont la conservation est essentielle au maintien de l'équilibre politique, devait prendre une attitude plus prononcée. Le Gouvernement de la République s'est résolu à envoyer à Civita Vecchia un corps de troupes commandé par M. le Général Oudinot ; notre pensée en nous décidant à cette mesure n'a été ni d'imposer aux populations Romaines un régime que leur volonté libre aurait repoussé, ni de contraindre le Pape à adopter, lorsqu'il sera rappelé à l'exercice de sa puissance, tel ou tel système de Gouvernement. Nous avons cru, nous croyons plus que jamais, que par la force des choses, par l'effet de la disposition naturelle des esprits, le régime qu'a fondé à Rome la Révolution de Novembre dernier est destinée à succomber bientôt, et que le peuple Romain se replacera sous l'autorité du Souverain Pontife, pourvu qu'on le rassure contre les dangers d'une réaction ; mais nous croyons également, et à cet égard surtout, vous le savez, notre langage n'a jamais varié, nous croyons que cette autorité ne jettera de fortes racines, ne s'affermira contre de nouveaux orages, qu'à l'aide d'institutions qui préviennent le retour des anciens abus dont Pie IX avait avec un si généreux empressement commencé la réforme.

Faciliter un rapprochement qui s'opérerait sur de telles bases, donner au Saint Père et à tous ceux qui, soit à Rome, soit à Gaëte, sont disposés à y coopérer, l'appui dont ils peuvent avoir besoin pour surmonter les obstacles suscités par des prétentions exagérées ou par des mauvaises passions, tel est le but que nous avons assigné à notre expédition.

M. le Prince de Schwarzenberg comprendra, j'en ai la conviction, qu'après avoir pris l'importante détermination que j'ai l'honneur de vous annoncer, nous n'ayons pas voulu en compromettre les chances de succès par les retards qu'aurait entraînés une communication préalable faite à la Conférence de Gaëte. La marche rapide des événements nous interdisait toute temporisation. Au surplus, nos intentions ne sont pas équivoques, et ne peuvent être suspectées. Ce que nous voulons c'est que le Saint Père en rentrant à Rome, s'y trouve placé dans une situation qui, tout à la fois satisfaisante pour lui et pour son peuple, garantisse l'Italie et l'Europe contre de nouvelles perturbations, et ne porte atteinte ni à l'équilibre politique ni à l'indépendance des Etats Italiens. Les moyens auxquels nous avons recours sont, si je ne me trompe, les plus propres à atteindre ce but. Ils doivent donc obtenir l'approbation de tous les amis de l'ordre et de la paix.

Nous ne verrons pas sans regret que l'Autriche, à qui l'occupation d'une partie considérable de la Haute Italie, et la victoire récemment remportée sur les Piémontais, assurent déjà une si grande part d'influence dans la Péninsule, crût devoir, comme elle l'a plus d'une fois indiqué, se procurer par l'occupation de Bologne, un gage nouveau qui, bien inutile pour elle au point de vue des intérêts sérieux, ne servirait qu'à inquiéter et à exciter les esprits.

Agréez, &c.

E. DROUYN DE LHUYS.

(Inclosure 2.)—M. Drouyn de Lhuys to M. d'Harcourt and M. de Rayneval.

MONSIEUR,

Paris, le 18 Avril, 1849.

LA détermination que vous annonçait une dépêche du 15 de ce mois est enfin arrêtée, et va recevoir son exécution. Un vote de l'Assemblée Nationale, rendu à la suite d'une discussion solennelle, ayant ouvert au Gouvernement de la République les crédits dont il avait besoin à cet effet, un corps de troupes commandé par le Général Oudinot sera dirigé sans retard sur Civita Vecchia. La pensée du Gouvernement de la République, en se décidant à cette mesure, n'a été ni d'imposer aux populations Romaines un régime que leur volonté libre aurait repoussé, ni de contraindre le Pape à adopter, lorsqu'il sera rappelé à l'exercice de sa puissance temporelle, tel ou tel système de Gouvernement. Nous avons cru, nous croyons plus que jamais, que par la force des choses, par suite de la disposition naturelle des esprits, le régime qu'a fondé à Rome la Révolution du mois de Novembre est destiné à succomber bientôt; que le peuple Romain, pourvu qu'on le rassure contre les dangers d'une réaction, se replacera avec empressement sous l'autorité du Souverain Pontife; et que Pie IX, rentrant dans ses Etats, y rapportera la politique généreuse, éclairée, libérale, dont il s'est naguères montré animé. Faciliter un rapprochement qui s'opérerait dans un pareil esprit, donner au St. Père et à tous ceux qui, à Gaëte comme à Rome, sont disposés à co-opérer l'appui dont ils peuvent avoir besoin pour surmonter les obstacles suscités dans l'un ou l'autre sens par des influences exagérées ou de mauvaises passions, tel est le but que nous avons assigné à notre expédition. Veuillez, en annonçant, de concert avec M. de Rayneval, à M. le Cardinal Antonelli, le départ de la division commandée par M. le Général Oudinot, lui bien expliquer l'objet et la portée de la résolution que nous venons de prendre. Il comprendra que, pour se mettre en état d'en profiter, le St. Père doit se hâter de publier un manifeste, qui, en garantissant aux populations des institutions libérales et conformes à leur vœu comme aux nécessités des temps, fasse tomber toutes les résistances. Ce manifeste, paraissant au moment même où nos forces se montreraient sur les côtes des Etats de l'Eglise, serait le signal d'une conciliation qui ne laisserait en dehors qu'un bien petit nombre de mécontents. Vous ne sauriez trop insister sur l'utilité, sur la nécessité même, d'un pareil acte.

Il vous sera facile de faire comprendre aux membres de la Conférence de Gaëte que, si nous n'avons pas cru devoir attendre pour agir, le résultat des délibérations de cette Conférence, c'est parce que la marche rapide des événements ne nous le permettait pas. Ce que nous désirons c'est que le St. Père, en rentrant à Rome, se trouve placé dans une situation qui, tout à la fois satisfaisante pour lui et pour son peuple, garantisse l'Italie et l'Europe contre de nouvelles perturbations, et ne porte atteinte ni à l'équilibre politique ni à l'indépendance des Etats Italiens. Les moyens auxquels nous avons recours sont, si je ne me trompe, les plus propres à atteindre ce but. Ils doivent donc obtenir l'approbation de tous les amis de l'ordre et de la paix.

*COMMUNICATION from the Austrian to the British Government, relative to the Advance of Austrian Troops into Tuscany and the Legations.—April, 1849.

Prince Schwarzenberg to Count Colloredo.—(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Count Colloredo, May 17, 1849.)

M. LE COMTE,

Vienna, April 29, 1849.

THE Government of the Emperor has sent to Marshal Count Radetzky orders to advance troops as well into Tuscany as into the Legations.

In deciding upon this measure we have only responded to the demand which has been addressed to us to this effect on the part of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, as well as on the part of the Holy Father, the latter having at the same time applied for the armed intervention of France, Spain, and Naples.

The object of our intervention is no other than the re-establishment of the legitimate Governments and of legal order. Whenever this object shall have been attained, and, thanks to the co-operation of the same portion of the population, it will be so we hope shortly, our troops will retire.

As regards the intervention in the State of the Church, we could have wished to have been allowed to wait until the decisions of the Conference of Gaeta, while placing in relief the agreement existing between the Powers whose support the Holy Father has especially claimed, had given to their endeavours combination and uniformity.

France having decided by the expedition to Civita Vecchia, to act in advance of the decisions of the Conference, we do not the less hope, that the object at which her isolated efforts aim, will prove to be the same as that which the 4 Powers had been called upon to effect by common action.

For our part, we only wish to comply with the wishes of the Holy Father, identical with those of the civilized world, by co-operating within the limits of our means, to restore to the Chief of the Universal Church his liberty and independence, which Catholic populations cannot with indifference see destroyed to the advantage of an anarchistical party. France, if we examine it well, can have no other object; I therefore willingly believe that the measures of the 2 Powers, while they may appear to be dictated by different impulses, will not bring about any conflict between them; but, on the contrary, will lead to results equally conducive to the well-being of the people of Central Italy, and to the cause of general order.

I beg you, M. le Comte, to allow the Principal Secretary of State to read this despatch.

Accept, &c.

II. And be it enacted, that no person shall protect or harbour any apprentice or sailor who shall have deserted as aforesaid, knowing or having reason to believe such apprentice or sailor to have so deserted; and every person so offending shall, for every such apprentice or seaman so protected or harboured, forfeit and pay the sum of 10*l.*; and such penalty shall be recovered, paid, and applied, in like manner as the penalty imposed by an Act passed in the 8th year of Her Majesty [cap. 112], intituled, "An Act to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to Merchant Seamen, and for keeping a Register of Seamen," upon a person harbouring or secreting a seaman or apprentice having deserted from his ship; and the provisions of such Act applicable to such last-mentioned penalty, and to the proceedings for the recovery thereof, shall be applicable to the penalty imposed by this Act, and to the proceeding for the recovery thereof.

III. And be it enacted, that if by any law or ordinance to be hereafter made by the local Legislature of any British colony or possession abroad, provision shall be made for carrying into complete effect within such colony or possession the objects of this present Act, by the substitution of some other enactment in lieu thereof, then it shall be competent to Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, (if to Her Majesty in Council it shall seem meet, but not otherwise,) to suspend the operation within any such colony or possession of this present Act, so long as such substituted enactment shall continue in force there, and no longer.

IV. And be it enacted, that this Act shall continue in force during the continuance of the said Treaty.

And whereas it is expedient that effectual provision should be made for carrying into execution the provisions of the said several agreements: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall be lawful for the commanders and other officers of Her Majesty's ships of war, or of the East India Company, to visit and detain in any seas any vessel belonging to either of the said respective Chiefs—Shaik Sultan Bin Suggest, Chief of the Joasmee tribe ; Muktoom Bin Buttye, Shaik of Debaye ; Abdool Azeez Bin Rashid, Shaik of Eginan ; Abdullah Bin Rashid, Shaik of Amulgavine ; Saeed Bin Tahnoon, Shaik of the Beni Yas, Chief of Aboothabee ; Mahomed Bin Khuleefa Bin Subman, Chief of Bahrein, or to any of their subjects or dependents, which shall upon reasonable grounds be suspected of being engaged in the traffic in slaves, or having been fitted out for that purpose ; and to send or carry away such vessel, together with its masters, sailors, passengers, slaves, and cargo, for the purpose of such vessel being brought to adjudication as hereinafter mentioned.

II. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the High Court of Admiralty of England, and for all courts of Vice-Admiralty in any dominions of Her Majesty beyond the seas, including those courts of Vice-Admiralty within the territories under the Government of the East India Company, to take cognizance of and try any such vessel which shall be detained or captured for the violation of the said agreements, and to condemn any such vessel to Her Majesty, and adjudge as to the slaves found therein, in like manner and under such and the like rules and regulations as are contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament in force, in relation to the suppression of the Slave Trade by British-owned ships, as fully as if all the powers and provisions contained in such Acts were re-enacted in this Act as to such High Court of Admiralty or courts of Vice-Admiralty.

III. And be it enacted, that every person who shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence in any examination or deposition had or affidavit taken in any proceeding under the said engagements of this Act shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and being thereof convicted, shall be subject and liable to all the punishments, pains, and penalties to which persons convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury are liable; and every such person may be tried for any such perjury, either in the place where the offence was committed, or in any colony or settlement of Her Majesty near thereto, in which there is a court of competent jurisdiction to try any such offence, or in Her Majesty's court of Queen's Bench, in England; and that in case of any prosecution for such offence in Her Majesty's said court of Queen's Bench, the venue may be laid in the county of Middlesex.

IV. And be it enacted, that the pendency of any suit or proceeding instituted for the condemnation or restitution of any ship or cargo, or slaves, taken, seized, or detained by virtue of the said agreements, or the final adjudication, condemnation, or judgment, or determination thereupon, may be pleaded in bar, or given in evidence under the general issue, and shall be deemed in any court whatever to be a complete bar in any action, suit, or proceeding, whether instituted by any person or persons for the recovery of any such ship, vessel, or cargo, or of any damage, or for any injury sustained thereby, or by the persons on board the same, in consequence of any capture, seizure, or detention, or anything done under or in pursuance of the provisions of the said agreements.

V. And be it enacted, that any ship or vessel which shall be condemned as aforesaid, may be taken into Her Majesty's service upon payment of such sum as the Lord High Admiral, or the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, shall deem a proper price for the same, or, if not so taken, shall be broken up and demolished, and the materials thereof shall be publicly sold in separate parts, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid to such person or persons as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may appoint to receive the same.

VI. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel employed or engaged in such illicit traffic in slaves, in violation of the said agreements, shall be seized by any ship or vessel belonging to Her Majesty or the East India Company, and afterwards condemned, there shall be paid to the captors the net proceeds to which Her Majesty is entitled, the same to be distributed in the manner hereinafter directed for the distribution of bounties on slaves taken on board the said vessels.

VII. And be it enacted, that there shall be paid to the commander, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or the commander, officers, and crews of the ships of the East India Company, a bounty of 5*l.* for every man, woman, and child slave seized and found on board any ship or vessel taken and condemned in pursuance of the provisions of the said agreements and of this Act, such bounty to be issued and paid by order from the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and to be distributed to and amongst the captors aforesaid, in such manner and proportions as Her Majesty shall think fit to order by any Order in Council made, or to be made, or by any Proclamation for that purpose.

VIII. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel which shall have been seized and condemned under the provisions of the said agreements shall have been or shall be demolished, and the materials thereof publicly sold in separate parts, as well as her cargo, there shall be paid to the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or those of the East India Company, in addition to the amount of the proceeds of such sale as hereinbefore mentioned, a further bounty on the tonnage of such ship or vessel, at the rate of 30*s.* for every ton of such tonnage.

IX. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel having no slaves on board shall have been seized and condemned under the provisions of the said agreements, there shall be paid to the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or those of the East India Company, an additional bounty upon the tonnage of such ship or vessel, at the rate of 4*l.* for every ton; and the tonnage of all such vessels shall be ascertained according to the mode of ascertaining the admeasurement of British vessels, either by the principal officer of the Customs at the port where the vessel may be at the time of condemnation, or in default thereof, by the best evidence which can be obtained: Provided always, that in every case in which any ship or vessel shall be seized with slaves on board, in which the bounty calculated upon the number of slaves shall be less than the bounty calculated upon the tonnage, the commanders of Her Majesty's ships, or of those of the East India Company, making the seizure, may elect to take the bounty calculated according to tonnage, instead of the bounty which would be payable upon the number of slaves on board.

X. And be it enacted, that all bounties payable under this Act shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships and of the ships of the East India Company, and such bounties shall be issued and paid by order from the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

XI. And be it enacted, that the said bounty, as also all bounties payable under any of the Acts for the abolition or suppression of the Slave Trade, shall not hereafter be charged with Treasury fees or Exchequer fees of any description.

XII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in order to entitle the captors to receive the said bounty money, the tonnage of the ship or vessel so seized and condemned shall be proved to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, by producing a copy, duly certified, of the sentence or decree of condemnation, or by such documentary or other evidence as they may deem satisfactory.

XIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in order to entitle the captors to receive the said bounty money on slaves, the number of men, women, and children so taken, delivered over, and condemned, shall be proved to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury by producing a copy, duly certified, of the sentence or decree of condemnation, and also a certificate under the hand of the proper officer or officers, military or civil, who may be appointed to receive such slaves.

XIV. And be it enacted, that where any slaves, or persons treated as slaves, shall be seized on board any ship or vessel taken and condemned in pursuance of the said agreements, and of this Act, but who shall not have been delivered over in consequence of death, sickness, or other inevitable circumstances, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, if to their discretion it shall seem meet, to direct payment of one moiety of the bounty which would have been due in each case respectively if the said slaves had been delivered over.

XV. Provided also, and be it enacted, that any party or parties claiming any benefit by way of bounty under the provisions of this Act, or of any share of the proceeds of any vessel confiscated in pursuance of the provisions of the aforesaid agreements, may resort to the High Court of Admiralty for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the said court in that behalf, and that it shall be lawful for the Judge of the said High Court of Admiralty to determine thereon, and also to hear and determine any question of joint capture which may arise upon any seizure made in pursuance of this Act, and also to enforce any decrees or sentences of the said Vice-Admiralty Courts relating to any such seizure.

XVI. And be it enacted, that all the provisions, rules, regulations, forfeitures, and penalties respecting the delivery by Prize Agents of accounts for examination, and the distribution of prize money, and the accounting for and paying over the proceeds of prize and the percentage due thereon to Greenwich Hospital, shall be extended to all bounties and proceeds to be distributed, under the provisions of this Act, to the officers and crews of any of Her Majesty's ships and vessels of war.

XVII. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel belonging in whole or in part to the before-mentioned chiefs, or their subjects or dependents, shall have been detained and brought to adjudication by any officers of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, or of those of the East India Company, and the said ship shall be restored by sentence of the court, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, by warrant signed by any two or more of them, to direct payment to be made out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of any costs or damages which may be duly awarded: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt such officer from his liability to make good the payments so made, when lawfully called upon, either by the parties interested therein, or by order of the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

XVIII. And be it enacted, that when any seizure shall be made by any of the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or of those of the East India Company, and judgment shall be given against the seisor, or when such seizure shall be relinquished by him, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, if to their discretion it shall seem meet, by warrant signed by any two or more of them, to direct payment to be made out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of such costs and expenses as the seisor may have incurred in respect of such seizure, or any proportional part thereof.

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the fourth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George IV [cap. 91],* intituled "An Act to relieve His Majesty's subjects from all doubt concerning the validity of certain marriages solemnized abroad:" and whereas the provisions of the said Act are applicable only to the cases of marriages solemnized by a minister of the Church of England in the chapel or house of any

British Ambassador or Minister residing within the country to the Court of which he is accredited, or in the chapel belonging to any British factory abroad, or in the house of any British subject residing at such factory, and of marriages solemnized within the British lines by any chaplain or officer, or other person officiating under the orders of the commanding officer of a British army serving abroad: and whereas large numbers of Her Majesty's subjects are resident abroad at places where the provisions of the said Act are not applicable: and whereas it is expedient to afford greater facilities for the marriage of Her Majesty's subjects resident abroad: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that all marriages (both or one of the parties thereto being subjects or a subject of this realm) which, from and after the passing of this Act, shall be solemnized in the manner in this Act provided in any foreign country or place where there shall be a British Consul duly authorized to act in such foreign country or place under this Act shall be deemed and held to be as valid in the law as if the same had been solemnized within Her Majesty's dominions with a due observance of all forms required by law.

II. And be it enacted, that in every case of marriage intended to be solemnized under the provisions of this Act, one of the parties shall give notice under his or her hand, in the form of the Schedule (A) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect, to the Consul within whose district both the parties shall have dwelt, not less than 1 calendar month then next preceding, and shall state therein the name and surname, and the profession or condition of each of the said parties intending marriage, the dwelling-place of each of them, and that each of them has dwelt within such district during such 1 calendar month at the least.

III. And be it enacted, that the Consul shall file all such notices, and keep them with the archives of his Consulate, and shall also forthwith enter a true and exact copy of every such notice fairly into a register to be by him kept for that purpose, and shall likewise suspend a like true and exact copy of every such notice in some conspicuous place in the office of his Consulate during 7 successive days, if the marriage is to be solemnized by licence, or 21 successive days, if the marriage is to be solemnized without licence, before any marriage shall be solemnized in pursuance of such notice; and the said register and suspended copies shall be open at all reasonable times, without fee, to the inspection of persons desirous of inspecting the same; and upon the receipt of every such notice, and before registering and suspending the same, the Consul shall be entitled to have a fee of 10 shillings.

IV. And be it enacted, that any person authorized in that behalf as hereinafter mentioned may, at any time before the solemnization of any such intended marriage, forbid the solemnization of such intended marriage, by writing the word "forbidden" opposite to the entry of the notice of such intended marriage in the register, and by subscribing thereto his or her name and place of abode, and his or her character in relation to either of the parties by reason of which he or she is so authorized; and in case the solemnization of any such intended marriage shall be so forbidden, the notice shall be void, and such intended marriage shall not be solemnized under such notice.

V. And be it enacted, that the like consent shall be required to any marriage by licence under the provisions of this Act as is now required by law to marriages solemnized in England by licence; and every person whose consent to a marriage by licence is required by law is hereby authorized to forbid a marriage under the provisions of this Act, whether such marriage is intended to be by licence or without licence.

VI. And be it enacted, that before any marriage by licence shall be solemnized under this Act both the Parties intending marriage shall appear before the Consul, and each of them shall make oath, or shall make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration instead of an oath, that he or she believeth that there is not any impediment of kindred or alliance, or other lawful hindrance, to the said marriage, and that both of the said parties have for the space of 1 calendar month immediately preceding respectively had their usual places of abode within the district of such Consul, and where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of 21 years, that the consent of the person or persons whose consent to such marriage is required by law has been obtained thereto, or that there is no person having authority to give such consent, as the case may be; and when and as soon as such oath, affirmation, or declaration shall have been made, the Consul shall, on payment of a fee of 20 shillings, certify under his hand on the original notice, and also in the register that licence has been granted for the solemnization of the marriage in respect of which such notice was given; and such certificate shall be deemed and taken to be a licence for such marriage.

VII. And be it enacted, that any person, on payment of a fee of 20 shillings to the Consul, may enter a caveat with the Consul against the solemnization of the marriage of any person named therein, such caveat being signed by or on behalf of the person who enters the same, and stating his or her place of residence, and the ground of objection on which his or her caveat is founded; and if any caveat be entered as aforesaid no marriage of the person named therein shall be solemnized until the Consul shall have examined into the matter of the caveat, and shall be satisfied that it ought not to obstruct the solemnization of the said marriage, or until the caveat shall be withdrawn by the party who entered the same; and in cases of doubt, it shall be lawful for the Consul to transmit to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State a copy of such caveat, with such statement in relation thereto as such Consul may think fit, and such Secretary of State shall refer the same to the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, in England, for his decision; and the said Registrar-General, having decided thereon, shall transmit his decision in writing to the said Secretary of State, who shall communicate the same to the said Consul; provided always, that in case the Consul refuse to solemnize, or to allow to be solemnized in his presence, the marriage of any person requiring such marriage to be solemnized, such person shall have a right of appeal to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, who shall thereupon either confirm the refusal or direct the solemnization of the marriage.

VIII. And be it enacted, that whenever any marriage shall not be had within 3 calendar months next after notice shall have been so given to and entered by the Consul as aforesaid, or where, in the case of any such caveat as aforesaid, a statement shall have been transmitted as aforesaid, or where, on such refusal as aforesaid of the Consul, a person shall appeal as aforesaid, and the marriage shall be directed to be solemnized, then, within 3 calendar months after the receipt from the Secretary of State of the decision with respect to such caveat or on such appeal, the notice shall be void; and the marriage in respect of which such notice was given shall not be solemnized until a new notice shall have been given, and copies thereof entered in the Register, and suspended in the office of the Consulate, in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

IX. And be it enacted, that after the expiration of 7 days, if the marriage is by licence, or of 21 days if the marriage is without licence, after notice shall have been so given to and entered by the Consul as aforesaid, provided no lawful impediment be shown to the satisfaction of the Consul why the marriage should not be solemnized, and that the marriage has not been forbidden in manner herein provided, it shall be lawful for the Consul to solemnize, or allow to be solemnized by any other person in his presence, the marriage in respect of which such notice shall have been given, between and by the parties described in such notice; and every such marriage shall be solemnized at the British Consulate, with open doors, between the hours of 8 and 12 in the forenoon, in the presence of 2 or more witnesses, and may be solemnized, in the presence of the Consul, according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, or according to such other form and ceremony as the parties thereto may see fit to adopt, or may, where the parties shall so desire, be solemnized by the Consul; and in the solemnization of every such marriage not solemnized according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, in some part of the ceremony, and in the presence of the Consul and witnesses, each of the parties shall declare,

“ I do solemnly declare, that I know not of any lawful impediment why I, A.B., may not be joined in matrimony to C.D.”

And each of the parties shall say to the other,

“ I call upon these persons here present to witness, that I, A.B., do take thee, C.D., to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband].”

X. And be it enacted, that the Consul shall be entitled, for every marriage which shall be solemnized under this Act by him, or in his presence, to have from the parties married the sum of 20 shillings, if the marriage shall be by licence, and otherwise the sum of 10 shillings.

XI. And be it enacted, that the Consul shall forthwith register in duplicate every marriage solemnized as aforesaid in 2 Marriage Register Books, to be furnished to him for that purpose, from time to time by the Registrar General (through one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State), according to the form provided for the registration of marriages by an Act of the 7th year of the reign of King William IV, intituled “ An Act for registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England,” or as near to such form as the difference of the circumstances will admit of; and the entry in each such book of every such marriage shall be signed by the person by whom the marriage shall have been solemnized, if there shall be any such person other than the Consul, and by the Consul and both the parties married, and attested by 2 witnesses; and all such entries shall be made in regular order from the beginning to the end of each such book, and the number of the place of entry in each duplicate marriage book shall be the same.

XII. And be it enacted, that in the month of January in every year, every Consul shall make and transmit to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to be transmitted by him to the Registrar-General, a true copy, certified by such Consul under his hand and Consular seal, according to the form in the Schedule (B) to this Act annexed, of all the entries of marriages during the preceding year in the register book kept by him; and if there shall have been no marriage registered during such preceding year, the Consul shall certify such fact under his hand and Consular seal; and the Consul shall keep the said duplicate marriage register books safely until the same shall be filled, and one of such duplicate marriage register books, when filled, shall be transmitted to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to be transmitted by him to the Registrar-General.

XIII. And be it enacted, that after any marriage shall have been solemnized under this Act, it shall not be necessary, in support of such marriage, to give any proof of the actual dwelling for the time required by this Act of either of the parties, previous to the marriage, within the district wherein such marriage was solemnized, or of the consent of any person whose consent thereto is required by law, nor shall any evidence to prove the contrary be given in any suit touching the validity of such marriage.

XIV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Consul by whom or in whose presence any marriage is solemnized under this Act, to ask of the parties to be married the several particulars required to be registered touching such marriage.

XV. And be it enacted, that if any marriage shall be had under the provisions of this Act by means of any wilfully false notice, oath, affirmation, or declaration made by either party to such marriage, as to any matter to which a notice, oath, affirmation, or declaration is by this Act required, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General to sue for the forfeiture of all estate and interest in any property accruing to the offending party by such marriage; and the proceedings thereupon, and the consequences thereof, shall be the same as are provided by law in the like case with regard to marriages solemnized by licence in England according to the rites of the Church of England.

XVI. And be it enacted, that every person who shall knowingly and wilfully make any oath, affirmation, or declaration, or sign any false notice, required by this Act, for the purpose of procuring any marriage, and every person who shall forbid any such marriage by falsely representing himself or herself to be a person whose consent to such marriage is required by law, knowing such representation to be false, shall suffer the penalties of perjury; and such offender may be tried in any county or place in England, in the same manner, and may be dealt with in all respects as if the offence had been committed in such county or place in England.

XVII. And be it enacted, that in any and every action or suit for forfeiture, and upon any and every prosecution for perjury, as aforesaid, the declaration and certificate of the Consul, under his hand and Consular seal, shall be received and taken as good and valid evidence in the law, of all facts and matters stated in such declaration and certificate, without its being necessary for the said Consul to attend in person to prove the same.

XVIII. And be it enacted, that this Act shall be taken to be part of the said Act for registering births, deaths, and marriages in England, as fully and effectually as if incorporated therewith; and that every Consul shall be deemed a Registrar under the said Act; and that all the provisions and penalties of the said Act relating to any Registrar, or register of marriages or certified copies thereof, shall be taken to extend to every such Consul, and the registers of marriages under this Act, and to the certified copies thereof, so far as the same are applicable thereto.

XIX. And be it enacted, that every British Consul-General and Consul already appointed or hereafter to be appointed to reside in any foreign country or place, who shall be directed or authorized, by writing under the hand of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to solemnize and register marriages, and any person duly authorized to act in the absence of such Consul, or, in any foreign place where there is no British Consul resident, any Vice-Consul or Consular Agent, who shall be directed or authorized as aforesaid, by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to solemnize and register marriages in such place, shall, in the country or place in which he is so appointed to reside, or in which he is directed or authorized to solemnize and register marriages as aforesaid, be a Consul duly authorized for all the purposes of this Act; and in the construction of this Act the term "Consul" shall (save where such construction would be inconsistent with the context) be construed to mean a Consul so authorized; and the district of every such Consul, for the purposes of this Act, shall be all or such parts of the foreign country in which (or at a place within which) such Consul is appointed to reside, or is so directed or authorized as aforesaid, as such Secretary of State may, by such writing under his hand, direct, or where there shall be no direction in this behalf, shall be the district of the Consulate of such Consul.

XX. And whereas many marriages have been entered into abroad by British subjects under circumstances which may occasion doubts as to the validity of such marriages, and it is expedient that such marriages should be confirmed in the cases hereinafter mentioned: be it enacted, that all marriages, both or one of the parties being subjects or a subject of this realm, which, before the passing of this Act, have been solemnized in any foreign country or place, or on board a British vessel of war on any foreign station, by a minister in Holy Orders according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, or of Ireland, or of the United Church of England and Ireland, or by an ordained minister of the Church of Scotland; and all marriages of the like parties which have been solemnized according to any religious rites or ceremonies, or contracted per verba de presenti in any foreign country or place in the presence of any British Ambassador, Minister, Chargé d'Affaires, Consul-General, Consul, or Vice-Consul exercising his functions within the foreign country or place in which such marriages have been had, or on board a British vessel of war on any foreign station in the presence of the officer commanding such vessel; and all marriages of the like parties which have been solemnized

and Commerce of the River Gambia, so far as it relates to Foreign Trade and Foreign Vessels.—January 31, 1849.*

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 31st day of January, 1849,

PRESENT,

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS by a certain Act of Parliament, made in the session of Parliament holden in the 8th and 9th years of the reign of her present Majesty [cap. 93],* intituled "An Act to regulate the trade of the British possessions abroad," it is, amongst other things, enacted, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, by any Order or Orders in Council, to be issued from time to time, to give such directions and make such regulations touching the trade and commerce to and from any British possessions in or near the continent of Europe, or within the Mediterranean Sea, or in Africa, or within the limits of the East India Company's charter (excepting the possessions of the said Company), as to Her Majesty in Council shall appear most expedient and salutary.

And whereas Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, doth deem it expedient and salutary to make the several regulations hereinafter contained touching the trade and commerce of Her Majesty's settlements on the river Gambia and their dependencies.

I. Now, therefore, Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, and in pursuance and exercise of the power so vested in her as aforesaid, by the said recited Act of Parliament, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that the several sorts of goods enumerated or described in the table following, denominated "A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions," are hereby prohibited to be imported or brought into such settlements and their dependencies, or shall be so imported or brought only under the restrictions mentioned in such table, according as the several sorts of such goods are set forth therein ; that is to say :

A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions.

Gunpowder, arms, ammunition, or utensils of war ; prohibited to be imported, to be used therein except from the United Kingdom, or from some other British possessions ; but such articles may, nevertheless, be imported from any foreign country in any vessels which may legally trade between such foreign countries and the British possessions on the western coast of Africa for the purpose of being warehoused at the port of Bathurst for exportation only.

Articles of foreign manufacture, and any packages of such articles, bearing any names, brands, or marks purporting to be the names, brands, or marks of manufacturers resident in the United Kingdom.

Base or counterfeit coin.

Books first composed or written, or printed and published in the United Kingdom wherein the copyright shall be subsisting, and printed or reprinted in any other country, as to which the proprietor of such copyright or his agent shall have given to the Commissioners of Customs a notice in writing that such copyright subsists, such notice also stating when such copyright will expire ; prohibited to be imported.

II. And if any goods shall be imported or brought into such settlements and their dependencies, contrary to any of the prohibitions or restrictions mentioned in such table in respect of such goods, the same shall be forfeited ; and if the ship or vessel in which such goods shall be imported be of less burthen than 60 tons, such ship or vessel shall be forfeited.

III. And whereas it is expedient to extend certain of the provisions of the hereinbefore mentioned Act, of the 8th and 9th years of the reign of her present Majesty to the said settlements and their dependencies, now therefore Her Majesty with the advice of her Privy Council and in further pursuance and exercise of the powers so vested in her as aforesaid, by the said Act of Parliament, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that no goods shall be imported into, nor shall any goods be exported from the said settlements and their dependencies, by sea, from or to any place other than the United Kingdom or some other British possession, except into or from the port of Bathurst, or such other port or ports within the said settlements and their dependencies, as may be hereafter declared by Her Majesty in council to be fit for such importation and exportation ; and if any goods shall be imported into the said settlements and their dependencies, contrary hereto, such goods shall be forfeited.

navigation, may be imported into the said port of Bathurst, from any place in a British ship, and from any place, not being a British possession in a foreign ship of any country and however navigated, to be warehoused for exportation only, under the provisions of this order, or of any law in force, for the time being, made for the warehousing of goods; provided always, and it is hereby ordered that it shall be declared upon the entry of such goods that they are entered for exportation only.

V. And it is hereby further ordered, that the master of every ship arriving in any of Her Majesty's settlements on the river Gambia and their dependencies, whether laden or in ballast, shall come directly, and before bulk be broken, to the Custom House at the port of Bathurst, and there make a report, in writing, to the collector or other proper officer, of the arrival and voyage of such ship, stating her name, country, and tonnage, and, if British, the port of registry, the name and country of the master, the country of the owners, the number of the crew, and how many are of the country of such ship, and whether she be laden or in ballast, and if laden, the marks, numbers, and contents of every package and parcel of goods on board, and where the same was laden, and where and to whom consigned, and where any and what goods, if any, had been unladen during the voyage as far as any such particulars can be known to him; and the master shall further answer all such questions concerning the ship and cargo and the crew and the voyage, as shall be demanded of him by such officer; and if any goods be unladen from any ship before such report be made, or if the master fail to make such report, or make an untrue report, or do not truly answer the questions demanded of him, he shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*, and if any goods be not reported such goods shall be forfeited.

VI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no goods shall be laden, or water-borne to be laden, on board any ship, or unladen from any ship in the said settlements and their dependencies, until due entry shall have been made of such goods and warrant granted for the lading or unlading of the same, and the person entering any such goods shall deliver to the Collector of the Customs or other proper officer, a bill of the entry thereof fairly written in words at length, containing the name of the exporter or importer, and of the ship, and of the master, and of the place to or from which bound, and of the place within the port where the goods are to be laden or unladen, and the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods, and the packages containing the same, and the marks and numbers on the packages, and setting forth whether such goods be the produce of the British possessions or not, and shall also deliver at the same time one or more duplicates of such bill, in which all sums and numbers may be expressed in figures, and the particulars to be contained in such bill of entry shall be written and arranged in such form and manner, and the number of such duplicates shall be such as the collector or other principal officer shall require.

VII. And it is hereby further ordered, that the master of every ship bound from such settlements and their dependencies shall, before any goods be laden therein, deliver to the collector or comptroller, or other proper officer of customs, an entry outwards, under his hand, of the destination of such ship, stating her name, country, and tonnage, and, if British, the port of registry, the name and country of the master, the country of the owners, the number of the crew, and how many are of the country of such ship; and if any goods be laden on board any ship before such entry be made, the master of such ship shall forfeit the sum of 50*l.*; and before such ship depart, the master shall bring and deliver to the collector and comptroller, or other proper officer, a content in writing, under his hand, of the goods laden, and the names of the respective shippers and consignees of the goods, with the marks and numbers of the packages or parcels of the same, and shall make and subscribe a declaration to the truth of such content, as far as any such particulars can be known to him; and the master of every such ship, whether in ballast or laden, shall, before departure, come before the collector or comptroller, or other proper officer, and answer all such questions concerning the ship and cargo, if any, and the crew, and the voyage, as shall be demanded of him by such officer; and thereupon the collector, or other proper officer, if such ship be laden, shall make out and give to the master a certificate of the clearance of such ship for her intended voyage, containing an account of the total quantities of the several sorts of goods laden therein, or a certificate of her clearance in ballast, as the case may be; and if the ship shall depart without such clearance, or if the master shall deliver a false content, or shall not truly answer the questions demanded of him, he shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*

VIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that no entry, nor any warrant for the landing of any goods, or for the taking of any goods out of any warehouse, shall be deemed valid, unless the particulars of the goods and packages in such entry shall correspond with the particulars of the goods and packages purporting to be the same in the report of the ship, nor unless the goods shall have been properly described in such entry, by the denominations and with the characters and circumstances according to which such goods may be imported; and any such goods taken or delivered out of any ship, or out of any warehouse, by virtue of any entry or warrant not corresponding or agreeing in all respects, or not properly describing the same, shall be deemed to be goods landed or taken without due entry thereof, and shall be forfeited.

IX. And whereas it is expedient to constitute and appoint the port of Bathurst to be a free warehousing port for all such goods as may be legally imported under this order, it is therefore hereby ordered that the port of Bathurst shall be a free warehousing port for all the purposes mentioned in this order.

X. And whereas it is necessary to make regulations for the appointing proper warehouses at the Port of Bathurst, and for the lodging and securing therein of such goods as may be imported under this Order, it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the collector of customs at the said port, with the assent of the Governor by notice in writing under his hand to appoint, from time to time, such warehouses at that port as shall be approved of, for the free warehousing and securing of goods therein for the purposes of this Order, and also in such notice to declare what sorts of goods may be so warehoused, and also by like notice to revoke or alter any such appointment or declaration.

Provided always, that every such notice shall be transmitted to the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of the said settlements and their dependencies, and shall be published in such manner as he shall direct.

XI. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the importer of any such goods as aforesaid into the port of Bathurst, to warehouse the same in the warehouses so appointed, subject nevertheless to the rules, regulations, and conditions hereinafter contained.

XII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all goods so warehoused, shall be stowed in such parts or divisions of the warehouse, and in such manner as the collector shall direct, and that the warehouses shall be locked and secured in such manner, and shall be opened and visited only at such times, and in the presence of such officers, and under such rules and regulations as the collector shall direct; and that all such goods shall, after being landed upon importation, be carried to the warehouse, or shall, after being taken out of the warehouse for exportation, be carried to be shipped, under such rules and regulations as the collector shall direct.

XIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any goods which have been entered to be warehoused under the provisions of this Order shall not be duly carried into and deposited in the warehouse, or shall afterwards be taken out of the warehouse without due entry and clearance, or having been entered and cleared for exportation from the warehouse, shall not be duly carried and shipped, or shall afterwards be relanded, except with the permission of the proper officer of the customs, such goods shall be forfeited.

XIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that upon the entry and landing of any goods to be warehoused under the provisions of this Order, the proper officer of the customs shall take a particular account of the same, and shall mark the contents on each package, and shall enter the same in a book to be kept for that purpose; and no goods which have been so warehoused shall be taken or delivered from the warehouse, except upon due entry and under the care of the proper officers.

XV. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the collector, under such regulations as he shall see fit, to permit moderate samples to be taken of any goods so warehoused.

XVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the collector, under such regulations as he shall see fit, to permit the proprietor or other person having control over the goods so warehoused, to sort, separate, pack, and repack any such goods, and to make such lawful alterations therein, or arrangements and assortments thereof, as may be necessary for the preservation of such goods, or in order to the sale, shipment, or legal disposal of the same; and also to permit any parts of such goods so separated to be destroyed.

XVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all goods which have been so warehoused or re-warehoused under the provisions of this Order, shall be duly cleared for exportation, or otherwise accounted for within 2 years from the day of first entry for the warehousing thereof; and if any such goods be not so cleared or accounted for, it shall be lawful for the collector to cause the same to be sold, and the produce shall be applied, first, to the payment of warehouse rent and other charges, and the overplus (if any) shall be paid to the proprietor.

Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the collector to grant further time for any such goods to remain warehoused if he shall see fit so to do.

XVIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that upon the entry outwards of any goods to be exported from the warehouse under the provisions of this Order, the person entering the same shall give security by bond, in double the value of such goods, with 2 sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the collector, that the same shall be landed at the place for which they be entered outwards, or be otherwise accounted for to the satisfaction of the collector.

XIX. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful to reimport into the port of Bathurst any goods which shall have been legally exported therefrom to any place on the western coast of Africa, and to enter the same by bill of store, referring to the entry outwards and exportation thereof, provided the property in such goods continue in the person by whom or on whose account the same have been exported, and that such reimportation take place within 2 years from the date of the exportation.

XX. And it is hereby further ordered, that the person in whose name any goods so reimported were entered for exportation, shall deliver to the collector or other proper officer of the Customs, an exact account signed by him of the particulars of such goods, referring to the entry and clearance outwards and to the return inwards of the same, with the marks and numbers of the packages both inwards and outwards, and thereupon the said officer finding that such goods had been legally exported, shall grant a bill of store for the same; and if the person in whose name such goods were entered for exportation was not the proprietor thereof but his agent, he shall declare on such bill of store the name of the person by whom he was employed as such agent; and if the person to whom such return goods are consigned shall not be such proprietor and exporter, he shall make and subscribe a declaration on such bill of store, of the name of the person for whose use such goods have been consigned to him, and the real proprietor ascertained to be such shall make and subscribe a declaration upon such bill of store to the identity of the goods so exported and so returned, and that he was at the time of exportation and of re-importation, the proprietor of such goods, and that the same had not during such time been sold or disposed of to any other person, and such declaration shall be made before the collector or other proper officer at the port of Bathurst, and thereupon the said officer shall admit such goods to entry by bill of store.

Provided always, that where the real proprietor of any such goods shall be absent from such settlements and their dependencies at the time of such re-importation, such goods, if legally entitled to be entered by bill of store, shall be permitted to be so entered upon production of a declaration subscribed by the original consignee, or by the authorized agent of such real proprietor, setting forth the identity of the goods so exported and so returned, and that [name the real proprietor] was at the time of exportation from such settlements and their dependencies, and will be at the time of re-importation thereinto the proprietor of such goods, and that the same have not during such time been sold or disposed of to any other person, such declaration to be made before the collector or other proper officer of the Customs, and upon such further proof of the identity of the goods as the collector of Customs shall require, and upon compliance with all the other regulations required by law on the entry of goods by bill of store.

XXI. And it is hereby further ordered, that all vessels, boats, carriages, implements, and cattle, made use of in the removal of any goods liable to forfeiture under this Order, or under any Act or Order relating to the Customs, or to trade, or navigation, shall be forfeited; and every person who shall assist or be otherwise concerned in the unshipping, landing, or removal, or in the harbouring of such goods, or to whose hands or possession the same shall knowingly come, shall forfeit the treble value thereof or the penalty of 100*l.*, at the election of the officers of the Customs, and the averment in any information or libel to be exhibited for the recovery of such penalty that the officer proceeding has elected to sue for, the sum mentioned in the information or libel shall be deemed sufficient proof of such election without any other or further evidence of such fact.

XXII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all goods and all ships, vessels, and boats, and all carriages, and all cattle, liable to forfeiture under this order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or to navigation, shall and may be seized and secured by any officer of the Customs or navy, or by any person employed for that purpose, by or with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, and every person who shall in any way hinder, oppose, molest, or obstruct any officer of the Customs or navy, or any person so employed as aforesaid in the exercise of his office, or any person acting in his aid or assistance, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of 200*l.*

XXIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any officer of the Customs, or any persons duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, shall make any collusive seizure, or deliver up, or make any agreement to deliver up, or not to seize any vessel, boat, or goods liable to forfeiture under this order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, or shall take any bribe, recompence, gratuity, or reward, for the neglect or non-performance of his duty, every such officer or other person shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 500*l.*, and be rendered incapable of serving Her Majesty in any office whatever, and every person who shall give, or offer, or promise to give or procure to be given, any bribe, recompence, or reward to, or shall make any collusive agreement with, any such officer or person as aforesaid, in the said settlements and their dependencies, to induce him in any way to neglect his duty, or to do, or conceal, or connive at anything whereby the provisions of this Order or any such Order or Act may be evaded, shall forfeit the sum of 200*l.*

XXIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that all vessels, boats, goods, and other things, which shall have been, or shall hereafter be, seized as forfeited in the said settlements and their dependencies, under this Order or any Order or Act relating to the customs, or to trade or navigation, shall be deemed and taken to be condemned, and may be dealt with in the manner directed by law in respect to vessels, boats, goods, and other things seized and condemned for breach of any such Order or Act, unless the person from whom such vessel, boat, goods, and other things shall have been seized, or the owner of them, or some person authorized by him shall, within one calendar month from the day of seizing the same, give notice in writing to the person or persons seizing the same, or to the collector or other chief officer of the Customs, at the port within the said settlements and their dependencies where the same shall have been seized, that he claims the vessel, boat, goods, or other things, or intends to claim them.

XXV. And it is hereby further ordered, that under the authority of a writ of assistance granted by the superior or supreme courts of justice or court of Vice-Admiralty having jurisdiction in the said settlements and their dependencies, which court or courts are hereby authorized and required to grant such writ of assistance upon application made to them for that purpose by the principal officers of Her Majesty's Customs, it shall be lawful for any officer of the Customs, taking with him a peace officer, to enter any building or other place in the day time, and to search for and seize and secure any goods liable to forfeiture under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and, in case of necessity, to break open any doors and any chests or other packages for that purpose, and such writ of assistance, when issued, shall be deemed to be in force during the whole of the reign in which the same shall have been granted, and for 12 months from the conclusion of such reign.

XXVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that all things which shall be seized as being liable to forfeiture under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, shall be taken forthwith, and delivered into the custody of the Collector of the Customs at the port at Bathurst, and, after condemnation, he shall cause the same to be sold by public auction to the best bidder.

XXVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all penalties and forfeitures which may have been heretofore, or may be hereafter incurred under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, shall and may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, in any Court of Record or of Vice-Admiralty having jurisdiction in such settlements and their dependencies.

XXVIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any goods or any ship or vessel shall be seized as forfeited, under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and detained, it shall be lawful for the judge or judges of any Court having jurisdiction, to try and determine such seizures, to order the delivery thereof on security by bond, with 2 sufficient sureties, to be first approved of by the Collector of Customs, to answer double the value of the same in case of condemnation, and such bond shall be taken to the use of Her Majesty, in the name of the Collector or Officer of the Customs in whose custody the goods or the ship or vessel may be lodged, and such bond shall be delivered into and kept in the custody of such collector or officer; and in case the goods or the ship or vessel shall be condemned, the value thereof shall be paid into the hands of such collector or officer, who shall thereupon cancel such bond.

XXIX. And it is hereby further ordered, that no suit shall be commenced in the said settlements and their dependencies, for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, except in the name of some superior officer of the Customs, or of some officer of the navy, or of Her Majesty's Advocate or Attorney-General, for the said settlements; and if a question shall arise whether any person is an officer of the Customs, or of the navy, viva voce evidence may be given of such fact, and shall be deemed legal and sufficient evidence.

XXX. And it is hereby ordered, that if any goods shall be seized for any cause of forfeiture under this Order, and any dispute shall arise whether the same have been lawfully imported, or lawfully laden or exported, the proof thereof shall lie on the owner or claimer of such goods, and not on the officer who shall seize or stop the same.

XXXI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no claim to anything seized under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and returned into any of Her Majesty's Courts for adjudication, shall be admitted, unless such claim be entered in the name of the owner, with his residence and occupation, nor unless oath to the property in such thing be made, by the owner, or by his attorney or agent, by whom such claim shall be entered, to the best of his knowledge and belief; and every person making a false oath thereto shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable to the pains and penalties to which persons are liable for a misdemeanour.

XXXII. And it is hereby further ordered, that no person shall be admitted to enter a claim to anything seized, in pursuance of this Order, or any Act or Order relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and prosecuted in the said settlements and their dependencies, until sufficient security shall have been given in the Court where such seizure is prosecuted, in a penalty not exceeding 60*l.*, to answer and pay the costs occasioned by such claim, and in default of giving such security, such things shall be adjudged to be forfeited, and shall be condemned.

XXXIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that, if upon any trial a question shall arise whether any person is an officer of the Customs or navy, evidence of his having acted as such shall be deemed sufficient, and such person shall not be required to produce his commission or deputation, unless sufficient proof shall be given to the contrary; and every such officer and every person acting in his aid or assistance, shall be deemed a competent witness upon the trial of any suit or information on account of any seizure or penalty as aforesaid, notwithstanding such officer or other person may be entitled to the whole or any part of such seizure or penalty upon the conviction of the party charged in such suit or information.

XXXIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that no writ shall be sued out against, nor a copy of any process served upon, any officer of the Customs or navy, or other person as aforesaid, for anything done by him in pursuance of this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, or otherwise, in the exercise of his office, until one calendar month after notice in writing shall have been delivered to him, or left at his usual place of abode, by the attorney or agent of the party who intends to sue out such writ or process, in which notice shall be clear and explicitly contained the cause of action, the name and place of abode of the person who is to bring such action, and the name and place of abode of the attorney or agent; and no evidence of any cause of action shall be produced, except such as shall be stated in such notice; and in case the plaintiff shall not prove on the trial that such notice was given, the jury shall find for the defendant.

XXXV. And it is hereby further ordered, that every such action shall be brought within 3 calendar months after the accrual of the causes of action, and the defendant may plead the general issue, and under it give the special matter in evidence; and whenever, in any such action, the plaintiff shall become nonsuited, or shall discontinue the action, or if a verdict shall be found or judgment shall be given for the defendant, he shall be entitled to full costs of suit, and have such remedy for the same as any defendant can have in other cases where costs are given by law.

XXXVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that in case any information or suit shall be brought to trial, on account of any seizure made under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or to navigation, and a verdict shall be found for the claimant thereof, and the Judge or Court, before whom the cause shall have been tried, shall certify that there was probable cause of seizure, the claimant shall not be entitled to any costs of suit, nor shall the person who made such seizure be liable to any action, indictment, or other suit, or prosecution on account of such seizure; and if any action, indictment, or other suit or prosecution shall be brought to trial against any person on account of such seizure, wherein a verdict shall be given against the defendant, the plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover, nor shall the defendant be liable to any fine, damages, or thing, beyond the things seized, or the value thereof.

XXXVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for such officer or other person as aforesaid, within 1 calendar month after such notice, to tender amends to the plaintiff or his agent, and to plead such tender in bar with or without other pleas, and if the jury shall find the amends tendered sufficient, they shall find for the defendant, and he shall be entitled to full costs of suit, in the same manner as if he had pleaded the general issue only, and a verdict had been found for him thereon.

Provided always, that it shall be lawful for such defendant, by leave of the Court wherein such action shall be brought, at any time before issue joined to pay money into Court as in other actions.

XXXVIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that in any such action, if the judge or court before whom such action shall be tried, shall certify that the defendant or defendants in such action acted upon probable cause, then the plaintiff in such action shall not be entitled to more than 2*d.* damages, nor to any costs of suit.

XXXIX. And it is hereby further ordered, that all penalties and forfeitures recovered in the said settlements and their dependencies under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the customs, or to trade, or navigation, or other than colonial ordinances, shall be paid into the hands of the collector of Port Bathurst, and shall be divided, paid, and applied as follows (that is to say): after deducting the charges of prosecution from the produce thereof, one-third part of the net produce shall be paid into the hands of the Collector of Her Majesty's Customs at the port of Bathurst, for the use of Her Majesty, one-third part to the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of the said settlements and their dependencies, and the other third part to the person who shall seize, inform, and sue for the same, excepting in the case of seizures made at sea by the commanders or officers of Her Majesty's ships of war duly authorized to make seizures, one moiety of which last-mentioned seizures, and of the penalties and forfeitures recovered thereon, first deducting the charges of prosecution from the gross proceeds thereof, shall be paid as aforesaid to the Collector of Her Majesty's Customs, to and for the use of Her Majesty, and the other moiety to him or them who shall seize, inform, and sue for the same, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding, subject nevertheless to such distribution of the produce of the seizures so made at sea, as well with regard to the moiety hereinbefore granted to Her Majesty, as with regard to the other moiety given to the seizer or prosecutor, as Her Majesty shall think fit to order and direct by any Order or Orders in Council, or by any Proclamation or Proclamations to be made for that purpose.

XL. And it is hereby further ordered, that all actions or suits for the recovery of any of the penalties or forfeitures imposed by this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade, or navigation, may be commenced or prosecuted at any time within 3 years after the offence committed, by reason whereof such penalty or forfeiture shall be incurred, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

XLI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no appeal shall be prosecuted from any decree or sentence of any of Her Majesty's courts in the said settlements and their dependencies touching any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this Order or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, unless the inhibition shall be applied for and decreed within 12 months from the time when such decree or sentence was pronounced.

XLII. VI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no goods shall be laden, or water-borne to be laden, on board any ship, or unladen from any ship in the said colony, until due entry shall have been made of such goods, and warrant granted for the lading or unlading of the same, and the person entering any such goods shall deliver to the collector

XXX. And it is hereby ordered, that if any goods shall be seized for any cause of forfeiture under this Order, and any dispute shall arise whether the same have been lawfully imported, or lawfully laden or exported, the proof thereof shall lie on the owner or claimer of such goods, and not on the officer who shall seize or stop the same.

Il n'est pas néanmoins dérogé à l'exécution de l'Article IV de la Loi du 2 Août, 1829, relatif aux centimes que les Conseils Généraux sont autorisés à voter pour les opérations cadastrales, non plus qu'aux dispositions des Lois du 10 Mai, 1838, sur les attributions départementales, du 18 Juillet, 1837, sur l'Administration Communale, du 21 Mai, 1836, sur les chemins vicinaux, et du 28 Juin, 1833, sur l'instruction primaire.

La présente Loi, discutée, délibérée et adoptée par la Chambre des Pairs et par celle des Députés, et sanctionnée par nous ce jourd'hui, sera exécutée comme loi de l'Etat.

DONNONS EN MANDEMENT à nos Cours et Tribunaux, Préfets, Corps Administratifs, et tous autres, que les présentes ils gardent et maintiennent, fassent garder, observer et maintenir, et, pour les rendre plus notoires à tous, ils les fassent publier et enregistrer partout où besoin sera, et, afin que ce soit chose ferme et stable à toujours, nous y avons fait mettre notre sceau.

Fait en notre Palais de Neuilly, le 8e jour du mois d'Août, l'an 1847.

Par le Roi :

(Inclosure.)—Count Moltke to Sir Henry Wynn.

M. LE CHEVALIER,

J'AI l'honneur de vous prévenir que le 10 de ce mois ont été signé à Berlin une Convention d'Armistice entre le Danemarc et la Prusse, et les préliminaires d'une paix définitive entre le Danemarc et l'Allemagne.

Les 2 Conventions ont été ratifiées hier par Sa Majesté le Roi mon auguste maître, et les ratifications royales ont immédiatement été expédiées pour Berlin, afin d'y être échangées dans le plus bref délai possible contre celle de Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse.

* Laid before Parliament, 1849.

Je remplis un devoir, M. le Chevalier, en vous réitérant mes sincères remerciements pour la part active que vous n'avez cessé de prendre aux négociations qui ont précédé la conclusion des 2 Conventions signées en dernier lieu à Berlin.

Le Roi aime à apprécier vos efforts, et Sa Majesté m'a chargé d'avoir l'honneur de vous en exprimer ici sa haute satisfaction.

Je m'empresse de vous transmettre sous ce pli une copie confidentielle des 2 Conventions, que je vous prie de porter à la connaissance de votre Gouvernement, qui je n'en doute pas trouvera, dans les nouveaux et grands sacrifices que le Danemark a faits dans l'intérêt du rétablissement de la tranquillité du Nord, et du commerce des Puissances amies et alliées, un motif de plus pour appuyer notre juste cause et pour nous conserver un concours si nécessaire pour assurer un résultat satisfaisant aux négociations définitives de paix qui vont incessamment s'ouvrir à Londres.

Je saisis, &c.

A. MOLTKE.

No. 4.—The Earl of Westmorland to Visct. Palmerston.—(Rec. July 23.)
(Extract.) Berlin, July 19, 1849.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting the legalized copy of the Protocol containing the Preliminary Articles of Peace, and of the Armistice, as they have been signed by the Prussian and Danish Plenipotentiaries and ratified by the King of Prussia.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

WESTMORLAND.

(Inclosure 1.)—Preliminaries of Peace between Denmark and Prussia, signed at Berlin, July 10, 1849.

PROTOCOLE.

LES Soussignés, Plénipotentiaires nommés respectivement par Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark et Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, à l'effet de poser les bases d'une paix définitive destinée à aplanir le différend qui s'est élevé entre eux sur les rapports du Duché de Slesvig, sont convenus, avec le concours du Comte de Westmorland, Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Berlin, comme Représentant de la Puissance médiatrice, des Articles Préliminaires de Paix suivants :

ART. I. Le Duché de Slesvig aura une Constitution séparée pour ce qui regarde sa législature et son administration intérieure, sans être uni au Duché de Holstein, et laissant intacte l'union politique qui rattache le Duché de Slesvig à la Couronne Danoise.

II. L'organisation définitive du Duché de Slesvig résultant de cette base, fera l'objet de négociations ultérieures, auxquelles les Hautes Parties Contractantes inviteront la Grande Bretagne à prendre part en qualité de Puissance médiatrice.

III. Les Duchés de Holstein et de Lauenbourg continueront à faire partie de la Confédération Germanique.

Le règlement définitif de la position que ces duchés occuperont dans le susdit corps politique, par suite des changements qui vont s'opérer dans la constitution de l'Allemagne, est réservé à une entente ultérieure entre les Hautes Parties Contractantes.

L'un des objets de cette entente sera de maintenir autant que le comportent le principe consacré par l'Article I de la présente Convention, et la position future du Duché de Holstein vis-à-vis des autres Etats Allemands, les liens non-politiques des intérêts matériels qui ont subsisté entre les Duchés de Holstein et de Slesvig.

Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck, Duc de Holstein, accordera à ce duché dans le plus bref délai possible, une Constitution Représentative.

IV. Il est entendu que les stipulations renfermées dans les Articles précédents ne préjugeront en aucune manière la question de la succession dans les Etats réunis sous le sceptre de Sa Majesté Danoise, ni les droits éventuels de qui que ce soit.

Afin de prévenir les complications qui pourraient résulter des doutes soulevés relativement à l'ordre de succession, sa dite Majesté, aussitôt après la paix définitive, prendra l'initiative de propositions tendantes à régler cet ordre de succession d'un commun accord avec les Grandes Puissances.

V. Les Hautes Parties Contractantes conviennent de réclamer la garantie des Grandes Puissances pour la stricte exécution de la paix définitive relativement au Duché de Slesvig.

Le présent Protocole, expédié en double, sera revêtu de l'approbation de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck et de Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, et les 2 exemplaires ainsi approuvés respectivement, seront échangés à Berlin dans l'espace de 8 jours, ou plus tôt si faire se peut, à compter du jour de la signature, après quoi communication de ce Protocole sera faite de part et d'autre à Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires ont signé ce Protocole, et y ont apposé le sceau de leurs armes.

Fait à Berlin, ce 10 Juillet, l'an 1849.

LA signature des Préliminaires de la Paix entre Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck d'une part et Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse de l'autre, ayant eu lieu ce jour, leurs dites Majestés ayant vivement à cœur de mettre dès à présent un terme aux calamités de la guerre et à l'effusion du sang, et croyant en outre devoir prendre par rapport au Duché

de Slesvig, des mesures propres à y préparer les voies à une pacification définitive et durable, en conformité du principe établi par l'Article I des susdits Préliminaires, ont résolu de conclure dans ce double but, une Convention d'Armistice, et ont nommé à cet effet pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :

Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck, le Sieur Holger Christian de Reedtz, son Chambellan, Commandeur de son Ordre du Danebrog avec la Croix d'Argent du même ordre, Commandant de l'Ordre Royal de l'Etoile Polaire de Suède, de celui de la Légion d'Honneur de France, et de celui de Léopold de Belgique ;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, le Sieur Alexandre Gustave Adolphe Baron de Schleinitz, son Chambellan, son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanovre, son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg, son Altesse le Duc de Brunswick, son Altesse le Prince de la Schaumbourg-Lippe, Chevalier des Ordres Prussiens de St. Jean de Jérusalem et de l'Aigle Rouge, 3ème classe, décoré du Nichan Iftihar ;

Lesquels, avec le concours du Comte de Westmorland, Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Berlin, comme Représentant de la Puissance médiatrice, et après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté les Articles suivants :

ART. I. A dater du jour de l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention, il y aura une suspension complète des hostilités par terre et par mer pendant 6 mois, et au-delà de ce terme, jusqu'à l'expiration de 6 semaines après que l'Armistice aurait été dénoncé de part ou d'autre.

Si le présent Armistice était dédit, les troupes Prussiennes et Allemandes pourront occuper la partie continentale du Duché de Slesvig, laquelle, dans ce cas, serait évacuée par les troupes neutres qui d'après l'Article V pourraient s'y trouver encore.

II. Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse fera transmettre au Général, commandant-en-chef l'Armée Prussienne et Allemande réunie dans le Jutland et dans les Duchés de Slesvig et de Holstein, l'ordre d'évacuer le Jutland, et de prendre, dans l'espace de 25 jours, les positions indiquées dans les Articles III et V.

III. Le Général-en-Chef des troupes Danoises et celui des troupes Prussiennes et Allemandes nommeront des officiers Danois et Prussiens, lesquels, dans le but de fixer la délimitation des territoires à occuper respectivement par les troupes Prussiennes et neutres, tireront et consigneront sur une carte une ligne de démarcation à partir d'un point sur la côte près et au sud-est de la ville de Flensbourg, jusqu'à un point sur la côte et au nord-ouest de la ville de Tondern, laissant la première de ces villes, ainsi que les enclaves Jutlandaises au nord, et la ville de Tondern au sud de la dite ligne de démarcation.

IV. Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse pourra conserver, pendant la

durée de l'Armistice, dans le Duché de Slesvig et au midi de la susdite ligne de démarcation, un corps d'armée dont la force n'excédera pas 6,000 hommes. Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarque pourra continuer d'occuper militairement les Iles d'Als et d'Arroe.

V. Ces troupes Danoises et Prussiennes seront les seules forces militaires qui pourront rester dans le Duché de Slesvig pendant la durée de l'Armistice, à l'exception d'un corps de troupes neutres dont la force n'excédera pas 2,000 hommes et qui occupera la partie continentale du Duché de Slesvig située au nord de la ligne de démarcation.

L'entretien et la solde des dites troupes neutres seront à la charge de Sa Majesté Danoise.

Les Hautes Parties Contractantes inviteront Sa Majesté le Roi de Suède et de Norvège à vouloir bien fournir ce corps de troupes neutres.

Il ne sera pas mis de part ou d'autre, de garnison dans les enclaves Jutlandaises dans le Duché de Slesvig pendant la durée de l'Armistice.

VI. En même temps que les troupes, réunies sous les ordres du Général Commandant-en-Chef l'armée Prussienne et Allemande, prendront les positions désignées dans l'Article III, Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarque fera lever les blocus des ports Prussiens et Allemands établis par ses forces navales.

Les ordres relatifs à l'exécution des Articles précédents seront expédiés le même jour aux généraux et officiers commandants les armées et les forces navales respectives.

VII. Tous les bâtiments marchands qui ont été amenés de part ou d'autre, depuis le commencement des hostilités, seront rendus, ainsi que leurs cargaisons, immédiatement après la levée du blocus. Quant aux bâtiments ou aux cargaisons qui auraient été vendus, leur valeur sera restituée.

En revanche Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse s'engage à restituer et à faire restituer les contributions en argent prélevées dans le Jutland par les troupes Prussiennes et Allemandes, ainsi que la valeur des chevaux requis militairement pour l'usage de l'armée Prussienne et Allemande, sans avoir été rendue depuis à qui de droit. L'approvisionnement et le logement des dites troupes, ainsi que les fourrages qui leur ont été fournis, demeureront à la charge du pays.

Afin de régler ce remboursement, un Commissaire nommé par Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarque, et un Commissaire nommé par Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, se réuniront sur les lieux 6 semaines après l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention.

Ces Commissaires régleront cette affaire dans l'espace de 4 semaines, et si à l'expiration de ce terme il y avait encore des réclamations contestées à l'égard desquelles ils n'auraient pas pu

tomber d'accord, ces réclamations seront soumises à la décision définitive d'un arbitre que les Hautes Parties Contractantes inviteront le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique à vouloir bien désigner.

Le montant des différentes compensations sera remboursé au plus tard 6 mois à compter du jour de l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention.

VIII. Tous les prisonniers de guerre et politiques seront mis en liberté de part et d'autre sans restrictions. L'échange des prisonniers sera effectué à Flensbourg tout au plus tard 25 jours après l'échange des ratifications de la présente Convention.

IX. Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse invitera tous les Gouvernements qui ont pris une part active à la guerre actuelle contre le Danemarck, à déclarer, aussi promptement que possible, leur accession à la présente Convention, dont les stipulations deviendront par là obligatoires pour eux, en même temps qu'elles recevront leur pleine application pour ce qui les concerne.

X. Il sera établi, pour la totalité du Duché de Slesvig, une Commission Administrative (Landes-Verwaltung), qui, pendant la durée de l'armistice gouvernera ce pays au nom de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck.

Elle sera composée de 2 membres, dont l'un sera choisi par Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemarck, et l'autre par Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, aux quels sera adjoint un commissaire que Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne sera invitée à nommer pour décider, en qualité d'arbitre, en cas de diversité d'opinions entre les 2 autres membres.

Les fonctions de cette Commission seront d'administrer le Duché de Slesvig conformément aux lois en vigueur et d'y maintenir l'ordre et la tranquillité. Elle sera investie, dans ce but, de toute l'autorité nécessaire, à l'exception toutefois du pouvoir législatif, qui restera suspendu pendant la durée de l'armistice.

Quant aux lois, ordonnances, et mesures administratives quelconques émanées pour le Duché de Slesvig depuis le 17 Mars, 1848, la dite Commission aura la faculté d'examiner et de décider lesquelles de ces lois, ordonnances, et mesures administratives, il conviendra d'abroger ou de maintenir, dans l'intérêt bien entendu du pays.

XI. Les forces militaires nécessaires pour le maintien de l'ordre seront fournies à la Commission Administrative, et sur sa requisition : pour les Iles d'Als et d'Arroe, par le Général commandant les troupes Danoises ; dans la partie méridionale du Duché de Slesvig, par le Général commandant les troupes Prussiennes ; et pour la partie continentale du Duché de Slesvig située au nord de la ligne de démarcation, par le Commandant-en-Chef des troupes neutres stationnées respectivement dans ces districts.

XII. La Commission Administrative du Slesvig s'entendra avec

le Gouvernement Danois pour convenir d'un pavillon intérimaire, sous lequel les navires Slesvigois pourront naviguer pendant la durée de l'armistice, en jouissant des mêmes avantages que les bâtimens Danois.

XIII. Les postes et autres communications intérieures reprendront leur cours regulier. Le passage libre des postes par le Duché de Holstein, et le maintien de l'établissement postal à Hambourg, sont expressément réservés.

XIV. La présente Convention sera ratifiée, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Berlin dans l'espace de 8 jours, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut, à dater du jour de la signature.

La présente Convention, expédiée en double, a été dressée en langue Française, Danoise, et Allemande. Il est convenu que les doutes qui pourraient s'élever sur l'interprétation de la Convention, seront décidés d'après la teneur du texte Français.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires ont signé la présente Convention, et y ont apposé le sceau de leurs armes.

Fait à Berlin, ce 10 Juillet, l'an 1849.

ACT between Russia and Turkey, for the more effectual Protection of the Immunities and Privileges of the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia.—Signed at Balta-Liman, ^{April 10,}_{May 1,} 1849.

(Translation.)

HIS Imperial Majesty the Most High and Most Mighty Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, and His Imperial Majesty the Most High and Most Mighty Emperor and Padishah of the Ottomans, animated by an equal solicitude for the well-being of the Principalities of Moldavia and of Wallachia, and faithful to the antecedent engagements which secure to the said Principalities the privilege of a distinct administration and certain other local immunities, have recognized that in consequence of the commotions by which those Provinces, and more particularly Wallachia, have been agitated, it becomes necessary to adopt by common agreement extraordinary and effectual measures for the protection of those immunities and privileges, either against revolutionary and anarchical convulsions, or against the abuses of power which paralyzed the execution of the laws therein, and deprived the peaceable inhabitants of the benefits of the administration which the 2 Principalities ought to enjoy in virtue of the solemn Treaties concluded between Russia and the Sublime Porte.

For this purpose we, the Undersigned, by order and by the express authorization of His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and his

Highness Reschid Pasha, Grand Vizier, and his Excellency Aali Pasha, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, by order and by the express authorization of His Majesty the Sultan, after having duly communicated and concerted together, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles :

ART. I. Considering the exceptional circumstances brought on by the recent events, the 2 Imperial Courts have agreed, that instead of following the mode established by the regulation of 1831 for the election of the Hospodars of Moldavia and Wallachia, those high functionaries shall be nominated by His Majesty the Sultan, according to a mode especially agreed upon for this occasion between the 2 Courts, with the view of confiding the administration of those Provinces to the candidates most worthy, and enjoying the best reputation among their fellow-countrymen. For this occasion likewise, the 2 Hospodars shall only be nominated for 7 years, the 2 Courts reserving to themselves, a year before the expiration of the term fixed for the present agreement, to take into consideration the internal state of the Principalities, and the services which may have been rendered by the 2 Hospodars, in order, by mutual agreement, to consider of the further determinations to be taken.

II. The Organic Statute granted to the Principalities, in 1831, shall remain in force, saving the alterations and modifications of which the necessity shall have been proved by experience, specifically in regard to the ordinary and extraordinary assemblies of the Boyards. These assemblies, in the form in which they have heretofore been composed and elected, having more than once given rise to deplorable conflicts, and even to acts of open insubordination, their convocation shall continue to be suspended, and the 2 Courts reserve to themselves to come to an understanding on the subject of their re-establishment on bases settled with all requisite deliberation, at the time when they shall judge that that measure can be carried into effect without inconvenience as regards the maintenance of public tranquillity in the 2 Principalities. The deliberative functions shall be provisionally entrusted to councils or divans ad hoc, composed of the Boyards who are the most notable and the most worthy of confidence, and of some members of the higher clergy. The principal attributes of these Councils shall be the assessment of the taxes, and the examination into the yearly budget in the 2 Provinces.

III. In order to proceed with all necessary deliberation to the organic improvements required by the actual state of the Principalities and the administrative abuses which have been introduced there, 2 Commissions of Revision shall be established, one at Jassy and the other at Bucharest, composed of the Boyards most commendable from their character and abilities, to whom shall be entrusted the task of revising the existing regulations, and of pointing out the modifications best calculated to confer upon the administration of the country the regularity and unity in which they have frequently been deficient.

The work of these Commissions shall be submitted with the shortest delay possible to the examination of the Ottoman Government, which, after having come to an understanding with the Court of Russia thereupon, and having thus proved their mutual approbation, shall grant to the said modifications its definitive sanction, which shall be published in the usual manner by a hatti-sherif of His Majesty the Sultan.

IV. The troubles which have so deeply disturbed the Principalities having demonstrated the necessity of affording to their Governments the support of a military force capable of promptly repressing every insurrectional movement, and of causing the established authorities to be respected, the 2 Imperial Courts have agreed to prolong the presence of a certain portion of the Russian and Ottoman troops which at present occupy the country; and specifically, in order to preserve the frontiers of Wallachia and of Moldavia from casualties from abroad, it has been determined to leave therein, for the time, from 25,000 to 35,000 men of each of the 2 Parties. After the tranquillity of the said frontiers shall be re-established, there shall remain in the 2 countries about 10,000 men on each side, until the completion of the work of the organic improvement and the consolidation of the internal tranquillity of the 2 Provinces. Thereupon the troops of the 2 Powers shall completely evacuate the Principalities, but they shall still remain at hand to re-enter immediately, in case the occurrence of serious events in the Principalities should require that measure to be again adopted. Independently of that, provision shall be made for completing without delay the reorganization of the native militia, so that by its discipline and efficiency it may afford a sufficient guarantee for the maintenance of legal order.

V. Pending the duration of the occupation the 2 Courts shall continue to cause an Extraordinary Russian Commissioner and an Extraordinary Ottoman Commissioner to reside in the Principalities. These special agents will be commissioned to watch over the progress of affairs, and to offer in common to the Hospodars their advice and counsel whensoever they shall observe any serious abuses or any measure prejudicial to the tranquillity of the country. The said Extraordinary Commissioners shall be furnished with identic instructions agreed upon between the 2 Courts, which shall prescribe to them their duties and the degree of interference which they will have to exercise in the affairs of the Principalities. The 2 Commissioners will likewise have to agree together upon the choice of the members of the Commissions of Revision to be established in the Principalities, as has been stated in Article III. They will give an account to the respective Courts of the work of those Commissions, adding thereto their own observations.

VI. The duration of the present arrangement is fixed at 7 years, at the expiration of which the 2 Courts reserve to themselves to take into consideration the situation in which the Principalities may then be, and to determine upon the ulterior measures which they may judge most suitable and proper to insure for a long time hereafter the well-being and the tranquillity of those Provinces.

VII. It is understood that by the present instrument, occasioned by exceptional circumstances, and concluded for a limited time, none of the stipulations existing between the 2 Courts in regard to the Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia are set aside, and that all previous Treaties confirmed by the Separate Act of the Treaty of Adrianople retain their full force and effect.

The 7 preceding Articles having been agreed upon and concluded, our signature and the seal of our arms have been affixed to the present Instrument, which is delivered to the Sublime Porte, in exchange for that delivered to us by His Highness the Grand Vizier and his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs aforesaid.

*INSTRUCTIONS addressed by the Government of France to the French Agents at Vienna and at Gaeta, respecting the French Expedition to Civita Vecchia.—April, 1849.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys to Admiral Cécille.—(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Admiral Cécille, April 21.)

M. L'AMIRAL, Paris, le 19 Avril, 1849.

J'AI l'honneur de vous envoyer ci-joint copie de 2 dépêches que je viens d'écrire, l'une au Chargé d'Affaires de France à Vienne, l'autre à notre Ambassadeur auprès du St. Père et à notre Envoyé auprès de la Cour de Naples, pour leur faire connaître les motifs et le but de l'expédition qui va partir pour Civita Vecchia sous le commandement de M. le Général Oudinot. Je vous prie de vouloir bien en donner lecture à Lord Palmerston. Nous ne doutons pas que le Gouvernement Britannique n'apprécie comme il convient une détermination dont l'objet est tout à la fois de maintenir, autant qu'il dépendra de nous, l'équilibre politique, de garantir l'indépendance des Etats Italiens ; d'assurer aux populations Romaines un régime libéral et régulier ; et de les préserver des dangers d'une réaction aveugle, aussi bien que des fureurs de l'anarchie.

E. DROUYN DE LHUYS.

(Inclosure 1.)—M. Drouyn de Lhuys to M. de la Cour.

MONSIEUR,

Paris, le 17 Avril, 1849.

LES événements accomplis avec tant de rapidité depuis quelques semaines dans le Nord de l'Italie ; les mouvements opérés par l'armée Autrichienne à la suite de la lutte si courte contre l'armée Piémontaise ; l'intention hautement annoncée par M. le Prince de Schwarzenberg d'intervenir dans toutes les contrées de la Péninsule voisines de la Lombardie ; enfin la délibération même de la Conférence de Gaëte, qui n'a cru pouvoir se rallier à aucune des idées suggérées par nos Plénipotentiaires : toutes ces circonstances nous ont fait penser que la France, pour conserver dans le règlement des affaires de l'Italie Centrale, la part d'influence qui lui appartient légitimement et dont la conservation est essentielle au maintien de l'équilibre politique, devait prendre une attitude plus prononcée. Le Gouvernement de la République s'est résolu à envoyer à Civita Vecchia un corps de troupes commandé par M. le Général Oudinot ; notre pensée en nous décidant à cette mesure n'a été ni d'imposer aux populations Romaines un régime que leur volonté libre aurait repoussé, ni de contraindre le Pape à adopter, lorsqu'il sera rappelé à l'exercice de sa puissance, tel ou tel système de Gouvernement. Nous avons cru, nous croyons plus que jamais, que par la force des choses, par l'effet de la disposition naturelle des esprits, le régime qu'a fondé à Rome la Révolution de Novembre dernier est destinée à succomber bientôt, et que le peuple Romain se replacera sous l'autorité du Souverain Pontife, pourvu qu'on le rassure contre les dangers d'une réaction ; mais nous croyons également, et à cet égard surtout, vous le savez, notre langage n'a jamais varié, nous croyons que cette autorité ne jettera de fortes racines, ne s'affermira contre de nouveaux orages, qu'à l'aide d'institutions qui préviennent le retour des anciens abus dont Pie IX avait avec un si généreux empressement commencé la réforme.

Faciliter un rapprochement qui s'opérerait sur de telles bases, donner au Saint Père et à tous ceux qui, soit à Rome, soit à Gaëte, sont disposés à y coopérer, l'appui dont ils peuvent avoir besoin pour surmonter les obstacles suscités par des prétentions exagérées ou par des mauvaises passions, tel est le but que nous avons assigné à notre expédition.

M. le Prince de Schwarzenberg comprendra, j'en ai la conviction, qu'après avoir pris l'importante détermination que j'ai l'honneur de vous annoncer, nous n'ayons pas voulu en compromettre les chances de succès par les retards qu'aurait entraînés une communication préalable faite à la Conférence de Gaëte. La marche rapide des événements nous interdisait toute temporisation. Au surplus, nos intentions ne sont pas équivoques, et ne peuvent être suspectées. Ce que nous voulons c'est que le Saint Père en rentrant à Rome, s'y trouve placé dans une situation qui, tout à la fois satisfaisante pour lui et pour son peuple, garantisse l'Italie et l'Europe contre de nouvelles perturbations, et ne porte atteinte ni à l'équilibre politique ni à l'indépendance des Etats Italiens. Les moyens auxquels nous avons recours sont, si je ne me trompe, les plus propres à atteindre ce but. Ils doivent donc obtenir l'approbation de tous les amis de l'ordre et de la paix.

Nous ne verrons pas sans regret que l'Autriche, à qui l'occupation d'une partie considérable de la Haute Italie, et la victoire récemment remportée sur les Piémontais, assurent déjà une si grande part d'influence dans la Péninsule, crût devoir, comme elle l'a plus d'une fois indiqué, se procurer par l'occupation de Bologne, un gage nouveau qui, bien inutile pour elle au point de vue des intérêts sérieux, ne servirait qu'à inquiéter et à exciter les esprits.

MONSIEUR,

Paris, le 18 Avril, 1849.

LA détermination que vous annonçait une dépêche du 15 de ce mois est enfin arrêtée, et va recevoir son exécution. Un vote de l'Assemblée Nationale, rendu à la suite d'une discussion solennelle, ayant ouvert au Gouvernement de la République les crédits dont il avait besoin à cet effet, un corps de troupes commandé par le Général Oudinot sera dirigé sans retard sur Civita Vecchia. La pensée du Gouvernement de la République, en se décidant à cette mesure, n'a été ni d'imposer aux populations Romaines un régime que leur volonté libre aurait repoussé, ni de contraindre le Pape à adopter, lorsqu'il sera rappelé à l'exercice de sa puissance temporelle, tel ou tel système de Gouvernement. Nous avons cru, nous croyons plus que jamais, que par la force des choses, par suite de la disposition naturelle des esprits, le régime qu'a fondé à Rome la Révolution du mois de Novembre est destiné à succomber bientôt; que le peuple Romain, pourvu qu'on le rassure contre les dangers d'une réaction, se replacera avec empressement sous l'autorité du Souverain Pontife; et que Pie IX, rentrant dans ses Etats, y rapportera la politique généreuse, éclairée, libérale, dont il s'est naguères montré animé. Faciliter un rapprochement qui s'opérerait dans un pareil esprit, donner au St. Père et à tous ceux qui, à Gaëte comme à Rome, sont disposés à co-opérer l'appui dont ils peuvent avoir besoin pour surmonter les obstacles suscités dans l'un ou l'autre sens par des influences exagérées ou de mauvaises passions, tel est le but que nous avons assigné à notre expédition. Veuillez, en annonçant, de concert avec M. de Rayneval, à M. le Cardinal Antonelli, le départ de la division commandée par M. le Général Oudinot, lui bien expliquer l'objet et la portée de la résolution que nous venons de prendre. Il comprendra que, pour se mettre en état d'en profiter, le St. Père doit se hâter de publier un manifeste, qui, en garantissant aux populations des institutions libérales et conformes à leur vœu comme aux nécessités des temps, fasse tomber toutes les résistances. Ce manifeste, paraissant au moment même où nos forces se montreraient sur les côtes des Etats de l'Eglise, serait le signal d'une conciliation qui ne laisserait en dehors qu'un bien petit nombre de mécontents. Vous ne sauriez trop insister sur l'utilité, sur la nécessité même, d'un pareil acte.

Il vous sera facile de faire comprendre aux membres de la Conférence de Gaëte que, si nous n'avons pas cru devoir attendre pour agir, le résultat des délibérations de cette Conférence, c'est parce que la marche rapide des événements ne nous le permettait pas. Ce que nous désirons c'est que le St. Père, en rentrant à Rome, se trouve placé dans une situation qui, tout à la fois satisfaisante pour lui et pour son peuple, garantisse l'Italie et l'Europe contre de nouvelles perturbations, et ne porte atteinte ni à l'équilibre politique ni à l'indépendance des Etats Italiens. Les moyens auxquels nous avons recours sont, si je ne me trompe, les plus propres à atteindre ce but. Ils doivent donc obtenir l'approbation de tous les amis de l'ordre et de la paix.

*COMMUNICATION from the Austrian to the British Government, relative to the Advance of Austrian Troops into Tuscany and the Legations.—April, 1849.

Prince Schwarzenberg to Count Colloredo.—(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Count Colloredo, May 17, 1849.)

M. LE COMTE,

Vienna, April 29, 1849.

THE Government of the Emperor has sent to Marshal Count Radetzky orders to advance troops as well into Tuscany as into the Legations.

In deciding upon this measure we have only responded to the demand which has been addressed to us to this effect on the part of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, as well as on the part of the Holy Father, the latter having at the same time applied for the armed intervention of France, Spain, and Naples.

The object of our intervention is no other than the re-establishment of the legitimate Governments and of legal order. Whenever this object shall have been attained, and, thanks to the co-operation of the same portion of the population, it will be so we hope shortly, our troops will retire.

As regards the intervention in the State of the Church, we could have wished to have been allowed to wait until the decisions of the Conference of Gaeta, while placing in relief the agreement existing between the Powers whose support the Holy Father has especially claimed, had given to their endeavours combination and uniformity.

France having decided by the expedition to Civita Vecchia, to act in advance of the decisions of the Conference, we do not the less hope, that the object at which her isolated efforts aim, will prove to be the same as that which the 4 Powers had been called upon to effect by common action.

For our part, we only wish to comply with the wishes of the Holy Father, identical with those of the civilized world, by co-operating within the limits of our means, to restore to the Chief of the Universal Church his liberty and independence, which Catholic populations cannot with indifference see destroyed to the advantage of an anarchistical party. France, if we examine it well, can have no other object; I therefore willingly believe that the measures of the 2 Powers, while they may appear to be dictated by different impulses, will not bring about any conflict between them; but, on the contrary, will lead to results equally conducive to the well-being of the people of Central Italy, and to the cause of general order.

I beg you, M. le Comte, to allow the Principal Secretary of State to read this despatch.

Accept, &c.

III. And be it enacted, that if by any law or ordinance to be hereafter made by the local Legislature of any British colony or possession abroad, provision shall be made for carrying into complete effect within such colony or possession the objects of this present Act, by the substitution of some other enactment in lieu thereof, then it shall be competent to Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, (if to Her Majesty in Council it shall seem meet, but not otherwise,) to suspend the operation within any such colony or possession of this present Act, so long as such substituted enactment shall continue in force there, and no longer.

IV. And be it enacted, that this Act shall continue in force during the continuance of the said Treaty.

And whereas it is expedient that effectual provision should be made for carrying into execution the provisions of the said several agreements: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall be lawful for the commanders and other officers of Her Majesty's ships of war, or of the East India Company, to visit and detain in any seas any vessel belonging to either of the said respective Chiefs—Shaik Sultan Bin Suggest, Chief of the Joasmee tribe ; Muktoom Bin Buttye, Shaik of Debaye ; Abdool Azeez Bin Rashid, Shaik of Eginan ; Abdullah Bin Rashid, Shaik of Amulgavine ; Saeed Bin Tahnoon, Shaik of the Beni Yas, Chief of Aboothabee ; Mahomed Bin Khuleefa Bin Subman, Chief of Bahrein, or to any of their subjects or dependents, which shall upon reasonable grounds be suspected of being engaged in the traffic in slaves, or having been fitted out for that purpose ; and to send or carry away such vessel, together with its masters, sailors, passengers, slaves, and cargo, for the purpose of such vessel being brought to adjudication as hereinafter mentioned.

II. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the High Court of Admiralty of England, and for all courts of Vice-Admiralty in any dominions of Her Majesty beyond the seas, including those courts of Vice-Admiralty within the territories under the Government of the East India Company, to take cognizance of and try any such vessel which shall be detained or captured for the violation of the said agreements, and to condemn any such vessel to Her Majesty, and adjudge as to the slaves found therein, in like manner and under such and the like rules and regulations as are contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament in force, in relation to the suppression of the Slave Trade by British-owned ships, as fully as if all the powers and provisions contained in such Acts were re-enacted in this Act as to such High Court of Admiralty or courts of Vice-Admiralty.

III. And be it enacted, that every person who shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence in any examination or deposition had or affidavit taken in any proceeding under the said engagements of this Act shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and being thereof convicted, shall be subject and liable to all the punishments, pains, and penalties to which persons convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury are liable; and every such person may be tried for any such perjury, either in the place where the offence was committed, or in any colony or settlement of Her Majesty near thereto, in which there is a court of competent jurisdiction to try any such offence, or in Her Majesty's court of Queen's Bench, in England; and that in case of any prosecution for such offence in Her Majesty's said court of Queen's Bench, the venue may be laid in the county of Middlesex.

IV. And be it enacted, that the pendency of any suit or proceeding instituted for the condemnation or restitution of any ship or cargo, or slaves, taken, seized, or detained by virtue of the said agreements, or the final adjudication, condemnation, or judgment, or determination thereupon, may be pleaded in bar, or given in evidence under the general issue, and shall be deemed in any court whatever to be a complete bar in any action, suit, or proceeding, whether instituted by any person or persons for the recovery of any such ship, vessel, or cargo, or of any damage, or for any injury sustained thereby, or by the persons on board the same, in consequence of any capture, seizure, or detention, or anything done under or in pursuance of the provisions of the said agreements.

V. And be it enacted, that any ship or vessel which shall be condemned as aforesaid, may be taken into Her Majesty's service upon payment of such sum as the Lord High Admiral, or the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, shall deem a proper price for the same, or, if not so taken, shall be broken up and demolished, and the materials thereof shall be publicly sold in separate parts, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid to such person or persons as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may appoint to receive the same.

VI. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel employed or engaged in such illicit traffic in slaves, in violation of the said agreements, shall be seized by any ship or vessel belonging to Her Majesty or the East India Company, and afterwards condemned, there shall be paid to the captors the net proceeds to which Her Majesty is entitled, the same to be distributed in the manner hereinafter directed for the distribution of bounties on slaves taken on board the said vessels.

VII. And be it enacted, that there shall be paid to the commander, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or the commander, officers, and crews of the ships of the East India Company, a bounty of 5*l.* for every man, woman, and child slave seized and found on board any ship or vessel taken and condemned in pursuance of the provisions of the said agreements and of this Act, such bounty to be issued and paid by order from the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and to be distributed to and amongst the captors aforesaid, in such manner and proportions as Her Majesty shall think fit to order by any Order in Council made, or to be made, or by any Proclamation for that purpose.

VIII. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel which shall have been seized and condemned under the provisions of the said agreements shall have been or shall be demolished, and the materials thereof publicly sold in separate parts, as well as her cargo, there shall be paid to the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or those of the East India Company, in addition to the amount of the proceeds of such sale as hereinbefore mentioned, a further bounty on the tonnage of such ship or vessel, at the rate of 30*s.* for every ton of such tonnage.

IX. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel having no slaves on board shall have been seized and condemned under the provisions of the said agreements, there shall be paid to the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or those of the East India Company, an additional bounty upon the tonnage of such ship or vessel, at the rate of 4*l.* for every ton; and the tonnage of all such vessels shall be ascertained according to the mode of ascertaining the admeasurement of British vessels, either by the principal officer of the Customs at the port where the vessel may be at the time of condemnation, or in default thereof, by the best evidence which can be obtained: Provided always, that in every case in which any ship or vessel shall be seized with slaves on board, in which the bounty calculated upon the number of slaves shall be less than the bounty calculated upon the tonnage, the commanders of Her Majesty's ships, or of those of the East India Company, making the seizure, may elect to take the bounty calculated according to tonnage, instead of the bounty which would be payable upon the number of slaves on board.

X. And be it enacted, that all bounties payable under this Act shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships and of the ships of the East India Company, and such bounties shall be issued and paid by order from the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

XI. And be it enacted, that the said bounty, as also all bounties payable under any of the Acts for the abolition or suppression of the Slave Trade, shall not hereafter be charged with Treasury fees or Exchequer fees of any description.

XII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in order to entitle the captors to receive the said bounty money, the tonnage of the ship or vessel so seized and condemned shall be proved to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, by producing a copy, duly certified, of the sentence or decree of condemnation, or by such documentary or other evidence as they may deem satisfactory.

XIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in order to entitle the captors to receive the said bounty money on slaves, the number of men, women, and children so taken, delivered over, and condemned, shall be proved to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury by producing a copy, duly certified, of the sentence or decree of condemnation, and also a certificate under the hand of the proper officer or officers, military or civil, who may be appointed to receive such slaves.

XIV. And be it enacted, that where any slaves, or persons treated as slaves, shall be seized on board any ship or vessel taken and condemned in pursuance of the said agreements, and of this Act, but who shall not have been delivered over in consequence of death, sickness, or other inevitable circumstances, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, if to their discretion it shall seem meet, to direct payment of one moiety of the bounty which would have been due in each case respectively if the said slaves had been delivered over.

XV. Provided also, and be it enacted, that any party or parties claiming any benefit by way of bounty under the provisions of this Act, or of any share of the proceeds of any vessel confiscated in pursuance of the provisions of the aforesaid agreements, may resort to the High Court of Admiralty for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the said court in that behalf, and that it shall be lawful for the Judge of the said High Court of Admiralty to determine thereon, and also to hear and determine any question of joint capture which may arise upon any seizure made in pursuance of this Act, and also to enforce any decrees or sentences of the said Vice-Admiralty Courts relating to any such seizure.

XVI. And be it enacted, that all the provisions, rules, regulations, forfeitures, and penalties respecting the delivery by Prize Agents of accounts for examination, and the distribution of prize money, and the accounting for and paying over the proceeds of prize and the percentage due thereon to Greenwich Hospital, shall be extended to all bounties and proceeds to be distributed, under the provisions of this Act, to the officers and crews of any of Her Majesty's ships and vessels of war.

XVII. And be it enacted, that where any ship or vessel belonging in whole or in part to the before-mentioned chiefs, or their subjects or dependents, shall have been detained and brought to adjudication by any officers of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, or of those of the East India Company, and the said ship shall be restored by sentence of the court, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, by warrant signed by any two or more of them, to direct payment to be made out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of any costs or damages which may be duly awarded: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt such officer from his liability to make good the payments so made, when lawfully called upon, either by the parties interested therein, or by order of the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

XVIII. And be it enacted, that when any seizure shall be made by any of the commanders, officers, and crews of Her Majesty's ships, or of those of the East India Company, and judgment shall be given against the seizer, or when such seizure shall be relinquished by him, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, if to their discretion it shall seem meet, by warrant signed by any two or more of them, to direct payment to be made out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of such costs and expenses as the seizer may have incurred in respect of such seizure, or any proportional part thereof.

ACT of the British Parliament, "for facilitating the Marriage of British Subjects resident in Foreign Countries."

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the fourth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George IV [cap. 91],* intituled "An Act to relieve His Majesty's subjects from all doubt concerning the validity of certain marriages solemnized abroad:" and whereas the provisions of the said Act are applicable only to the cases of marriages solemnized by a minister of the Church of England in the chapel or house of any

* See Vol. X. Page 563.

British Ambassador or Minister residing within the country to the Court of which he is accredited, or in the chapel belonging to any British factory abroad, or in the house of any British subject residing at such factory, and of marriages solemnized within the British lines by any chaplain or officer, or other person officiating under the orders of the commanding officer of a British army serving abroad: and whereas large numbers of Her Majesty's subjects are resident abroad at places where the provisions of the said Act are not applicable: and whereas it is expedient to afford greater facilities for the marriage of Her Majesty's subjects resident abroad: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that all marriages (both or one of the parties thereto being subjects or a subject of this realm) which, from and after the passing of this Act, shall be solemnized in the manner in this Act provided in any foreign country or place where there shall be a British Consul duly authorized to act in such foreign country or place under this Act shall be deemed and held to be as valid in the law as if the same had been solemnized within Her Majesty's dominions with a due observance of all forms required by law.

II. And be it enacted, that in every case of marriage intended to be solemnized under the provisions of this Act, one of the parties shall give notice under his or her hand, in the form of the Schedule (A) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect, to the Consul within whose district both the parties shall have dwelt, not less than 1 calendar month then next preceding, and shall state therein the name and surname, and the profession or condition of each of the said parties intending marriage, the dwelling-place of each of them, and that each of them has dwelt within such district during such 1 calendar month at the least.

III. And be it enacted, that the Consul shall file all such notices, and keep them with the archives of his Consulate, and shall also forthwith enter a true and exact copy of every such notice fairly into a register to be by him kept for that purpose, and shall likewise suspend a like true and exact copy of every such notice in some conspicuous place in the office of his Consulate during 7 successive days, if the marriage is to be solemnized by licence, or 21 successive days, if the marriage is to be solemnized without licence, before any marriage shall be solemnized in pursuance of such notice; and the said register and suspended copies shall be open at all reasonable times, without fee, to the inspection of persons desirous of inspecting the same; and upon the receipt of every such notice, and before registering and suspending the same, the Consul shall be entitled to have a fee of 10 shillings.

IV. And be it enacted, that any person authorized in that behalf as hereinafter mentioned may, at any time before the solemnization of any such intended marriage, forbid the solemnization of such intended marriage, by writing the word "forbidden" opposite to the entry of the notice of such intended marriage in the register, and by subscribing thereto his or her name and place of abode, and his or her character in relation to either of the parties by reason of which he or she is so authorized; and in case the solemnization of any such intended marriage shall be so forbidden, the notice shall be void, and such intended marriage shall not be solemnized under such notice.

V. And be it enacted, that the like consent shall be required to any marriage by licence under the provisions of this Act as is now required by law to marriages solemnized in England by licence; and every person whose consent to a marriage by licence is required by law is hereby authorized to forbid a marriage under the provisions of this Act, whether such marriage is intended to be by licence or without licence.

VI. And be it enacted, that before any marriage by licence shall be solemnized under this Act both the Parties intending marriage shall appear before the Consul, and each of them shall make oath, or shall make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration instead of an oath, that he or she believeth that there is not any impediment of kindred or alliance, or other lawful hindrance, to the said marriage, and that both of the said parties have for the space of 1 calendar month immediately preceding respectively had their usual places of abode within the district of such Consul, and where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of 21 years, that the consent of the person or persons whose consent to such marriage is required by law has been obtained thereto, or that there is no person having authority to give such consent, as the case may be; and when and as soon as such oath, affirmation, or declaration shall have been made, the Consul shall, on payment of a fee of 20 shillings, certify under his hand on the original notice, and also in the register that licence has been granted for the solemnization of the marriage in respect of which such notice was given; and such certificate shall be deemed and taken to be a licence for such marriage.

VII. And be it enacted, that any person, on payment of a fee of 20 shillings to the Consul, may enter a caveat with the Consul against the solemnization of the marriage of any person named therein, such caveat being signed by or on behalf of the person who enters the same, and stating his or her place of residence, and the ground of objection on which his or her caveat is founded; and if any caveat be entered as aforesaid no marriage of the person named therein shall be solemnized until the Consul shall have examined into the matter of the caveat, and shall be satisfied that it ought not to obstruct the solemnization of the said marriage, or until the caveat shall be withdrawn by the party who entered the same; and in cases of doubt, it shall be lawful for the Consul to transmit to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State a copy of such caveat, with such statement in relation thereto as such Consul may think fit, and such Secretary of State shall refer the same to the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, in England, for his decision; and the said Registrar-General, having decided thereon, shall transmit his decision in writing to the said Secretary of State, who shall communicate the same to the said Consul; provided always, that in case the Consul refuse to solemnize, or to allow to be solemnized in his presence, the marriage of any person requiring such marriage to be solemnized, such person shall have a right of appeal to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, who shall thereupon either confirm the refusal or direct the solemnization of the marriage.

VIII. And be it enacted, that whenever any marriage shall not be had within 3 calendar months next after notice shall have been so given to and entered by the Consul as aforesaid, or where, in the case of any such caveat as aforesaid, a statement shall have been transmitted as aforesaid, or where, on such refusal as aforesaid of the Consul, a person shall appeal as aforesaid, and the marriage shall be directed to be solemnized, then, within 3 calendar months after the receipt from the Secretary of State of the decision with respect to such caveat or on such appeal, the notice shall be void; and the marriage in respect of which such notice was given shall not be solemnized until a new notice shall have been given, and copies thereof entered in the Register, and suspended in the office of the Consulate, in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

IX. And be it enacted, that after the expiration of 7 days, if the marriage is by licence, or of 21 days if the marriage is without licence, after notice shall have been so given to and entered by the Consul as aforesaid, provided no lawful impediment be shown to the satisfaction of the Consul why the marriage should not be solemnized, and that the marriage has not been forbidden in manner herein provided, it shall be lawful for the Consul to solemnize, or allow to be solemnized by any other person in his presence, the marriage in respect of which such notice shall have been given, between and by the parties described in such notice; and every such marriage shall be solemnized at the British Consulate, with open doors, between the hours of 8 and 12 in the forenoon, in the presence of 2 or more witnesses, and may be solemnized, in the presence of the Consul, according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, or according to such other form and ceremony as the parties thereto may see fit to adopt, or may, where the parties shall so desire, be solemnized by the Consul; and in the solemnization of every such marriage not solemnized according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, in some part of the ceremony, and in the presence of the Consul and witnesses, each of the parties shall declare,

“ I do solemnly declare, that I know not of any lawful impediment why I, A.B., may not be joined in matrimony to C.D.”

And each of the parties shall say to the other,

“ I call upon these persons here present to witness, that I, A.B., do take thee, C.D., to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband].”

X. And be it enacted, that the Consul shall be entitled, for every marriage which shall be solemnized under this Act by him, or in his presence, to have from the parties married the sum of 20 shillings, if the marriage shall be by licence, and otherwise the sum of 10 shillings.

XI. And be it enacted, that the Consul shall forthwith register in duplicate every marriage solemnized as aforesaid in 2 Marriage Register Books, to be furnished to him for that purpose, from time to time by the Registrar General (through one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State), according to the form provided for the registration of marriages by an Act of the 7th year of the reign of King William IV, intituled “ An Act for registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England,” or as near to such form as the difference of the circumstances will admit of; and the entry in each such book of every such marriage shall be signed by the person by whom the marriage shall have been solemnized, if there shall be any such person other than the Consul, and by the Consul and both the parties married, and attested by 2 witnesses; and all such entries shall be made in regular order from the beginning to the end of each such book, and the number of the place of entry in each duplicate marriage book shall be the same.

XII. And be it enacted, that in the month of January in every year, every Consul shall make and transmit to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to be transmitted by him to the Registrar-General, a true copy, certified by such Consul under his hand and Consular seal, according to the form in the Schedule (B) to this Act annexed, of all the entries of marriages during the preceding year in the register book kept by him; and if there shall have been no marriage registered during such preceding year, the Consul shall certify such fact under his hand and Consular seal; and the Consul shall keep the said duplicate marriage register books safely until the same shall be filled, and one of such duplicate marriage register books, when filled, shall be transmitted to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to be transmitted by him to the Registrar-General.

XIII. And be it enacted, that after any marriage shall have been solemnized under this Act, it shall not be necessary, in support of such marriage, to give any proof of the actual dwelling for the time required by this Act of either of the parties, previous to the marriage, within the district wherein such marriage was solemnized, or of the consent of any person whose consent thereto is required by law, nor shall any evidence to prove the contrary be given in any suit touching the validity of such marriage.

XIV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Consul by whom or in whose presence any marriage is solemnized under this Act, to ask of the parties to be married the several particulars required to be registered touching such marriage.

XV. And be it enacted, that if any marriage shall be had under the provisions of this Act by means of any wilfully false notice, oath, affirmation, or declaration made by either party to such marriage, as to any matter to which a notice, oath, affirmation, or declaration is by this Act required, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General to sue for the forfeiture of all estate and interest in any property accruing to the offending party by such marriage; and the proceedings thereupon, and the consequences thereof, shall be the same as are provided by law in the like case with regard to marriages solemnized by licence in England according to the rites of the Church of England.

XVI. And be it enacted, that every person who shall knowingly and wilfully make any oath, affirmation, or declaration, or sign any false notice, required by this Act, for the purpose of procuring any marriage, and every person who shall forbid any such marriage by falsely representing himself or herself to be a person whose consent to such marriage is required by law, knowing such representation to be false, shall suffer the penalties of perjury; and such offender may be tried in any county or place in England, in the same manner, and may be dealt with in all respects as if the offence had been committed in such county or place in England.

XVII. And be it enacted, that in any and every action or suit for forfeiture, and upon any and every prosecution for perjury, as aforesaid, the declaration and certificate of the Consul, under his hand and Consular seal, shall be received and taken as good and valid evidence in the law, of all facts and matters stated in such declaration and certificate, without its being necessary for the said Consul to attend in person to prove the same.

XVIII. And be it enacted, that this Act shall be taken to be part of the said Act for registering births, deaths, and marriages in England, as fully and effectually as if incorporated therewith; and that every Consul shall be deemed a Registrar under the said Act; and that all the provisions and penalties of the said Act relating to any Registrar, or register of marriages or certified copies thereof, shall be taken to extend to every such Consul, and the registers of marriages under this Act, and to the certified copies thereof, so far as the same are applicable thereto.

XIX. And be it enacted, that every British Consul-General and Consul already appointed or hereafter to be appointed to reside in any foreign country or place, who shall be directed or authorized, by writing under the hand of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to solemnize and register marriages, and any person duly authorized to act in the absence of such Consul, or, in any foreign place where there is no British Consul resident, any Vice-Consul or Consular Agent, who shall be directed or authorized as aforesaid, by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to solemnize and register marriages in such place, shall, in the country or place in which he is so appointed to reside, or in which he is directed or authorized to solemnize and register marriages as aforesaid, be a Consul duly authorized for all the purposes of this Act; and in the construction of this Act the term "Consul" shall (save where such construction would be inconsistent with the context) be construed to mean a Consul so authorized; and the district of every such Consul, for the purposes of this Act, shall be all or such parts of the foreign country in which (or at a place within which) such Consul is appointed to reside, or is so directed or authorized as aforesaid, as such Secretary of State may, by such writing under his hand, direct, or where there shall be no direction in this behalf, shall be the district of the Consulate of such Consul.

XX. And whereas many marriages have been entered into abroad by British subjects under circumstances which may occasion doubts as to the validity of such marriages, and it is expedient that such marriages should be confirmed in the cases hereinafter mentioned: be it enacted, that all marriages, both or one of the parties being subjects or a subject of this realm, which, before the passing of this Act, have been solemnized in any foreign country or place, or on board a British vessel of war on any foreign station, by a minister in Holy Orders according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, or of Ireland, or of the United Church of England and Ireland, or by an ordained minister of the Church of Scotland; and all marriages of the like parties which have been solemnized according to any religious rites or ceremonies, or contracted per verba de presenti in any foreign country or place in the presence of any British Ambassador, Minister, Chargé d'Affaires, Consul-General, Consul, or Vice-Consul exercising his functions within the foreign country or place in which such marriages have been had, or on board a British vessel of war on any foreign station in the presence of the officer commanding such vessel; and all marriages of the like parties which have been solemnized according to any religious rites or ceremonies, or contracted per verba de presenti in any foreign country or place, and registered by or under the authority of any British Consul-General, Consul, or Vice-Consul exercising his functions within such foreign country or place, the signatures of the parties being written in the register, shall be deemed and held to be as valid in the law, and cognizable in the like manner as if the same had been solemnized within Her Majesty's dominions with a due observance of all forms required by law: provided always, that this enactment shall not extend to render valid any marriage which before the passing of this Act has been declared invalid by any court of competent jurisdiction in any proceeding touching such marriage, or any right dependent on the validity or invalidity thereof, or any marriage where either of the parties has afterwards, during the life of the other, lawfully intermarried with any other person.

XXI. Provided always and be it enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall confirm or impair, or in anywise affect, or be construed to confirm or impair, or in anywise affect, the validity in law of any marriage solemnized beyond the seas, otherwise than as herein provided : and this Act shall not extend to the marriage of any of the Royal family.

XXII. And be it enacted, that this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed during the present Session of Parliament.

BRITISH ORDER IN COUNCIL, for regulating the Trade and Commerce of the River Gambia, so far as it relates to Foreign Trade and Foreign Vessels.—January 31, 1849.

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 31st day of January, 1849,

PRESENT,

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS by a certain Act of Parliament, made in the session of Parliament holden in the 8th and 9th years of the reign of her present Majesty [cap. 93],* intituled "An Act to regulate the trade of the British possessions abroad," it is, amongst other things, enacted, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, by any Order or Orders in Council, to be issued from time to time, to give such directions and make such regulations touching the trade and commerce to and from any British possessions in or near the continent of Europe, or within the Mediterranean Sea, or in Africa, or within the limits of the East India Company's charter
(excepting the possessions of the said Company), as to Her Majesty in Council shall appear most expedient and salutary.

And whereas Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, doth deem it expedient and salutary to make the several regulations hereinafter contained touching the trade and commerce of Her Majesty's settlements on the river Gambia and their dependencies.

I. Now, therefore, Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, and in pursuance and exercise of the power so vested in her as aforesaid, by the said recited Act of Parliament, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that the several sorts of goods enumerated or described in the table following, denominated "A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions," are hereby prohibited to be imported or brought into such settlements and their dependencies, or shall be so imported or brought only under the restrictions mentioned in such table, according as the several sorts of such goods are set forth therein; that is to say :

A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions.

Gunpowder, arms, ammunition, or utensils of war ; prohibited to be imported, to be used therein except from the United Kingdom, or from some other British possessions ; but such articles may, nevertheless, be imported from any foreign country in any vessels which may legally trade between such foreign countries and the British possessions on the western coast of Africa for the purpose of being warehoused at the port of Bathurst for exportation only.

Articles of foreign manufacture, and any packages of such articles, bearing any names, brands, or marks purporting to be the names, brands, or marks of manufacturers resident in the United Kingdom.

Base or counterfeit coin.

Books first composed or written, or printed and published in the United Kingdom wherein the copyright shall be subsisting, and printed or reprinted in any other country, as to which the proprietor of such copyright or his agent shall have given to the Commissioners of Customs a notice in writing that such copyright subsists, such notice also stating when such copyright will expire ; prohibited to be imported.

II. And if any goods shall be imported or brought into such settlements and their dependencies, contrary to any of the prohibitions or restrictions mentioned in such table in respect of such goods, the same shall be forfeited ; and if the ship or vessel in which such goods shall be imported be of less burthen than 60 tons, such ship or vessel shall be forfeited.

III. And whereas it is expedient to extend certain of the provisions of the hereinbefore mentioned Act, of the 8th and 9th years of the reign of her present Majesty to the said settlements and their dependencies, now therefore Her Majesty with the advice of her Privy Council and in further pursuance and exercise of the powers so vested in her as aforesaid, by the said Act of Parliament, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that no goods shall be imported into, nor shall any goods be exported from the said settlements and their dependencies, by sea, from or to any place other than the United Kingdom or some other British possession, except into or from the port of Bathurst, or such other port or ports within the said settlements and their dependencies, as may be hereafter declared by Her Majesty in council to be fit for such importation and exportation ; and if any goods shall be imported into the said settlements and their dependencies, contrary hereto, such goods shall be forfeited.

navigation, may be imported into the said port of Bathurst, from any place in a British ship, and from any place, not being a British possession in a foreign ship of any country and however navigated, to be warehoused for exportation only, under the provisions of this order, or of any law in force, for the time being, made for the warehousing of goods; provided always, and it is hereby ordered that it shall be declared upon the entry of such goods that they are entered for exportation only.

V. And it is hereby further ordered, that the master of every ship arriving in any of Her Majesty's settlements on the river Gambia and their dependencies, whether laden or in ballast, shall come directly, and before bulk be broken, to the Custom House at the port of Bathurst, and there make a report, in writing, to the collector or other proper officer, of the arrival and voyage of such ship, stating her name, country, and tonnage, and, if British, the port of registry, the name and country of the master, the country of the owners, the number of the crew, and how many are of the country of such ship, and whether she be laden or in ballast, and if laden, the marks, numbers, and contents of every package and parcel of goods on board, and where the same was laden, and where and to whom consigned, and where any and what goods, if any, had been unladen during the voyage as far as any such particulars can be known to him; and the master shall further answer all such questions concerning the ship and cargo and the crew and the voyage, as shall be demanded of him by such officer; and if any goods be unladen from any ship before such report be made, or if the master fail to make such report, or make an untrue report, or do not truly answer the questions demanded of him, he shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*, and if any goods be not reported such goods shall be forfeited.

VI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no goods shall be laden, or water-borne to be laden, on board any ship, or unladen from any ship in the said settlements and their dependencies, until due entry shall have been made of such goods and warrant granted for the lading or unlading of the same, and the person entering any such goods shall deliver to the Collector of the Customs or other proper officer, a bill of the entry thereof fairly written in words at length, containing the name of the exporter or importer, and of the ship, and of the master, and of the place to or from which bound, and of the place within the port where the goods are to be laden or unladen, and the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods, and the packages containing the same, and the marks and numbers on the packages, and setting forth whether such goods be the produce of the British possessions or not, and shall also deliver at the same time one or more duplicates of such bill, in which all sums and numbers may be expressed in figures, and the particulars to be contained in such bill of entry shall be written and arranged in such form and manner, and the number of such duplicates shall be such as the collector or other principal officer shall require.

VII. And it is hereby further ordered, that the master of every ship bound from such settlements and their dependencies shall, before any goods be laden therein, deliver to the collector or comptroller, or other proper officer of customs, an entry outwards, under his hand, of the destination of such ship, stating her name, country, and tonnage, and, if British, the port of registry, the name and country of the master, the country of the owners, the number of the crew, and how many are of the country of such ship; and if any goods be laden on board any ship before such entry be made, the master of such ship shall forfeit the sum of 50*l.*; and before such ship depart, the master shall bring and deliver to the collector and comptroller, or other proper officer, a content in writing, under his hand, of the goods laden, and the names of the respective shippers and consignees of the goods, with the marks and numbers of the packages or parcels of the same, and shall make and subscribe a declaration to the truth of such content, as far as any such particulars can be known to him; and the master of every such ship, whether in ballast or laden, shall, before departure, come before the collector or comptroller, or other proper officer, and answer all such questions concerning the ship and cargo, if any, and the crew, and the voyage, as shall be demanded of him by such officer; and thereupon the collector, or other proper officer, if such ship be laden, shall make out and give to the master a certificate of the clearance of such ship for her intended voyage, containing an account of the total quantities of the several sorts of goods laden therein, or a certificate of her clearance in ballast, as the case may be; and if the ship shall depart without such clearance, or if the master shall deliver a false content, or shall not truly answer the questions demanded of him, he shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*

VIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that no entry, nor any warrant for the landing of any goods, or for the taking of any goods out of any warehouse, shall be deemed valid, unless the particulars of the goods and packages in such entry shall correspond with the particulars of the goods and packages purporting to be the same in the report of the ship, nor unless the goods shall have been properly described in such entry, by the denominations and with the characters and circumstances according to which such goods may be imported; and any such goods taken or delivered out of any ship, or out of any warehouse, by virtue of any entry or warrant not corresponding or agreeing in all respects, or not properly describing the same, shall be deemed to be goods landed or taken without due entry thereof, and shall be forfeited.

IX. And whereas it is expedient to constitute and appoint the port of Bathurst to be a free warehousing port for all such goods as may be legally imported under this order, it is therefore hereby ordered that the port of Bathurst shall be a free warehousing port for all the purposes mentioned in this order.

X. And whereas it is necessary to make regulations for the appointing proper warehouses at the Port of Bathurst, and for the lodging and securing therein of such goods as may be imported under this Order, it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the collector of customs at the said port, with the assent of the Governor by notice in writing under his hand to appoint, from time to time, such warehouses at that port as shall be approved of, for the free warehousing and securing of goods therein for the purposes of this Order, and also in such notice to declare what sorts of goods may be so warehoused, and also by like notice to revoke or alter any such appointment or declaration.

Provided always, that every such notice shall be transmitted to the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of the said settlements and their dependencies, and shall be published in such manner as he shall direct.

XI. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the importer of any such goods as aforesaid into the port of Bathurst, to warehouse the same in the warehouses so appointed, subject nevertheless to the rules, regulations, and conditions hereinafter contained.

XII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all goods so warehoused, shall be stowed in such parts or divisions of the warehouse, and in such manner as the collector shall direct, and that the warehouses shall be locked and secured in such manner, and shall be opened and visited only at such times, and in the presence of such officers, and under such rules and regulations as the collector shall direct; and that all such goods shall, after being landed upon importation, be carried to the warehouse, or shall, after being taken out of the warehouse for exportation, be carried to be shipped, under such rules and regulations as the collector shall direct.

XIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any goods which have been entered to be warehoused under the provisions of this Order shall not be duly carried into and deposited in the warehouse, or shall afterwards be taken out of the warehouse without due entry and clearance, or having been entered and cleared for exportation from the warehouse, shall not be duly carried and shipped, or shall afterwards be relanded, except with the permission of the proper officer of the customs, such goods shall be forfeited.

XIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that upon the entry and landing of any goods to be warehoused under the provisions of this Order, the proper officer of the customs shall take a particular account of the same, and shall mark the contents on each package, and shall enter the same in a book to be kept for that purpose; and no goods which have been so warehoused shall be taken or delivered from the warehouse, except upon due entry and under the care of the proper officers.

XV. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the collector, under such regulations as he shall see fit, to permit moderate samples to be taken of any goods so warehoused.

XVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the collector, under such regulations as he shall see fit, to permit the proprietor or other person having control over the goods so warehoused, to sort, separate, pack, and repack any such goods, and to make such lawful alterations therein, or arrangements and assortments thereof, as may be necessary for the preservation of such goods, or in order to the sale, shipment, or legal disposal of the same; and also to permit any parts of such goods so separated to be destroyed.

XVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all goods which have been so warehoused or re-warehoused under the provisions of this Order, shall be duly cleared for exportation, or otherwise accounted for within 2 years from the day of first entry for the warehousing thereof; and if any such goods be not so cleared or accounted for, it shall be lawful for the collector to cause the same to be sold, and the produce shall be applied, first, to the payment of warehouse rent and other charges, and the overplus (if any) shall be paid to the proprietor.

Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the collector to grant further time for any such goods to remain warehoused if he shall see fit so to do.

XVIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that upon the entry outwards of any goods to be exported from the warehouse under the provisions of this Order, the person entering the same shall give security by bond, in double the value of such goods, with 2 sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the collector, that the same shall be landed at the place for which they be entered outwards, or be otherwise accounted for to the satisfaction of the collector.

XIX. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful to reimport into the port of Bathurst any goods which shall have been legally exported therefrom to any place on the western coast of Africa, and to enter the same by bill of store, referring to the entry outwards and exportation thereof, provided the property in such goods continue in the person by whom or on whose account the same have been exported, and that such reimportation take place within 2 years from the date of the exportation.

XX. And it is hereby further ordered, that the person in whose name any goods so reimported were entered for exportation, shall deliver to the collector or other proper officer of the Customs, an exact account signed by him of the particulars of such goods, referring to the entry and clearance outwards and to the return inwards of the same, with the marks and numbers of the packages both inwards and outwards, and thereupon the said officer finding that such goods had been legally exported, shall grant a bill of store for the same; and if the person in whose name such goods were entered for exportation was not the proprietor thereof but his agent, he shall declare on such bill of store the name of the person by whom he was employed as such agent; and if the person to whom such return goods are consigned shall not be such proprietor and exporter, he shall make and subscribe a declaration on such bill of store, of the name of the person for whose use such goods have been consigned to him, and the real proprietor ascertained to be such shall make and subscribe a declaration upon such bill of store to the identity of the goods so exported and so returned, and that he was at the time of exportation and of re-importation, the proprietor of such goods, and that the same had not during such time been sold or disposed of to any other person, and such declaration shall be made before the collector or other proper officer at the port of Bathurst, and thereupon the said officer shall admit such goods to entry by bill of store.

Provided always, that where the real proprietor of any such goods shall be absent from such settlements and their dependencies at the time of such re-importation, such goods, if legally entitled to be entered by bill of store, shall be permitted to be so entered upon production of a declaration subscribed by the original consignee, or by the authorized agent of such real proprietor, setting forth the identity of the goods so exported and so returned, and that [name the real proprietor] was at the time of exportation from such settlements and their dependencies, and will be at the time of re-importation thereinto the proprietor of such goods, and that the same have not during such time been sold or disposed of to any other person, such declaration to be made before the collector or other proper officer of the Customs, and upon such further proof of the identity of the goods as the collector of Customs shall require, and upon compliance with all the other regulations required by law on the entry of goods by bill of store.

XXI. And it is hereby further ordered, that all vessels, boats, carriages, implements, and cattle, made use of in the removal of any goods liable to forfeiture under this Order, or under any Act or Order relating to the Customs, or to trade, or navigation, shall be forfeited; and every person who shall assist or be otherwise concerned in the unshipping, landing, or removal, or in the harbouring of such goods, or to whose hands or possession the same shall knowingly come, shall forfeit the treble value thereof or the penalty of 100*l.*, at the election of the officers of the Customs, and the averment in any information or libel to be exhibited for the recovery of such penalty that the officer proceeding has elected to sue for, the sum mentioned in the information or libel shall be deemed sufficient proof of such election without any other or further evidence of such fact.

XXII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all goods and all ships, vessels, and boats, and all carriages, and all cattle, liable to forfeiture under this order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or to navigation, shall and may be seized and secured by any officer of the Customs or navy, or by any person employed for that purpose, by or with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, and every person who shall in any way hinder, oppose, molest, or obstruct any officer of the Customs or navy, or any person so employed as aforesaid in the exercise of his office, or any person acting in his aid or assistance, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of 200*l.*

XXIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any officer of the Customs, or any persons duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, shall make any collusive seizure, or deliver up, or make any agreement to deliver up, or not to seize any vessel, boat, or goods liable to forfeiture under this order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, or shall take any bribe, recompence, gratuity, or reward, for the neglect or non-performance of his duty, every such officer or other person shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 500*l.*, and be rendered incapable of serving Her Majesty in any office whatever, and every person who shall give, or offer, or promise to give or procure to be given, any bribe, recompence, or reward to, or shall make any collusive agreement with, any such officer or person as aforesaid, in the said settlements and their dependencies, to induce him in any way to neglect his duty, or to do, or conceal, or connive at anything whereby the provisions of this Order or any such Order or Act may be evaded, shall forfeit the sum of 200*l.*

XXIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that all vessels, boats, goods, and other things, which shall have been, or shall hereafter be, seized as forfeited in the said settlements and their dependencies, under this Order or any Order or Act relating to the customs, or to trade or navigation, shall be deemed and taken to be condemned, and may be dealt with in the manner directed by law in respect to vessels, boats, goods, and other things seized and condemned for breach of any such Order or Act, unless the person from whom such vessel, boat, goods, and other things shall have been seized, or the owner of them, or some person authorized by him shall, within one calendar month from the day of seizing the same, give notice in writing to the person or persons seizing the same, or to the collector or other chief officer of the Customs, at the port within the said settlements and their dependencies where the same shall have been seized, that he claims the vessel, boat, goods, or other things, or intends to claim them.

XXV. And it is hereby further ordered, that under the authority of a writ of assistance granted by the superior or supreme courts of justice or court of Vice-Admiralty having jurisdiction in the said settlements and their dependencies, which court or courts are hereby authorized and required to grant such writ of assistance upon application made to them for that purpose by the principal officers of Her Majesty's Customs, it shall be lawful for any officer of the Customs, taking with him a peace officer, to enter any building or other place in the day time, and to search for and seize and secure any goods liable to forfeiture under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and, in case of necessity, to break open any doors and any chests or other packages for that purpose, and such writ of assistance, when issued, shall be deemed to be in force during the whole of the reign in which the same shall have been granted, and for 12 months from the conclusion of such reign.

XXVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that all things which shall be seized as being liable to forfeiture under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, shall be taken forthwith, and delivered into the custody of the Collector of the Customs at the port at Bathurst, and, after condemnation, he shall cause the same to be sold by public auction to the best bidder.

XXVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all penalties and forfeitures which may have been heretofore, or may be hereafter incurred under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, shall and may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, in any Court of Record or of Vice-Admiralty having jurisdiction in such settlements and their dependencies.

XXVIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any goods or any ship or vessel shall be seized as forfeited, under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and detained, it shall be lawful for the judge or judges of any Court having jurisdiction, to try and determine such seizures, to order the delivery thereof on security by bond, with 2 sufficient sureties, to be first approved of by the Collector of Customs, to answer double the value of the same in case of condemnation, and such bond shall be taken to the use of Her Majesty, in the name of the Collector or Officer of the Customs in whose custody the goods or the ship or vessel may be lodged, and such bond shall be delivered into and kept in the custody of such collector or officer; and in case the goods or the ship or vessel shall be condemned, the value thereof shall be paid into the hands of such collector or officer, who shall thereupon cancel such bond.

XXIX. And it is hereby further ordered, that no suit shall be commenced in the said settlements and their dependencies, for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, except in the name of some superior officer of the Customs, or of some officer of the navy, or of Her Majesty's Advocate or Attorney-General, for the said settlements; and if a question shall arise whether any person is an officer of the Customs, or of the navy, viva voce evidence may be given of such fact, and shall be deemed legal and sufficient evidence.

XXX. And it is hereby ordered, that if any goods shall be seized for any cause of forfeiture under this Order, and any dispute shall arise whether the same have been lawfully imported, or lawfully laden or exported, the proof thereof shall lie on the owner or claimer of such goods, and not on the officer who shall seize or stop the same.

XXXI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no claim to anything seized under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and returned into any of Her Majesty's Courts for adjudication, shall be admitted, unless such claim be entered in the name of the owner, with his residence and occupation, nor unless oath to the property in such thing be made, by the owner, or by his attorney or agent, by whom such claim shall be entered, to the best of his knowledge and belief; and every person making a false oath thereto shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable to the pains and penalties to which persons are liable for a misdemeanour.

XXXII. And it is hereby further ordered, that no person shall be admitted to enter a claim to anything seized, in pursuance of this Order, or any Act or Order relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and prosecuted in the said settlements and their dependencies, until sufficient security shall have been given in the Court where such seizure is prosecuted, in a penalty not exceeding 60*l.*, to answer and pay the costs occasioned by such claim, and in default of giving such security, such things shall be adjudged to be forfeited, and shall be condemned.

XXXIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that, if upon any trial a question shall arise whether any person is an officer of the Customs or navy, evidence of his having acted as such shall be deemed sufficient, and such person shall not be required to produce his commission or deputation, unless sufficient proof shall be given to the contrary; and every such officer and every person acting in his aid or assistance, shall be deemed a competent witness upon the trial of any suit or information on account of any seizure or penalty as aforesaid, notwithstanding such officer or other person may be entitled to

XXXIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that no writ shall be sued out against, nor a copy of any process served upon, any officer of the Customs or navy, or other person as aforesaid, for anything done by him in pursuance of this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, or otherwise, in the exercise of his office, until one calendar month after notice in writing shall have been delivered to him, or left at his usual place of abode, by the attorney or agent of the party who intends to sue out such writ or process, in which notice shall be clear and explicitly contained the cause of action, the name and place of abode of the person who is to bring such action, and the name and place of abode of the attorney or agent; and no evidence of any cause of action shall be produced, except such as shall be stated in such notice; and in case the plaintiff shall not prove on the trial that such notice was given, the jury shall find for the defendant.

XXXV. And it is hereby further ordered, that every such action shall be brought within 3 calendar months after the accrual of the causes of action, and the defendant may plead the general issue, and under it give the special matter in evidence; and whenever, in any such action, the plaintiff shall become nonsuited, or shall discontinue the action, or if a verdict shall be found or judgment shall be given for the defendant, he shall be entitled to full costs of suit, and have such remedy for the same as any defendant can have in other cases where costs are given by law.

XXXVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that in case any information or suit shall be brought to trial, on account of any seizure made under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or to navigation, and a verdict shall be found for the claimant thereof, and the Judge or Court, before whom the cause shall have been tried, shall certify that there was probable cause of seizure, the claimant shall not be entitled to any costs of suit, nor shall the person who made such seizure be liable to any action, indictment, or other suit, or prosecution on account of such seizure; and if any action, indictment, or other suit or prosecution shall be brought to trial against any person on account of such seizure, wherein a verdict shall be given against the defendant, the plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover, nor shall the defendant be liable to any fine, damages, or thing, beyond the things seized, or the value thereof.

XXXVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for such officer or other person as aforesaid, within 1 calendar month after such notice, to tender amends to the plaintiff or his agent, and to plead such tender in bar with or without other pleas, and if the jury shall find the amends tendered sufficient, they shall find for the defendant, and he shall be entitled to full costs of suit, in the same manner as if he had pleaded the general issue only, and a verdict had been found for him thereon.

Provided always, that it shall be lawful for such defendant, by leave of the Court wherein such action shall be brought, at any time before issue joined to pay money into Court as in other actions.

XXXVIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that in any such action, if the judge or court before whom such action shall be tried, shall certify that the defendant or defendants in such action acted upon probable cause, then the plaintiff in such action shall not be entitled to more than 2*d.* damages, nor to any costs of suit.

XXXIX. And it is hereby further ordered, that all penalties and forfeitures recovered in the said settlements and their dependencies under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the customs, or to trade, or navigation, or other than colonial ordinances, shall be paid into the hands of the collector of Port Bathurst, and shall be divided, paid, and applied as follows (that is to say): after deducting the charges of prosecution from the produce thereof, one-third part of the net produce shall be paid into the hands of the Collector of Her Majesty's Customs at the port of Bathurst, for the use of Her Majesty, one-third part to the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of the said settlements and their dependencies, and the other third part to the person who shall seize, inform, and sue for the same, excepting in the case of seizures made at sea by the commanders or officers of Her Majesty's ships of war duly authorized to make seizures, one moiety of which last-mentioned seizures, and of the penalties and forfeitures recovered thereon, first deducting the charges of prosecution from the gross proceeds thereof, shall be paid as aforesaid to the Collector of Her Majesty's Customs, to and for the use of Her Majesty, and the other moiety to him or them who shall seize, inform, and sue for the same, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding, subject nevertheless to such distribution of the produce of the seizures so made at sea, as well with regard to the moiety hereinbefore granted to Her Majesty, as with regard to the other moiety given to the seizer or prosecutor, as Her Majesty shall think fit to order and direct by any Order or Orders in Council, or by any Proclamation or Proclamations to be made for that purpose.

XL. And it is hereby further ordered, that all actions or suits for the recovery of any of the penalties or forfeitures imposed by this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade, or navigation, may be commenced or prosecuted at any time within 3 years after the offence committed, by reason whereof such penalty or forfeiture shall be incurred, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

XLI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no appeal shall be prosecuted from any decree or sentence of any of Her Majesty's courts in the said settlements and their dependencies touching any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this Order or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, unless the inhibition shall be applied for and decreed within 12 months from the time when such decree or sentence was pronounced.

XLII. And it is hereby ordered, that all persons authorized to make seizures under an Act passed in the 5th year of the reign of His Majesty King George IV, intituled "An Act to amend and consolidate the laws relating to the abolition of the Slave Trade," shall, in making and prosecuting any such seizures, have the benefit of all the provisions granted to persons authorized to make seizures under this Order. Provided nevertheless, that all penalties and forfeitures created by the said Act passed in the 5th year of His Majesty King George IV, whether pecuniary or specific, shall (except in cases specially provided for by the said Act) go and belong to such persons as are authorized by that Act to make seizures, in such shares, and shall and may be sued for and prosecuted, tried, recovered, distributed, and applied in such and the like manner, and by the same ways and means, and subject to the same rules and directions, as any penalties and forfeitures incurred in Great Britain and in the British possessions in America respectively, now go and belong to and may be sued for, prosecuted, tried, recovered, and distributed respectively in Great Britain, or in the said settlements and their dependencies, under and by virtue of this Order.

XLIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall not be lawful for any person to re-export from the said settlements and their dependencies, to any foreign place, in any foreign ship, any coals, the produce of the United Kingdom, except upon payment of the duty to which such coals would be liable upon exportation from the United Kingdom to such foreign place, and that no coals shall be so shipped at any port or place in the said settlements and their dependencies to be exported to any British place, until the exporter, or the master of the exporting vessel, shall have given bond, with one sufficient surety in double the value of the coals, that such coals shall not be landed in any foreign port.

XLIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that no import or other duty of Customs whatever shall be charged or payable in the said settlements or their dependencies upon provisions or stores of any description, imported or supplied on account of Her Majesty's Government and at the public expense, for the use of Her Majesty's land or sea forces.

XLV. And it is hereby further ordered, that all laws, bye-laws, usages, or customs, at this time or which hereafter shall be in force or practice, or endeavoured or pretended to be in force or practice, in the said settlements and their dependencies, which are in anywise repugnant to this Order, or to any Act of Parliament made or hereafter to be made in the United Kingdom, so far as such Act shall relate to the said settlements and their dependencies, are and shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

XLVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any person shall, in the said settlements and their dependencies, counterfeit or falsify, or wilfully use when counterfeited or falsified, any entry, warrant, cocket, transire, or other document for the unlading, lading, entering, reporting, or clearing any ship or vessel, or for the landing, shipping, or removing of any goods, stores, baggage, or article whatever, or shall by any false statement procure any writing or document to be made for any such purposes, or shall falsely make any oath or affirmation required by this Order, or shall forge or counterfeit a certificate of the said oath or affirmation, or shall publish such certificate, knowing the same to be so forged or counterfeited, every person so offending shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of 200*l.*, and such penalty shall and may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, in like manner, and by such ways and means, as any penalty may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, under the provisions and directions of this Order.

XLVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that the Governor, or officer for the time being, administering the governments of the said settlements and their dependencies, shall promulgate this present Order within 1 calendar month next after the receipt thereof by him, and this Order shall take effect from and after the date of such promulgation thereof as aforesaid, and not before.

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 13th day of February, 1849,

PRESENT,

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS, by a certain Act of Parliament, made in the session of Parliament holden in the 8th and 9th years of the reign of Her present Majesty [cap. 93],* intituled "An Act to regulate the trade of the British possessions abroad," it is, amongst other things, enacted, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, by an Order or Orders in Council to be issued from time to time, to give such directions and make such regulations touching the trade and commerce to and from any British possession on or near the continent of Europe, or within the Mediterranean Sea, or in Africa, or within the limits of the East India Company's charter

* Vol. XXXIII. Page 1126.

(excepting the possessions of the said Company), as to Her Majesty in Council shall appear most expedient and salutary.

And whereas Her Majesty, with the advice of Her Privy Council, doth deem it expedient and salutary to make the several regulations hereinafter contained, touching the trade and commerce of Her Majesty's colony of Sierra Leone.

I. Now, therefore, Her Majesty, with the advice of Her Privy Council, and in pursuance and exercise of the power so vested in her as aforesaid, by the said recited Act of Parliament, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that the several sorts of goods enumerated or described in the table following, denominated "A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions," are hereby prohibited to be imported or brought into the said colony, or shall be so imported or brought only under the restrictions mentioned in such table, according as the several sorts of such goods are set forth therein; that is to say:

A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions.

Gunpowder, arms, ammunition, or utensils of war; prohibited to be imported, to be used therein except from the United Kingdom, or from some other British possession; but such articles may, nevertheless, be imported in any vessels which may legally trade with the British possessions on the western coast of Africa for the purpose of being warehoused at the port of Free Town for exportation only.

Articles of foreign manufacture, and any packages of such articles, bearing any names, brands, or marks purporting to be the names, brands, or marks of manufacturers resident in the United Kingdom.

Base or counterfeit coin.

Books first composed, or written, or printed and published in the United Kingdom wherein the copyright shall be subsisting, and printed or reprinted in any other country, as to which the proprietor of such copyright or his agent shall have given to the Commissioners of Customs a notice in writing that such copyright subsists, such notice also stating when such copyright will expire; prohibited to be imported.

II. And if any goods shall be imported or brought into the said colony, contrary to any of the prohibitions or restrictions mentioned in such table in respect of such goods, the same shall be forfeited; and if the ship or vessel in which such goods shall be imported be of less burthen than 60 tons, such ship or vessel shall be forfeited.

III. And whereas it is expedient to extend certain of the provisions of the hereinbefore mentioned Act, of the 8th and 9th years of the reign of Her present Majesty, to the said colony, now, therefore, Her Majesty, with the advice of Her Privy Council, and in further pursuance and exercise of the powers so vested in her as aforesaid, by the said Act of Parliament, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that no goods shall be imported into, nor shall any goods be exported from the said colony, by sea from or to any place other than the United Kingdom or some other British possession, except into or from the port of Free Town, or such other port or ports within the said colony, as may be hereafter declared by Her Majesty in Council to be fit for such importation and exportation; and if any goods shall be imported into the said colony, contrary hereto, such goods shall be forfeited.

IV. And it is hereby further ordered that goods of any sort, or the produce of any place, not otherwise prohibited than by the Law of Navigation, may be imported into the said port of Free Town, in the said colony, from any place in a British ship, and from any place, not being a British possession in a foreign ship of any country and however navigated, to be warehoused for exportation only, under the provisions of this Order, or of any law in force, for the time being, made for the warehousing of goods; provided always, and it is hereby ordered, that it shall be declared upon the entry of such goods that they are entered for exportation only.

V. And it is hereby further ordered, that the master of every ship arriving at any port in the said colony or its dependencies, whether laden or in ballast, shall come directly, and before bulk be broken, to the Custom-House at the port of Free Town, and there make a report, in writing, to the Collector or other proper officer, of the arrival and voyage of such ship, stating her name, country, and tonnage, and, if British, the port of registry, the name and country of the master, the country of the owners, the number of the crew, and how many are of the country of such ship, and whether she be laden or in ballast, and if laden, the marks, numbers, and contents of every package and parcel of goods on board, and where the same was laden, and where and to whom consigned, and where any and what goods, if any, had been unladen during the voyage as far as any such particulars can be known to him; and the master shall further answer all such questions concerning the ship and cargo, and the crew and the voyage, as shall be demanded of him by such officer; and if any goods be unladen from any ship before such report be made, or if the master fail to make such report, or make an untrue report, or do not truly answer the questions demanded of him, he shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*, and if any goods be not reported, such goods shall be forfeited.

VI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no goods shall be laden, or water-borne to be laden, on board any ship, or unladen from any ship in the said colony, until due entry shall have been made of such goods, and warrant granted for the lading or unlading of the same, and the person entering any such goods shall deliver to the collector of the Customs or other proper officer, a bill of the entry thereof, fairly written in words at length, containing the name of the exporter or importer, and of the ship and of the master and of the place to or from which bound, and of the place within the port where the goods are to be laden or unladen, and the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods, and the packages containing the same, and the marks and numbers on the packages, and setting forth whether such goods be the produce of the British possessions or not, and shall also deliver at the same time one or more duplicates of such bill, in which all sums and numbers may be expressed in figures, and the particulars to be contained in such bill of entry shall be written and arranged in such form and manner, and the number of such duplicates shall be such as the Collector or other principal officer shall require.

VII. And it is hereby further ordered, that the master of every ship bound from the said colony shall, before any goods be laden therein, deliver to the Collector or Comptroller, or other proper officer of Customs, an entry outwards, under his hand, of the destination of such ship, stating her name, country, and tonnage, and, if British, the port of registry, the name and country of the master, the country of the owners, the number of the crew, and how many are of the country of such ship; and if any goods be laden on board any ship before such entry be made, the master of such ship shall forfeit the sum of £60; and before such ship depart, the master shall bring and deliver to the Collector and Comptroller, or other proper officer, a content in writing, under his hand, of the goods laden, and the names of the respective shippers and consignees of the goods, with the marks and numbers of the packages or parcels of the same, and shall make and subscribe a declaration to the truth of such content, as far as any such particulars can be known to him; and the master of every ship, bound from any such possession, whether in ballast or laden, shall, before departure, come in before the Collector or Comptroller, or other proper officer, and answer all such questions concerning the ship and the cargo, if any, and the crew, and the voyage, as shall be demanded of him by such officer: and thereupon the Collector, or other proper officer, if such ship be laden, shall make out and give to the master a certificate of the clearance of such ship for her intended voyage, containing an account of the total quantities of the several sorts of goods laden therein, or a certificate of her clearance in ballast, as the case may be; and if the ship shall depart without such clearance, or if the master shall deliver a false content, or shall not truly answer the questions demanded of him, he shall forfeit the sum of 100*l*.

VIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that no entry, nor any warrant for the landing of any goods, or for the taking of any goods out of any warehouse, shall be deemed valid, unless the particulars of the goods and packages in such entry shall correspond with the particulars of the goods and packages purporting to be the same in the report of the ship, nor unless the goods shall have been properly described in such entry, by the denominations and with the characters and circumstances according to which such goods may be imported; and any such goods taken or delivered out of any ship, or out of any warehouse, by virtue of any entry or warrant not corresponding or agreeing in all respects, or not properly describing the same, shall be deemed to be goods landed or taken without due entry thereof, and shall be forfeited.

IX. And whereas it is expedient to constitute and appoint the port of Free Town to be a free warehousing port for all such goods as may be legally imported under this Order, it is therefore hereby ordered, that the port of Free Town shall be a free warehousing port for all the purposes mentioned in this Order.

X. And whereas it is necessary to make regulations for the appointing proper warehouses at the port of Free Town, and for the lodging and securing therein of such goods as may be imported under this Order, it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the Collector of Customs at the said port, with the assent of the Governor, by notice in writing under his hand, to appoint, from time to time, such warehouses at that port as shall be approved of by him, for the free warehousing and securing of goods therein for the purposes of this Order, and also in such notice to declare what sort of goods may be so warehoused, and also, by like notice, to revoke or alter any such appointment or declaration.

Provided always, that every such notice shall be transmitted to the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of the said colony, and shall be published in such manner as he shall direct.

XI. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the importer of any such goods as aforesaid into the port of Free Town, to warehouse the same in the warehouses so appointed, subject nevertheless to the rules, regulations, and conditions hereinafter contained.

XII. And it is hereby further ordered, that all goods so warehoused shall be stowed in such parts or divisions of the warehouse, and in such manner as the Collector shall direct, and that the warehouses shall be locked and secured in such manner, and shall be opened and visited only at such times, and in the presence of such officers, and under such rules and regulations, as the Collector shall direct; and that all such goods shall, after being landed upon importation, be carried to the warehouse, or shall, after being taken out of the warehouse for exportation, be carried to be shipped, under such rules and regulations as the Collector shall direct.

XIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any goods which have been entered to be warehoused, under the provisions of this Order, shall not be duly carried into and deposited in the warehouse, or shall afterwards be taken out of the warehouse without due entry and clearance, or, having been cleared for entry and exportation from the warehouse, shall not be duly carried and shipped, or shall afterwards be relanded, except with the permission of the proper officer of the Customs, such goods shall be forfeited.

XIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that upon the entry and landing of any goods, to be warehoused under the provisions of this Order, the proper officer of the Customs shall take a particular account of the same, and shall mark the contents on each package, and shall enter the same in a book to be kept for that purpose; and no goods which have been so warehoused shall be taken or delivered from the warehouses, except upon due entry, and under the care of the proper officers.

XV. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the Collector, under such regulations as he shall see fit, to permit moderate samples to be taken of any goods so warehoused.

XVI. XXX. And it is hereby ordered, that if any goods shall be seized for any cause of forfeiture under this Order, and any dispute shall arise whether the same have been lawfully imported, or lawfully laden or exported, the proof thereof shall lie on the owner or claimer of such goods, and not on the officer who shall seize or stop the same.

And it is hereby further ordered, that no person shall be admitted to enter a claim to anything seized, in pursuance of this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and prosecuted in the said colony, until sufficient security shall have been given in the Court where such seizure is prosecuted, in a penalty not exceeding 60*l.* to answer and pay the costs occasioned by such claim, and in default of giving such security such things shall be adjudged to be forfeited, and shall be condemned.

XXXIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that, if upon any trial a question shall arise whether any person is an officer of the Customs or Navy, evidence of his having acted as such shall be deemed sufficient, and such person shall not be required to produce his commission or deputation unless sufficient proof shall be given to the contrary, and every such officer and any person acting in his aid or assistance shall be deemed a competent witness upon the trial of any suit or information on account of any seizure or penalty as aforesaid, notwithstanding such officer or other person may be entitled to the whole or any part of such seizure or penalty upon the conviction of the party charged in such suit or information.

XXXIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that no writ shall be sued out against, nor a copy of any process served upon any officer of the customs or navy, or other person as aforesaid, for anything done by him in pursuance of this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, or otherwise, in the exercise of his office, until 1 calendar month after notice in writing shall have been delivered to him, or left at his usual place of abode, by the attorney or agent of the party who intends to sue out such writ or process, in which notice shall be clearly and explicitly contained the cause of action, the name and place of abode of the person who is to bring such action, and the name and place of abode of the attorney or agent; and no evidence of any cause of action shall be produced except such as shall be stated in such notice; and in case the plaintiff shall not prove, on the trial, that such notice was given, the jury shall find for the defendant.

XXXV. And it is hereby further ordered, that every such action shall be brought within 3 calendar months after the accrual of the causes of action, and the venue shall be laid, and the cause tried in the place or district where the facts were committed, and the defendant may plead the general issue, and under it give the special matter in evidence; and whenever, in any such action, the plaintiff shall become nonsuited, or shall discontinue the action, or if a verdict shall be found, or judgment shall be given for the defendant, he shall be entitled to full costs of suit, and have such remedy for the same as any defendant can have in other cases where costs are given by law.

XXXVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that in case any information or suit shall be brought to trial, on account of any seizure made under this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the Customs, or to trade or navigation, and a verdict shall be found for the claimant thereof, and the Judge or Court, before whom the cause shall have been tried, shall certify that there was probable cause of seizure, the claimant shall not be entitled to any costs of suit, nor shall the person who made such seizure be liable to any action, indictment, or other suit or prosecution on account of such seizure; and if any action, indictment, or other suit or prosecution shall be brought to trial against any person, on account of such seizure, wherein a verdict shall be given against the defendant, the plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover, nor shall the defendant be liable for any fine, damages, or thing, beyond the things seized, or the value thereof.

XXXVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall be lawful for such officer or other person as aforesaid, within 1 calendar month after such notice, to tender amends to the plaintiff or his agent, and to plead and tender in bar, with or without other pleas, and if the jury shall find the amends tendered sufficient, they shall find for the defendant, and he shall be entitled to full costs of suit, in the same manner as if he had pleaded the general issue only.

Provided always, that it shall be lawful for such defendant, by leave of the Court wherein such action shall be brought, at any time before issue joined, to pay money into Court as in other actions.

XXXVIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that in any such action, if the Judge or Court, before whom such action shall be tried, shall certify that the defendant or defendants in such action acted upon probable cause, then the plaintiff in such action shall not be entitled to more than 2*d.* damages, nor to any costs of suit.

XXXIX. And it is hereby further ordered, that all penalties and forfeitures recovered in the said colony under this Order, or any Order or Act, relating to the Customs, or to trade, or navigation, other than colonial ordinances, shall be paid into the hands of the Collector of Port Free Town, and shall be divided, paid, and applied as follows (that is to say): after deducting the charges of prosecution from the produce thereof, one-third part of the net produce shall be paid into the hands of the Collector of Her Majesty's Customs at the port of Free Town, for the use of Her Majesty, one-third part to the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of the said colony, and the other third part to the person who shall seize, inform, and sue for the same, excepting such seizures as shall be made at sea by the commanders or officers of Her Majesty's ships of war duly authorized to make seizures, one moiety of which seizures, and of the penalties and forfeitures recovered thereon, first deducting the charges of prosecution from the gross produce thereof, shall be paid as aforesaid to the Collector of Her Majesty's Customs, to and for the use of Her Majesty, and the other moiety to him or them who shall seize, inform, and sue for the same, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding, subject, nevertheless, to such distribution of the produce of the seizures so made at sea, as well with regard to the moiety hereinbefore granted to Her Majesty, as with regard to the other moiety given to the seizer or prosecutor, as Her Majesty shall think fit to order and direct by any Order or Orders in Council, or by any proclamation or proclamations to be made for that purpose.

XL. And it is hereby further ordered, that all actions or suits for the recovery of any of the penalties or forfeitures imposed by this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the customs, or to trade, or navigation, may be commenced or prosecuted at any time within 3 years after the offence committed, by reason whereof such penalty or forfeiture shall be incurred, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

XLI. And it is hereby further ordered, that no appeal shall be prosecuted from any decree or sentence of any of Her Majesty's courts in the said colony touching any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this Order, or any Order or Act relating to the customs, or to trade or navigation, unless the inhibition shall be applied for, and decreed within 12 months from the time when such decree or sentence was pronounced.

XLII. And it is hereby ordered, that all persons authorized to make seizures under an Act passed in the 5th year of the reign of His Majesty King George the IVth [cap. 113], intituled "An Act to amend and consolidate the laws relating to the abolition of the Slave Trade," shall, in making and prosecuting any such seizures, have the benefit of all the provisions granted to persons authorized to make seizures under this Order. Provided, nevertheless, that all penalties and forfeitures created by this Act, passed in the 5th year of His Majesty King George IV, whether pecuniary or specific, shall (except in cases specially provided for by the said Act), go and belong to such persons as are authorized by that Act to make seizures, in such shares, and shall and may be sued for and prosecuted, tried, recovered, distributed, and applied in such and the like manner, and by the same ways and means, and subject to the same rules and directions as any penalties and forfeitures incurred in Great Britain and in the British possessions in America, respectively, now go and belong to, and may be sued for, prosecuted, tried, recovered, and distributed, respectively, in Great Britain, or in the said colony, under and by virtue of this Order.

XLIII. And it is hereby further ordered, that it shall not be lawful for any person to re-export from the said colony to any foreign place, in any foreign ship, any coals, the produce of the United Kingdom, except upon payment of the duty to which such coals would be liable upon exportation from the United Kingdom to such foreign place, and that no coals shall be so shipped at any port or place in the said colony to be exported to any British place, until the exporter or the master of the exporting vessel, shall have given bond, with one sufficient surety, in double the value of the coals, that such coals shall not be landed at any foreign place.

XLIV. And it is hereby further ordered, that no import or other duty of customs shall be charged or payable in the said colony, or its dependencies, upon provisions or stores, of any description, imported or supplied on account of Her Majesty's Government, and at the public expense, for the use of Her Majesty's land or sea forces.

XLV. And it is hereby further ordered, that all laws, bye-laws, usages, or customs, at this time, or which hereafter shall be, in practice, or endeavoured or pretended to be in force or practice, in the said colony, which are in anywise repugnant to this Order, or to any Act of Parliament made, or hereafter to be made, in the United Kingdom, so far as such Act shall relate to the said colony, are and shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

XLVI. And it is hereby further ordered, that if any person shall, in the said colony, counterfeit or falsify, or wilfully use when counterfeited or falsified, any entry, warrant, cocket, transire, or other document for the unlading, lading, entering, reporting, or clearing any ship or vessel, or for the landing, shipping, or removing of any goods, stores, baggage, or article whatever, or shall by any false statement procure any writing or document to be made for any such purposes, or shall falsely make any oath or affirmation required by this Order, or shall forge or counterfeit a certificate of the said oath or affirmation, or shall publish such certificate, knowing the same to be so forged or counterfeited, every person so offending shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of 200*l.*, and such penalty shall and may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, in like manner, and by such ways and means, as any penalty may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, under the provisions and directions of this Order.

XLVII. And it is hereby further ordered, that the Governor, or the officer for the time being administering the Government of the said colony, shall promulgate this present Order within 1 calendar month next after the receipt thereof by him, and this Order shall take effect from and after the date of such promulgation thereof as aforesaid, and not before.

And the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and the Right Honourable Earl Grey, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

REPORT of the Secretary of War to the President of The United States.—December 1, 1848.

SIR,

War Department, December 1, 1848.

THE account of our military operations, contained in the last annual report from this department, left our troops, late in October, 1847, in possession of the capital of Mexico, and many other important places in that country. The main achievements of our armies for that year were then presented to your consideration, but others, of a subsequent date, highly creditable to those engaged in them, though of a less important character, deserve notice and commendation.

On the evening of the 22nd of November, General Lane moved from Puebla with a command of only 160 men, upon Matamoras, distant about 54 miles, in 12 hours. The place was immediately attacked, and the enemy, consisting of from 400 to 600 men, put to flight, with a loss of from 60 to 80 in killed and wounded. A quantity of ordnance and munitions was captured and 21 American prisoners liberated. On its way back to Puebla, the detachment was attacked by a Mexican force of about 500 men, under General Rea. After a short conflict, the enemy were routed and dispersed, sustaining a further loss of about 50, in killed and wounded.

In January, an expedition, composed of 4 companies of Texan rangers, 2 companies of the 3rd dragoons, and 1 of the mounted rifle regiment, all under the command of General Lane, were sent out from the city of Mexico, "to scour the country, and drive the guerillas from the roads." Having ascertained that Santa Anna, with a few regular troops, and a considerable irregular force, was at Tehuacan, the detachment moved rapidly on, and took possession of that place. So sudden was its approach, that Santa Anna had barely time to save himself by a precipitate flight. The expedition pressed on to Orizaba and Cordova, and took possession of these towns, capturing a quantity of public property, and releasing a number of American prisoners. After remaining a short time, and restoring to the owners private property there deposited, which had been seized by guerilla bands, it returned to the main column of our army, in the city of Mexico, on the 9th of February. On the 17th of the same month, General Lane led another detachment, consisting of 250 Texan rangers, and 130 dragoons of the 3rd regiment, against the guerilleros, who were infesting the country lying north and north-east of the city of Mexico. On the 25th, he encountered a body of the enemy at Sequalteplau, and after a severe conflict the town was taken, and the hostile forces dispersed, with a loss of 150 killed, and more than 50 prisoners.

The command of General Lane, on these occasions, displayed much enterprise, spirit, and gallantry. His interesting reports, with the documents accompanying them, are hereto appended.

Under the judicious management of Colonel Mason, the commanding officer of our troops in the Californias, the upper province has been kept in tranquillity; but efforts were made by the enemy to recover possession of Lower California. In November, 1847, the post of La Paz, with a garrison of 112 men, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Burton, of the New York volunteers, was repeatedly attacked by a combined force of Mexicans, Californians, and Indians, of from 300 to 500 men. The successive attacks were repulsed, with considerable loss on the part of the assailants.

The gallant defence of San Jose, and the capture of Mazatlan, are achievements creditable to our arms. They were performed by the naval forces, and will, doubtless, be presented to your particular notice by the Secretary of the Navy. The details of these affairs are contained in the accompanying reports from the commanding officer in California.

Towards the close of the last year, the people of Chihuahua exhibited a determined spirit of hostility, and treated with severity American citizens found among them. Information was received by General Price, who was in command of our troops in New Mexico, that General Urrea, with a body of 3,000 Mexicans, was moving in the direction of El Paso, with the evident design of attacking our forces in that territory. With a view to disperse the enemy and repress the rising hostility in an adjoining State, General Price moved, with all his disposable force, from Santa Fé, on the 7th of February last, and in March captured the city of Chihuahua. The enemy fled to Santa Cruz de Rosales, a distance of 60 miles, and there made a stand; they occupied the strong positions of that town, and resolved on resistance. Though the place was invested on the 8th of March, an assault was delayed until the 16th, in consequence of the assurances given by the Mexican General, Trias, that a Treaty of Peace had been concluded, and that official intelligence of the fact was daily expected. After a reasonable delay, and no confirmation of this report being received, it was determined to dislodge the enemy. On the morning of the 16th of March, arrangements were made for carrying the town. Several batteries were opened, and after a continued fire for 5 hours, a simultaneous assault, at different quarters was made, and the town captured. The conflict was severe; the enemy lost, in killed, 2 officers and 236 men; the number wounded was not ascertained. The loss, on our part, was 1 officer and 3 men killed, and 19 wounded. The number of our troops engaged in this affair was 665, and that of the enemy 804, exclusive of officers. Among the captured property were 11 pieces of artillery, 9 wall pieces, and 577 stands of arms. As this engagement took place after an armistice had been concluded at the head-quarters of our army in Mexico, the cannon, arms, and all other public property captured at Chihuahua and Santa Cruz de Rosales, were returned to the Mexican authorities. The report of General Price, herewith transmitted, contains a full account of his expedition into Chihuahua, and the engagement with the enemy at Santa Cruz de Rosales.

This concluded the series of brilliant achievements of our armies in the Mexican war, and though, in magnitude, not to be compared to many others, yet it was characterized by the same skill, intrepidity, and enterprise, which have given such wide-spread renown to our recent military operations. To the meritorious services of the officers and soldiers who achieved this last triumph of our arms, a grateful country will award a just measure of admiration and praise.

A portion of the battalion of Missouri volunteers, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Gilpin, had several encounters in July, with the Comanche Indians in the vicinity of Fort Mann, near the Arkansas, on the route to Santa Fé, which resulted in a manner creditable to our troops. The Indians were defeated and dispersed. The reports of these engagements are herewith transmitted.

The line of communication between Vera Cruz and the head-quarters of our army was interrupted by guerilla bands and robbers, while our forces were concentrated and moving upon the enemy's capital, but, after its fall, this line was re-opened and established by reinforcements sent to the main column of the army. On the arrival of additional troops, new positions were occupied, with a view not only to obtain abundant supplies, and to collect internal revenue, but to resume hostilities with better advantage and to extend our conquests to other important parts of Mexico, if the efforts to terminate the war by an honourable peace should prove unavailing.

While measures were in progress for sending troops into the mining districts, and extending our military operations in the direction of the Rio Grande, a Treaty of Peace was entered into at the head-quarters of our army in Mexico, and transmitted to The United States for ratification. Pursuant to one of its Articles, Major-General Butler, then in chief command, on the 5th day of March, concluded with the Government of Mexico an agreement for the general suspension of hostilities, to continue 2 months. This was followed by a definitive Treaty of Peace, which went into operation on the 30th of May last. On that day the movements for withdrawing our forces commenced, and before the end of the month of July they had evacuated the Republic of Mexico. The volunteers, and that part of the regular army whose term of service was limited to the duration of the war, were disbanded.

Our military peace establishment is now nearly the same in numerical strength as it was at the commencement of the war with Mexico. Filled up to the utmost limit allowed by law, it would be 9,878 officers and soldiers, exclusive of the enlisted men of the ordnance; but its actual numerical strength will generally fall considerably below this number. The great extension of our territorial limits required a new arrangement of our military divisions and departments. The eastern, or first division, is not changed. Texas and New Mexico have been added to the western or second, and California and Oregon constitute the third, or the division of the Pacific.

As no military force had been stationed in Oregon, before or during the war, the Department took the earliest measures to send troops into that territory. Orders were issued to the mounted rifle regiment, even before its return from Mexico, to proceed as soon as practicable to Oregon, and hopes were entertained that it might be able to pass across the country during the last season; but this arrangement was frustrated by the Act of Congress passed at the close of the last session, which gave permission to the enlisted men of the regiment, who had been in service in Mexico, to "receive, on application, an honourable discharge from the service of The United States, and stand as if they had served out their respective terms." It could not be expected that even those who were willing to remain in the service would forego the advantages offered to them by this Act. On receiving a discharge, they would at once be entitled to 3 months' extra pay and to bounty land. By the operation of this Act, the regiment, as to the rank and file, was in effect disbanded. Prompt measures were taken to recruit it, and no doubt is entertained but that early in the spring it will be in a condition to leave for its destination.

The frustration of the attempt to send troops into Oregon, during the past season, is the more to be regretted, because it appears that, at the date of the last accounts from that territory, Indian disturbances still continued, and the inhabitants are anxiously expecting assistance from The United States. A small force, detached as an escort for the Governor, is now on the way to Oregon, and will probably arrive there in the course of this month. With a view to an earlier relief than could be afforded by sending troops from The United States, orders have been issued from the Navy Department to the commander of our squadron in the Pacific, to despatch a part of his force to Oregon, with arms, ammunition, and supplies, and, in case it should be necessary, to land the marines and sailors to aid the inhabitants, until the troops destined for that territory should have arrived.

The other regiments of the permanent military establishment were greatly reduced at the close of the war. They had been, to a considerable extent, filled up by recruits enlisted to serve only during its continuance. Owing to the late period of their return from Mexico, and the unavoidable delay in recruiting or organizing them, such as were destined for distant service could not be prepared to proceed, by land, to Oregon, California, or New Mexico, until the season was so far advanced as to render a march across the country impracticable. Foreseeing the necessity for troops in these territories, and the delay of sending them from The United States, orders, in anticipation of peace, were given to the General in chief command to send a regiment from the head-quarters in Mexico to California; but the Mexican Government refused to permit its passage to the Pacific coast.

Orders were also given to General Wool, then in command of the forces at Saltillo, Monterey, and on the Rio Grande frontier, to send a part of the regular troops with him directly to California and New Mexico. Pursuant to this direction, 2 companies of the 1st and 2 of the 2nd dragoons proceeded up the right bank of the Rio Grande to Chihuahua, crossed over to the Gila, and down that river to California. By this time it is probable they have reached their ultimate destination.

One company of dragoons, and one of light artillery, were also sent from the Rio Grande, and proceeded on the Mexican side of it up to Santa Fé. These have already arrived in New Mexico.

Two companies of the 1st regiment of artillery have embarked at New York to go around Cape Horn to Oregon, and the 2nd regiment of infantry has also left to proceed, by the same route, to California. As early in the spring as a passage can be made across the country, other troops will be sent to Oregon, in number sufficient to hold and protect that territory.

Troops, to guard the Rio Grande frontier and keep in check the Indians in that quarter, have been ordered to Texas, and have arrived at, or are on their way to, the respective stations.

The remainder of the army is distributed on the Indian and northern frontiers, and on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. The accompanying report from the Adjutant-General will furnish in detail, information of the distribution of the army, in the several departments into which the country has been divided.

The war with Mexico necessarily caused some delay in establishing posts on the Oregon route. The mounted rifle regiment was diverted from that duty, for which it was originally designed, to serve with the army in Mexico, and it is not now intended to employ any part of it east of the Rocky Mountains. Notwithstanding the demand for all our forces in the enemy's country while the war continued, measures were taken as early as March, 1847, to select proper locations, and establish posts on the eastern section of the route to Oregon. On the 1st of June of that year, instructions were given for the establishment of 2 of these posts, one near Grand Island, where the road to Oregon encounters the Platte River, and the other at or near Fort Laramie. During that season, some progress was made in constructing the work at the former place, but it was suspended on the approach of winter. Preparations were made to resume it early in the spring, and it has been in the course of construction during the past season; but the department is unable to state how far it has progressed, as no report has yet been received from the officer charged with its superintendence.

The amount of contributions and avails of captured property, received by officers of the army in Mexico, cannot, at this time, for the want of full returns, be accurately ascertained. The amount thus far reported is 3,844,373 dollars, which will be somewhat increased by amounts collected in New Mexico and California. Of this amount 67,492 dollars have been retained for expenses of collections; 346,369 dollars paid into the Treasury of The United States; 8,267,540 dollars turned over to disbursing officers; 49,712 dollars credited by the Mexican Government to The United States, in payment of the first instalment under the Treaty, and the remaining 113,259 dollars charged against the collecting officers. Of the amount turned over to disbursing officers, 769,650 dollars were applied towards the payment of the first instalment under the Treaty with Mexico, and the greater part of the balance has been disbursed for regular and ordinary purposes. Against the balances remaining charged to collecting officers, they may be entitled to further credits on the several accounts above stated, to the amount of about 79,000 dollars. The remainder is claimed by them as compensation for extra services, or as having been paid to other army officers for similar services in making the collections. These claims have been suspended, as, under existing laws, no such allowances can be made; but as the claims on this account were considered, to some extent, just, I urged, in my last annual report, and subsequently in a communication to the Committee of Ways and Means, that provision should be made for a reasonable allowance in such cases; and the subject is again recommended for favourable consideration.

The moneys paid over to disbursing officers have been mingled with the funds drawn from the Treasury, and placed in their hands for disbursement. This has complicated their accounts, and greatly embarrassed the settlement of them. The laws and regulations securing and enforcing the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers are considered as applicable only to the public moneys received from the Treasury. It is recommended that these laws should be so extended as to apply to the accounts for moneys received from contributions and all other sources. Without some such provision, I am satisfied that much delay and many difficulties will attend the adjustment of these accounts.

There are also other accounts which cannot be adjusted without further legislation. No fund was placed by special appropriation at the disposal of the Executive or the commanding generals, to meet expenses for secret services, or for extraordinary objects. Disbursements of this character are not only usual but indispensable in the prosecution of a war, and particularly a foreign war. The collections in Mexico have been resorted to for these purposes. It is not reasonable to expect that regular vouchers of payment for secret services should be produced, and the accounts embracing such items must remain unadjusted, unless Congress should deem it proper to provide some mode for settling them. The mode which seems most appropriate, so far as regards the expenditure for secret and confidential services, is that which has been provided for settling accounts for the disbursement of the appropriation for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse.

I respectfully refer you to the accompanying reports from the officers in charge of the several bureaus connected with this department. The examination of them, will, I trust, satisfactorily show that the duties of each have been discharged with industry, ability, and faithfulness. These duties, so greatly multiplied in all of them by the war with Mexico, have not yet been much diminished by the return of peace. The allowance of 3 months' extra pay to all who served in that war, has rendered it indispensably necessary to retain in service the temporary paymasters appointed under the Act of the 5th of July, 1838. To prevent delay, and to subserve the convenience of the volunteers, paymasters have been sent into the several sections of the country where these troops were raised and organized. It is estimated that from 80,000 to 100,000 persons became entitled to 3 months' extra pay under the Act of the 19th of July last; the greater part of this number had left the service before this provision of law was adopted. Scattered, as they are, through every section of The United States, much labour and time will be required to adjust these claims. The vast increase in the extent of our territory, and in the number of military posts, has induced the paymaster-general to ask that the additional paymasters appointed for the war, and whose services were continued by an Act of Congress, passed at the last session, until the 4th of March next, may be retained permanently in the public service. This suggestion, as well as that relative to the peculiar tenure of office in this branch of the army, is respectfully commended to your favourable consideration.

The number of military posts will, probably, exceed the number of medical officers now authorized by law. Should that be the case the employment of physicians in civil life will become necessary. Besides the difficulty of procuring such physicians at the points where they are wanted, the expenses of 10 exceed the regular pay and emoluments of army surgeons and assistant surgeons. With a view both to economy and to the interest of the service, I am induced to concur in the recommendation of the surgeon-general, in favour of the repeal of the proviso of the 3rd section of the Act of the 19th of July last, so far as it relates to the 2 surgeons and 12 assistant surgeons, authorized by the Act of the 11th of February, 1847. By such a repeal, the above number of surgeons and assistant surgeons would be added to the permanent medical staff of the army.

The report of the chief engineer presents in detail the operations of that department during the past year. The pendency of the war with Mexico, in some degree, suspended the measures for carrying forward our system of exterior defence. In consequence of the return of peace, the estimates for fortifications for the next fiscal year, somewhat exceed those for either of the 2 preceding years, and will be sufficient to complete some of the works, and considerably advance others already in the progress of construction. It may be advisable to commence new works at some exposed points on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, particularly within the limits of Texas.

An early attention has been given to our Pacific coast. So little accurate knowledge was possessed of that coast, that it has been deemed advisable to cause it to be carefully and fully examined, with a view to the selection of proper points for fortifications, as well as naval establishments. A board composed of officers of the army and navy, has been constituted to make such an examination, and are now under orders for California and Oregon to execute the duties assigned to them. By the instructions, prepared by the War and Navy Departments, and herewith submitted, the object embraced in the examination are fully disclosed.

The appropriations for the army proper, required for the next fiscal year, amount to 4,432,286 dollars. The estimates for the transportation of the troops far exceed that of any other year previous to the war. The increase in this item is to meet the expense of sending troops to Oregon, New Mexico, and California.

Should the suggestion of the quartermaster-general, contained in his report, to employ the public vessels in the naval service, for the transportation, by sea, of army stores and troops, be adopted, this item of expenses would be greatly reduced. Our possessions upon the Pacific seem to render the change in this respect appropriate, and I do not doubt that such a measure will be attended by results favourable to the public service.

In none of the branches of this department has the business been so much augmented as in the pension bureau. The number of invalid pensioners has increased during the last year 691; the whole number on the list is 3,126.

More than 60,000 claims have been presented under the Act of the 11th of February, 1847, for bounty land and treasury scrip. About 40,000 of them have been acted on and allowed; 20,000 are now pending, and it is estimated that there are 40,000 yet to be presented. Great efforts have been made to dispatch these applications, and about 250 are daily investigated and passed. For the details of the business in the Pension Office, I respectfully refer you to the report of the commissioner.

A comprehensive and interesting view of our Indian relations will be found in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The removal of the tribes to the country set apart for them west of the Mississippi river, has separated nearly all those who resided within the limits of the States from the unwholesome influences resulting from a contact with the white population, and afforded an opportunity to the Government to enforce the necessary measures for civilizing and improving them. The wisdom of our policy in regard to the Indians is vindicated by the good effects which it has produced, and particularly by the higher degree of improvement among those who first removed to the country assigned to them.

During the last year, our emigrants have experienced less annoyance than at any former period, from the Indians on the Missouri frontier, and the difficulties among themselves and with our citizens have been less frequent. This favourable change in their conduct is to be mainly ascribed to the judicious control exercised over their annuities, and to the holding of them liable to be used to compensate for damages resulting from their lawless aggressions as well upon each other as upon our own citizens.

An important Treaty has been recently negotiated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in person, with the Menomonies, by which they have agreed to cede all their lands in Wisconsin—about 4,000,000 of acres—and to remove to the excellent country procured for them on the upper Mississippi, adjoining that of their old friends, the Winnebagoes, recently from Iowa. It is reasonable to expect that the interposing of these 2 tribes between the Sioux and Chippewas, and the establishment of a military post in that region will check, if not entirely prevent, the sanguinary hostilities so frequent between the 2 latter tribes, arising from long-cherished and inveterate feuds. The Treaty with the Menomonies has, in effect, extinguished the Indian title to the whole country east of the Mississippi, south of Lake Superior, which, for a long time, has been regarded as an object not only of great importance to our own citizens, but essential to the welfare and prosperity of the Indians themselves.

Within the 4 last years, 8 important Treaties have been negotiated with different Indian tribes, by which highly beneficial changes in their situation and affairs have been, and will be effected, and The United States have acquired, at a cost of only 1,842,000 dollars, 18,500,000 acres of land; about 2,100,000 acres of it have been assigned to other tribes for their permanent residence; and 2,900,000 are reserved for a similar purpose, leaving the remainder 13,500,000 acres ready for immediate settlement and cultivation, in the rapidly growing States of Wisconsin and Iowa. There is also a prospect that Mississippi, as well as other States in which some of the Choctaws still remain, will soon be freed from them. Measures for their emigration are in progress, under modified arrangements entered into within the last year, which promise a favourable result.

The law of 1847, giving additional authority to prevent the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors in the Indian country, and the stringent regulations adopted by the department to restrain this pernicious traffic, have sensibly diminished the amount of suffering among the frontier tribes, arising from that prolific source of evil, but an effectual check to it cannot be applied, unless the States lying adjacent to the Indian country will co-operate in the measure, by restraining their citizens from bringing intoxicating liquors within the reach of the Indians. The policy of paying annuities semi-annually, and of distributing them per capita, has been attended by the happiest results. The new regulations, in regard to licences to trade with the Indians, and the rigid supervision over the conduct of those to whom this privilege has been granted, have put an end to many evils and abuses which formerly prevailed, and were highly detrimental to the interests and welfare of the Indians.

No subject connected with our Indian affairs has so deeply interested the department and received so much of its anxious solicitude and attention as that of education, and I am happy to be able to say that its efforts to advance this cause have been crowned with success. Among most of the tribes which have removed to and become settled in the Indian country, the blessings of education are beginning to be appreciated, and they generally manifest a willingness to co-operate with the Government in diffusing these blessings. The schools already established have an increased number of pupils, and preparations are making for establishing many new ones. Much credit is due to many excellent missionary societies, of different Christian denominations, for their aid and contributions to sustain and advance the cause of education among the Indian population.

There are 16 manual labour schools and 87 boarding and district schools now in successful operation among the various Indian tribes, and the number of Indian youths attending them, according to the reports received at the department, is 3,682; of which 2,650 are males, and the remaining 1,032 are females. The schools are generally in charge of missionary societies, and are well conducted. These facts afford the most gratifying evidence that nearly all of our colonised tribes are rapidly advancing in civilization and moral improvement; and I trust it may not be improper, on this occasion, for me to say, that for the highly improved and rapidly improving condition of the numerous Indian tribes, over which the guardianship of the Government is extended, not only in regard to education, but most other respects, no stinted measure of credit is to be ascribed to the ability, industry, and faithfulness of that branch of this department to which the management of our diversified and difficult Indian affairs is assigned.

Within the newly acquired territories there is a numerous Indian population, over which our supervision and guardianship must necessarily be extended; but this cannot be effectually done without the action of Congress on the subject. Additional agencies are required to manage Indian affairs in these territories, and to extend to them our Indian system of control and management, which, in other parts of our country, has already produced such happy results, and is so full of promise for the future.

I respectfully ask your attention to the following subjects mentioned in my last annual report: the settlement of claims in California; a retired list of officers of the army; and an asylum for disabled and worn-out soldiers; in regard to each of these the views of the department are fully set forth in that report, and I again recommend them to your favourable consideration.

I have, &c.

The President of The United States.

W. L. MARCY.

REPORT of the Secretary of the Navy to the President of The United States.—December 4, 1848.

SIR,

Navy Department, December 4, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to submit to you the annual report of the condition and operations of this department of the public service.

During the past year, the St. Lawrence, a frigate of the 1st class, and the Vermont, ship-of-the-line, have been launched. The shores as well as the lower timbers of the frigate were found, on inspection, to be so decayed by the long time she had been on the stocks, that her security would have required repairs at a large cost, and it was deemed economical to launch her. She has been put in commission, and is a splendid addition to the navy. The old ship-house in the Boston yard, which covered the Vermont, stood so near the boundary line of the public grounds that the experienced officers in charge of the Bureau of Construction, and in command of the yard, concurred in the opinion officially communicated, that the ship and the valuable public property in the yard were exposed to danger of destruction by fire, from the contiguous private buildings. I was satisfied that if the ship-house had taken fire, the ship could not have been saved, the admirable stone dock near it, would have been destroyed, and public property to the value of several millions of dollars would probably have shared the same fate. I therefore directed that the ship should be launched and secured from injury, until the wants of the service would require her to be fitted for sea. This has been done, and the ship-house has been taken down and the materials used for other purposes.

The construction of the 4 steam-ships of war, authorized by the Act of Congress of 3rd March, 1847, is in a satisfactory state of progress. The Saranac, built at the navy yard at Kittery, has been launched; the Powhattan, at Norfolk; the Susquehanna, at Philadelphia, and the San Jacinto, at New York, may be launched and ready for sea in the course of the next year. In the models and construction of these war steamers, and in the manufacture of their engines and machinery, great care has been taken in the skilful execution of the work, and in careful inspection by competent officers, to make them worthy of the service, and I doubt not they will fully meet the expectations of the country. The appropriations by Congress for so important an addition to our naval force have been liberal, and the officers, mechanics, and contractors, have exerted themselves to prove that we can be as successful in the construction of steam-ships of war as we have been in the sailing ships of the navy.

There are unfinished, on the stocks at the several navy yards, 4 ships of the rate of 74 guns, and 2 frigates of 44 guns. They are securely sheltered, and it has not been considered judicious or consistent with the interests of the service to launch them. They are so near completion that they can be readily launched and fitted for sea service on short notice, if public exigencies shall require. The vessels in commission during the past year, have been employed as follows:

In the Pacific, the ships of the line, Ohio and Columbus; razee, Independence; frigate, Congress; sloops, Portsmouth, Warren, Cyane, Dale, and Preble, with the store ships Erie, Lexington, and Southampton. The Columbus, Captain Wyman, bearing the broad pennant of Commodore Biddle, arrived in The United States on the 13th of March last, and was placed in ordinary. The frigate Congress, Captain La Vallette, having been in commission more than 3 years, has been ordered home, and may be expected to arrive in the coming spring. The Portsmouth, Commander Montgomery, arrived in The United States on the 5th of May last, and was soon again ready for sea. The Cyane, Commander Du Pont, arrived at Norfolk the 9th day of October last, and has been placed in ordinary. In the month of May last, the Preble, Commander Glynn, sailed from the west coast, with orders to take to China Commodore Geisinger, Commander of the East India squadron, and, after having performed this service, to return to her station. The sloop St. Mary's, Commander Crowninshield, on the 11th April last, sailed from Norfolk to join the Pacific squadron.

With a view to the regular supply of the squadron in the Pacific, and to furnish means for transportation of invalids, or men whose time of enlistment may have expired, and who desire to come home, orders were given, some months since, that one of the 3 store ships attached to that squadron shall sail on her return to The United States semi-annually. Under this arrangement, one will be with the squadron, one on her way home, and one will be going out with fresh stores.

The Erie has come home, and, under Lieutenant Commanding Wm. Mc Blair, has sailed to the Mediterranean, by the Cape de Verdes, with stores for the African and Mediterranean squadrons, and the Fredonia, Lieutenant Commanding F. A. Neville, has sailed from New York for the Pacific.

When Commodore Biddle left the station he was succeeded in the command of the squadron by Commodore Shubrick, and he was relieved, at his own request, by Commodore Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, who assumed command in the month of May last. Commodore Shubrick was authorized by the department to detach himself from the squadron, and return home across the Isthmus; but he deemed it to be his duty to remain on board the Independence, and is now on a cruize to the Sandwich, Fejee, and other islands in the Pacific, where the presence of a ship-of-war was considered of great importance to the interests of American commerce. The Independence may be expected to reach The United States early in the spring of the next year.

The home squadron continued under the command of Commodore Perry until the 20th of November last, when the department, in view of his impaired health, yielded to his request to be relieved of the command, the duties of which had been very arduous and satisfactorily performed. Commodore Wilkinson on that day assumed the command. During the past year, the squadron consisted of the frigate Cumberland, the sloops Albany, John Adams, Germantown, and Saratoga; of the steamers Mississippi, Spitfire, Vixen, Scorpion, Water Witch, Scourge, Iris, and Petrina; of the schooners, Reefers, Petrel, Bonito, Flirt, Mahonese, Falcon, and Tampico; and of the bomb vessels Ætna, Stromboli, Vesuvius, and Hecla, with the store ships Relief and Electra.

The frigate Cumberland, bearing the pennant of Commodore Perry, arrived in New York in July last, with a considerable number of cases of fever on board, and finding that it did not abate, but assumed a more malignant type, it was deemed unsafe to send her again into the tropics until she could be thoroughly broken out in a cold climate. She has been put in ordinary. The frigate Raritan, Captain Page, has taken her place in the squadron. The John Adams, Commander Adams, arrived at Boston in September last, and is undergoing repairs. The steamer Mississippi, Commander Mackenzie, returned to The United States in April, and is undergoing repairs of her hull and machinery. The Vixen is also undergoing repair. The Petrita was wrecked in the gulf of Mexico. The Water Witch and the Iris are at sea. The store ship Relief has sailed with stores for Brazil, and the Fredonia to the Pacific. The other steamers and vessels enumerated have been sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury. They were purchased for special service in the gulf of Mexico, during the war, and were not suitable for general naval purposes.

In the squadron on the coast of Africa, commanded by Commodore Bolton, the sloops Jamestown, Commander Mercer; Portsmouth, Commander Armstrong; Decatur, Commander Byrne; and brigs Boxer, Lieutenant-commanding Bell; Porpoise, Commander Gordon; and Bainbridge, Commander Slaughter, have been employed. Commodore Cooper sailed in the sloop Yorktown, Commander Marston, on the 22nd of November, with orders to relieve Commodore Bolton in the command of the squadron. The Boxer arrived at Philadelphia in May last, and being condemned, on survey, as unworthy of repair, was sold. Commodore Bolton has orders, on the arrival of his relief, to proceed in the Jamestown, and relieve Commodore Read, in command of the naval forces of The United States in the Mediterranean sea.

There have been employed, during the year, in the Mediterranean, under Commodore Read, the frigate United States, Captain Smoot; sloop Marion, Commander Simonds; the steamer Princeton, Commander Engle; schooner Taney, Lieutenant-commanding C. G. Hunter, with the store ship Supply, Lieutenant-commanding Lynch. The Marion having finished her cruize, arrived in Boston in the month of September. The steamer Alleghany, Lieutenant-commanding W. W. Hunter, has been ordered from the Brazil station to the Mediterranean, and the frigate Constitution, Captain Gwinn, has sailed for the same station. On the arrival of his relief, Commodore Read, having finished a long cruize on the coast of Africa and in the Mediterranean, has orders to return home in the frigate United States. In consequence of our being compelled to discontinue the depôt at Mahon, it became necessary to supply the squadron with stores, by means of store ships. The store ship Supply, Lieutenant commanding Lynch, was sent out, with a full cargo of stores, in the month of November, 1847. Having delivered them to the several ships of the squadron, from time to time, as they were required, she is on her return home, and the Erie has been loaded and sent out to continue the service. Commodore Read has made a temporary arrangement for landing stores for the squadron at Spezzia. There are some objections to this place as a depôt, on account of its position, and in the present very disturbed condition of Europe it is uncertain whether the arrangement will be permanently continued.

On the coast of Brazil, under command of Commodore Storer, the frigate Brandywine, Captain Boorman; the brig Perry, Lieutenant-commanding Tilton; and the steamer Alleghany, Lieutenant-commanding W. W. Hunter, have been employed. The sloop St. Louis, Commander Cocke, sailed from Norfolk in August last, to join the squadron, and carried orders for the Alleghany to proceed to the Mediterranean.

In obedience to your directions, and with an anxious desire to give protection to our commerce in the East Indies, I dispatched for that station, in the month of March last, the sloop Plymouth, Commander Gedney. She carried out, as a passenger, the Hon. Mr. Davis, Commissioner to China, and landed him at Macao on the 16th day of August. The brig Dolphin, Lieutenant-commanding Ogden, left New York in the month of May, for the same station. As the frigate Congress had nearly completed her cruise in the Pacific, it was deemed advantageous that she should return home by way of China and Bombay, as in doing so she would visit several important points where the occasional presence of a ship of war would exert a favourable influence on our commercial interests. Commodore Geisinger left The United States in November, 1847, to go across the isthmus with orders to the Pacific, and hoisting his pennant on board the Congress, proceeded to China. On his arrival there he was directed to transfer his pennant to the Plymouth, and assume command of the East India squadron, and the frigate was expected to pursue her voyage home. For reasons satisfactory to the department, Commodore Jones, on joining the Pacific squadron, determined to retain the frigate until the pending question of peace should be definitively settled between The United States and Mexico, and ordered the sloop Preble to convey Commodore Geisinger to his station. The delay consequent on this arrangement rendered it just and proper that the Congress should return home by the most direct route, as the terms of her crew's enlistment had generally expired, or would expire, before her arrival in The United States, and justice and policy forbade that they should be held to service beyond their contract, without urgent necessity.

In the present political condition of the north of Europe, and in view of the existence of war between Prussia and Denmark, it was deemed important that a ship of war should be sent to the North Sea and the Baltic, to give protection to American commercial interests in that quarter. The frigate St. Lawrence, Captain Paulding, sailed from Norfolk in the month of September last, with instructions to touch at Bremer Haven, and to enter the Baltic, if the advanced state of the season did not forbid his doing so. If such should be the case, he was instructed [to cruize during the winter between Cape Finisterre and Cadiz, touching at Lisbon, and in the spring to return to the north and execute his orders. Captain Paulding, on his arrival at Bremer Haven, found that the war was suspended by an armistice, and that winter was so near at hand as to make it imprudent for him to take his ship into the Baltic. I am happy to learn that the arrival of the ship has been hailed with universal satisfaction. The highest honours and most gratifying demonstrations of respect have been shown to our flag, and the officers received with the most flattering distinction and fraternal affection. The evidence thus afforded of the friendly feeling and admiration with which Germany regards The United States, leaves no reason to doubt that this noble ship could not have been sent on more important service.

The condition in which our ships have returned from long cruizes, and their services abroad, have afforded gratifying evidence of the high state of discipline in the navy.

The political condition of Sicily, Sardinia, and other States bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, has given peculiar interest to the operations of the squadron on that station. Commodore Read has performed his responsible and often delicate duties with zeal, judgment and activity; and on no occasion have our countrymen received more timely and effective protection of their persons and property than in the violent revolutionary conflicts which, during the past year, have frequently occurred within the limits of his command.

The reports are satisfactory from the squadrons on the coast of Africa, Brazil, and the East Indies.

At the date of my last annual report The United States were engaged in war with Mexico.

In the Gulf of Mexico, the squadron under the command of Commodore Perry continued until the return of peace to hold military possession of the several posts then in its occupation, commanding the trade, collecting a moderate revenue, and administering the temporary civil Government authorized by the law of nations.

Yucatan, one of the States of New Mexico, had been permitted by the Government of The United States to occupy a neutral position, and was thereby exempted from the evils of the war. While thus situated, hostilities commenced between the Indians and the white inhabitants of that State. It was a war of races, attended by the most shocking atrocities. Under your orders the squadron, with a humanity and success which did honour to our national character, extended protection, food, and shelter to the fleeing white inhabitants in their destitution and despair, and those thus aided were a portion of the people of a country with which we were at war.

In that report I felt authorized to state that the squadron in the Pacific had captured Mazatlan, San Blas, and Acapulco, and was holding them open to the trade of our countrymen and of neutrals, under the same conditions as were other Mexican ports in the military occupation of The United States.

The correspondence which is annexed will show that, with the exception of Acapulco, the facts justified the belief expressed. All the important points on both shores of the Gulf of California were gallantly captured by the squadron, in co-operation with a detachment of the army under Lieutenant-Colonel Burton, and occupied until the return of peace. Commodore Shubrick found his force too small to attempt the reduction of Acapulco, without so weakening the garrisons of the important places held in the gulf as to endanger their recapture, and wisely determined not to make any movement against it.

In the month of March the commanders of the naval forces in the Gulf of Mexico and in the Pacific were confidentially informed of the disposition made by the Senate of The United States of the Treaty of Peace, and were instructed to act in conformity with its stipulations as soon as they should be informed by The United States Commissioners of its ratification by Mexico in the amended form, thus avoiding an unnecessary and irritating delay.

The exchange of ratifications was made known to them, and without waiting for further instructions measures were taken by Commodore Jones, in the Pacific, and by Commodore Perry, in the Gulf of Mexico, for the evacuation of the Mexican territory, and the restoration, according to the terms of the Treaty, of all places within the limits of the Mexican Republic, which had been taken and occupied by the naval forces of The United States. These measures were promptly executed, and it is a source of the highest satisfaction to have it in my power to state that no complaint of the manner in which the duty was performed has reached the department.

The skill and courage with which the officers and men of the squadron conducted their military operations, are not entitled to higher praise than is the scrupulous regard to justice and humanity which characterized their conduct while occupying portions of the enemy's country, controlling their revenues and governing their inhabitants. The delicate duties resulting from this position have been performed without a stain on our national character, and without an act of extortion, cruelty, or oppression.

I have the honour to transmit copies of the official reports of our naval officers on the subject of the operations of their respective commands, and especially of military operations during the war. They present more in detail than I could with propriety use in my official reports, incidents which belong to the history of the country.

In this final report of naval operations in the war with Mexico, now happily ended, I deem it to be my duty to make a brief allusion to the participation of the navy in scenes and achievements which have reflected honour and glory on the American name, and commanded the respect of the world for our flag.

The enemy had no navy and an inconsiderable commercial marine; our ships of war had, therefore, nothing to contend with on their appropriate element. In the Pacific, our squadron, with means not fitted for inland operations, acting independently, and in co-operation with a small portion of our gallant army, effected the conquest of California. In supplying the deficiency of his means, and in preparing for and executing an inland campaign with the crews of his ships, Commodore Stockton displayed the highest military resource and the greatest energy. Since his memorable march from San Diego to the Ciudad de los Angeles, and the battles of the 8th and 9th of January, 1847, that country has been tranquil, our possession undisputed, and its inhabitants have hailed the cession of California to the United States with grateful satisfaction. Important points in the Gulf of California were taken by the forces under Commodore Shubrick, and their occupation maintained by him and his successor in command independently and in co-operation with the troops under Lieutenant-Colonel Burton, with a display of the highest skill and courage by officers and men, while their conduct was so just and humane, that a large portion of the inhabitants, especially of Lower California, deeply regret that they too are not to have the advantage of our laws and institutions, and the protection of our glorious flag. All will concur in admitting that the troops sent to California, with their acknowledged courage and military skill, were not in sufficient force to have conquered and maintained the occupation of the country without the efficient services of the officers and men of the squadron, both ashore and afloat.

In the Gulf of Mexico, from the beginning of the war, by co-operation at the Brazos, while the battle of Palo Alto was raging, by the capture of Tampico, by protecting the transportation and the landing of the troops at Vera Cruz, by its gallant co-operation in the siege, bombardment, and capture of that city and its defences, by its successful operations against Tabasco, Tuspan, Laguna, and other points in the interior and on the coast, but especially by holding a constant command of the sea, and by its vigilance and activity excluding contraband trade, and supplies of munitions of war from the enemy, the squadrons rendered the most important services to their common country. These services were rendered in a most inhospitable climate, and in the midst of suffering and death, not caused by the enemy in the honourable conflict of arms, but by the silent ravages of disease. All this was accomplished without withdrawing the squadrons from other stations.

So effective has been the performance of the duty of the navy in every quarter of the globe, that our increasing commerce in the most distant seas has felt no check and met no interruption, notwithstanding we were for more than 2 years engaged in active hostilities with an enemy possessing an extensive sea coast on the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans. Not a single American vessel was lost to her owners by capture by the enemy under the rights of war; and there was not, it is believed, any material effect produced on marine insurance.

These auspicious results, so favourable to our commerce and navigation, are to be attributed to the respect which is universally felt for our flag abroad; and that respect is the honourable reward of the skill and courage, the discretion and justice, the vigilance and boldness with which the navy has performed its duty.

It is the settled policy of The United States to maintain a navy; but if, notwithstanding its gallant exploits long since achieved, and its practical service so long acknowledged, it were an undecided question whether The United States should foster and cherish a navy, the service performed in the late war would go far to settle it. Without the guns of our squadron, how easily might the troops which formed the army of Major-General Scott, when crowded in transports, and crossing the Gulf, have been destroyed by a few insignificant cruizers? But for the same protection, with what advantage might they not have been met on landing on the enemy's shores through a dangerous surf? But for the entire control of the enemy's ports, by our active cruizers, how long might not the war have been protracted by the introduction of munitions of war, and other supplies for the enemy, and what disasters would not have threatened, if they had not befallen, our gallant army if the enemy could have prevented the introduction of these necessary supplies for our own troops? Who can estimate the loss of life and property which would have befallen us, if the tempting offers of the enemy had been accepted, and privateers had taken their letters of marque, so freely tendered, and ravaged our commerce in every sea, opposed only by the inadequate defences of a merchant vessel, and unrestrained by the navy?

In time of peace, economy requires, and the public interests do not forbid, that the naval establishment should be comparatively small. Considering our maritime position, the great length and accessibility of our coast, and our commercial importance, our navy is smaller than that of any other Power. In this regard, as in the general practical working of our system of government, we may safely rely on moral influence. In the extensive cruising grounds of our squadrons we need employ, in time of peace, but a few ships of war; it would not be practicable to have one in every port. It is enough that it is known that our flag is afloat, and that an American ship of war is ready to protect American citizens, and our countrymen follow their lawful and peaceful pursuits on the broad ocean without molestation, although there may not be a ship of war within a thousand miles. It should, however, be large enough to serve as a nucleus, capable of any degree of strength, which, in the event of contingency, it may be called to put forth. One of the most important requisites in a permanent naval system for The United States is its capability of large expansion.

The establishment of docks and yards for building and repair of ships, the collection and preparation of materials, the construction of ships of war ready for launching, and the purchase of cannon and munitions of war in quantities suitable for emergencies are measures of wise precaution. But in the vast mercantile and mechanical business of our country these supplies, to a certain extent, perhaps to an extent sufficient for the exigency, may be procured when the occasion for expansion shall arise. So too, the hardy mariners in our merchant service would readily furnish efficient crews for the increased number of ships fitted for war, which a maritime war may render necessary. The difficulty of such a crisis I apprehend will not be in providing guns nor ships, or will it be in finding brave hearts and ready hands to man and fight them; the difficulty will be neither in men to fight nor material to use, but as to officers in sufficient number, and with adequate experience to command and direct. A skilful naval officer, fitted by education and experience in all the grades of the service to navigate and fight a ship of war, is not readily formed. To qualify him for the responsible duties of his profession must be the work of years. Personal courage, general intelligence, and experience in navigation, are not sufficient. Notwithstanding, exceptions may be found, and no merchant marine would probably furnish them in greater numbers than our own; yet, I am decidedly of opinion that, as a general rule, a naval officer should enter the service at an early age, and, passing through all the grades, learn the various and complex duties of his profession by personal experience, and especially thus, learn to command those who may be placed under him. I do not, therefore, deem it unwise that our navy list contains a larger number of officers than may be required in time of peace for the active duties of their rank.

I have no doubt that important improvements may be made in our naval establishment.

Duty at sea is often attended with responsibility, hardship, and experience. In the routine of that duty, especially in time of peace, it must often become monotonous, and cease, in a great degree, to excite the zeal and enthusiasm necessary to high distinction. It is wise to bring into active operation those principles of human conduct which will counteract the tendency to inaction and indifference in the performance of even the dull and disagreeable duties of the profession. The most potent, in my judgment, is the principle of military rank involved in promotion, from the lower to the higher grades, by which the rewards of military ambition are secured to those who perform the arduous and active duties of their profession to those who, by their service and exposure, and their ability for service, deserve them.

No one can doubt, that promotions in the navy should be made on the principle of merit, service, and the capacity for duty. Yet the tendency of such a system, without the regulation of law, might be to foster favouritism, to promote a partial dispensation of executive favour, and to withhold from modest and unobtrusive merit the reward justly due to it.

Under our present system, promotions are generally made by seniority, or date of commission; and, as the laws now stand, I am not prepared to say, that unfavourable for the interests of the public service as this often proves, any other plan which the Executive can adopt, would be free from great objections.

The safest and best mode, it appears to me, is to require by law, that officers rendered unfit for duty, otherwise than by wounds received in battle, or not qualified for promotion to higher grades, should be placed on reduced pay out of the line of promotion. Justice and policy would require that great care should be taken against the exercise of such a power capriciously, or without a due regard to the rights of all.

The advantages of such a system in guarding officers against contracting disqualifying habits, in stimulating them to the active and zealous performance of duty, in exciting them to the acquisition of professional knowledge, and in securing to the meritorious the rewards of promotion without having the way blocked up by others, inferior and incompetent, would speedily develop themselves. Such a measure would reduce the expense of the navy, because, under existing laws, officers who do not perform duty, and are incapable of it, are in the receipt of the full pay of their rank.

Another great security for efficiency in the navy will be found in the education, and in affording the means of instruction to the officers.

The beneficial effects of the naval school at Annapolis upon the service are already beginning to be sensibly felt. The truth is admitted by all, that the services required of officers are more of the head than the hand. The result of experience in the army, that in proportion as education has been encouraged, and the means of acquiring it afforded, so have the character and efficiency of the officers been improved, will not fail to be confirmed in the navy. An accomplished naval officer must understand all the sciences connected with navigation; he ought to be familiar with steam, the steam-engine and mechanics, with gunnery, with chemistry, with the languages of all nations with whom his duty brings him in contact, and with the laws of his own country and of nations.

The lad who leaves his parents at the age of 14 or 15 years, to enter the service as a midshipman, cannot be expected to have laid the foundation even for so broad a superstructure of knowledge. The naval school promises to furnish the means of attaining these ends so important for the navy. It will produce, I trust, the same happy fruits of skill and knowledge which the military academy has produced for the army. In its present condition, and for some time to come, I do not apprehend that it will be necessary for Congress to regulate the details of the school by law, which could only be modified, if found injudicious, by the tardy process of repeal or amendment of the law. After a larger practical experience, the department, aided by the learned and judicious professors on duty at the school, and by the officers of the navy, who take a deep interest in the subject, will doubtless be prepared to present a more complete system. A necessary appendage to the institution is a vessel of the navy, fitted as a school of practice in gunnery and navigation. I earnestly recommend that the appropriation for the next fiscal year, for which an estimate has been submitted, may be made, and as no appropriation was made for the general wants of the school for the present year, I recommend the propriety of making it at the approaching session of Congress.

There are now in one of the rooms of the building occupied by the navy department, a considerable number of flags and other trophies, taken by the navy from public enemies in war. I recommend that authority may be given by Congress to the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, to cause them to be placed with suitable labels at the naval school in the care of the superintendent.

Under the Act of the 18th of April, 1814, these trophies have not been displayed to the public. The proposed disposition of them would have a good moral effect in exciting in the youthful bosoms of the midshipmen who are to be the future commanders of our ships of war, an emulation of the virtues and heroism of those of whose valour and skill these trophies are the memorial.

As soon as practicable after the proclamation of peace with Mexico, the seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, and boys in the naval service were reduced, by discharges, below the number of 7,500 as required by law.

By the 3rd section of the Act of August 3rd, 1848, the Secretary of the Navy was directed "forthwith to contract with Messrs. Dakin and Moody for the complete construction of a floating sectional dry dock, basin, and railways at Philadelphia;" with Messrs. Gilbert and Secor "for the complete construction of a balance floating dry dock, basin, and railway at Pensacola," and with one or the other of the said respective parties, "for the complete construction at the navy yard at Kittery of a floating dry dock, basin, and railway, upon either of the said plans, as the Secretary of the Navy may prefer as best adapted to the said yard."

Under the Act of March 3rd, 1847, these parties had respectively submitted to the navy department proposals for building at each of the 3 yards named a work according to each plan, with specifications suitable for docking a line of battle ship.

The Act of 1848 made these plans and specifications the basis of the contracts directed to be made, limited the cost to 10 per cent. over and above the prices respectively stated in their said proposals, and provided that, if the dimensions proposed should not be found adequate to docking war steamers of the largest class, at least 350 feet in length, "the Secretary of the Navy shall also, by further contract with said parties, enlarge the dimensions of said works at each yard to a capacity sufficient for that purpose."

The plans and specifications were not adequate to that object. The parties were, therefore, required to submit plans and specifications adapted to the increased dimensions of the works required by law. When presented, I caused their reference to 2 naval constructors and an engineer, and on their approval, in obedience to the direction of the law, the contracts were executed.

I adopted, for the navy yard at Kittery, the balance dock, with its appendages, because that plan of dock had been recommended by the Board of Commissioners in 1847. It was less expensive, and promised to be at least equally useful.

The increase of price consequent on the increase of dimensions was fairly calculated pro rata, and the contractors readily agreed to take the materials which had been procured for the works under the Act of 1847 at their cost to the Government. The prices stipulated to be paid for the works complete are :

At Pensacola, 921,937 dollars; at Philadelphia, 813,742 dollars; at Kittery, 732,905 dollars; total, 2,468,584 dollars.

By the Acts of March 3, 1847, and August 3, 1848, 750,000 dollars were appropriated for these objects. And an estimate is submitted for 650,000 dollars for the next fiscal year. In the contracts for such costly works, and especially as the appropriation made was known to be insufficient to meet the whole cost, it was deemed proper to provide for partial payments as the war progressed, with such security to indemnify the Government in the event of failure to comply on the part of the contractors, as it was thought reasonable to require.

Another year's experience has confirmed the anticipation of most valuable results from the establishment of the observatory. In a report which I had the honour to make from this department under date of November 25, 1844, I expressed the confident opinion "that in the process of time a most perfect set of charts may be supplied from the depôt to the navy, and to the commercial marine, entirely to be relied on for accuracy, at the mere cost of publication." The time has arrived sooner than I anticipated. The chambers of commerce of our principal cities, and intelligent merchants and navigators from all parts of our country, aware of the great importance of such an institution for publication of corrected and verified charts, are readily communicating the results of their observations and experience, and charts from the observatory are looked on with increasing interest.

Besides these important advantages, most valuable services are rendered at the observatory by the care and adjustment of chronometers, and other nautical instruments for the navy. The establishment is superintended and conducted with credit and success by naval officers, who have shown themselves entirely adequate to its duties. Estimates are submitted with a view to the publication of charts and a nautical almanac. I recommend them to the favourable consideration, and as a means of refunding a part of the expense; and that none may be restrained from applying for them, I recommend that authority be given to sell them when published at the cost of publication.

Under the several contracts made with this department, for the transportation of the mail in steamships convertible into war steamers, the parties interested have made great progress in the construction of their vessels and machinery.

The assignees of the contract for the route on the Pacific, have completed the number of steamers required by the contract. They have been inspected, reported on favourably, and accepted by the department, and have sailed from New York to engage in their most interesting service. The California, the first of this line, it is expected will be at Panama on the 1st day of January next, ready to make her first trip up the coast. The other 2 will follow, and there is no reason to apprehend that in the hands of the enterprising proprietors the contract will not be satisfactorily executed.

The proprietors of the line from New York to New Orleans, touching at Charleston, Savannah, and Havana, and from Havana to Chagres, have 2 of their large steamers launched and in a state of great forwardness, and have made extensive preparations for the construction of the others required by their contract.

I regarded it as a matter of great public importance that this line should commence its operations, at least to the extent of a monthly communication between Havana and Chagres, in time to connect with the Pacific line. The contractors, desirous to meet the wishes of the department, proposed to place on the route temporarily the ocean steamer Falcon. She has been inspected, reported on favourably, and accepted for the service, until the steamers constructed under contract shall be ready to take their places on the route.

The Falcon has sailed from New York—will touch at the intermediate points of the route, and deliver her mails and passengers in time to cross the isthmus, and join the steamer at Panama on the 1st of January.

The connected lines, in all their parts, will, it is expected, be in successful operation in the ensuing spring, and a regular communication established between New York and Oregon. The time occupied in the passage will not exceed 35 days, and, at no distant day, it is confidently believed that a regular communication will be established, by a connecting line of steamers, between San Francisco and China, making the passage in 20 days. This may readily be effected by means of the war steamers, now being constructed, as parts of the squadron in the East Indies and the Pacific, until individual enterprise shall have introduced steamers better suited for freight than passengers.

The transit of intelligence, merchandize, and passengers from China to Europe, by way of New York, can be effected, when these several lines shall be in operation in connection with the line from that city to Liverpool, in less than one-half the time now occupied in the voyage between those countries.

The communication, by steamers regularly plying on the 2 routes, now about to commence, cannot fail to increase our general commerce, and to bring to our Atlantic cities a large import of the precious metals, and this, with the facility afforded to our enterprising countrymen to visit or to emigrate to the rich territories on the Pacific, more than compensates the expense of the great undertaking.

As a most interesting part of the system, I recommend that authority be given to contract for the transportation of the mail, between New Orleans and Vera Cruz, in steamships convertible into war steamers. It will tend, by promoting social and commercial intercourse, to consolidate friendship between Mexico and The United States; promote the introduction of our great staples and manufactured goods into Mexico, and invite her rich products of specie to our cities. It will add, too, to the mails on all the connecting lines, increase the postal profits, and make available for public defence an additional number of war steamers.

The contractor for the line between New York and Liverpool has his vessels in a state of forwardness. He has 2 steamers, each of 2,800 tons measurement, ready for launching, and the frames of 2 others ready to take their places on the building ways as soon as launched, and the machinery in a corresponding state of forwardness. The department has not urged the contractor to undue haste in the construction of his steamers. In the present state of communication with Europe by other means, the thorough and skilful execution of the work on the hull and machinery of the ships is of more importance to the Government than their speedy completion. The contractor is prosecuting his undertaking with energy and judgment.

In execution of the 13th section of the Act of August 3, 1848, measures have been taken to remove the insane of the navy and marine corps, from the naval hospitals, to institutions established for the treatment and cure of persons thus sadly afflicted. It is believed that the object can be satisfactorily attained on the moderate terms prescribed by law. The whole number of insane persons in the hospitals is 13, and some of them are so quiet and harmless that it may not be necessary to remove them.

The supply of hemp on hand and deliverable under contracts existing rendered it unnecessary to advertise for any additional quantity for the present year. That American hemp can be prepared in quality equal to any in the world, has been established by experiment under the most rigid tests. The heavy outlay necessary in preparing for the production of the finer descriptions, suitable for naval purposes, has prevented many planters from engaging in annual contracts. The joint resolution of Congress of the 9th of May last, made a great improvement by authorizing navy contracts for American water-rotted hemp, for a term not exceeding 5 years, at a remunerating price.

I propose to invite by advertisement the hemp growers themselves to contract, and by accepting proposals for quantities of 25 tons and upwards, and in case of equality of bid, to give the preference to the farmer who grows it, to encourage the general adoption of the most improved process of preparing this important supply for the navy.

Proposals for furnishing machinery for the rope walk at the Memphis navy yard, have been invited by advertisement, and as soon as it can be manufactured and delivered, that important establishment will be put in operation.

This place for the delivering of hemp, for the use of the navy, will be far more convenient to the hemp growers generally, than that at which cordage is now manufactured, and the facility of access will justify the farmers in selling their produce directly to the Government, without the intervention of agencies, or the expense and loss of more distant transportation and frequent trans-shipments.

The military contributions collected in the Gulf of Mexico, at forts and places in the military occupation of the naval forces, amount to 131,835 dollars.

From the squadron in the Pacific, the accounts have not yet been received and adjusted. At Mazatlan, then in the occupation of the navy, Commodore Jones reports to the department, that up to the 17th June, 1848, the contributions collected at that port, amounted to 254,368 dollars. It is not probable that any considerable collections were made by officers of the navy at any other point on the Pacific coast.

The plan of settlement adopted, required the officers first to settle at the Navy Department, on vouchers, the accounts of contributions, charging them the amount received, and crediting their disbursements made for the service in prosecution of the war, as established by their vouchers. The collecting officer has been then required to settle at the Treasury his account as acting purser, where he is charged with money and stores received on public account, and credited with disbursements satisfactorily vouched other and beyond those already credited in his contribution account, and the balance thus appearing has, in each case, been paid into the Treasury, under its proper head of appropriation. The practical effect of this mode of settlement is to relieve appropriations made by law to the full amount of the contributions. There has not been a case of default.

The duty of collection, disbursement, and accounting, was performed by naval officers, without any allowance for the service. The Act of August 23, 1842, was construed to forbid any allowance beyond their pay as officers on duty, and no compensation has been made for a service, not within the general range of an officer's duties, and in some instances attended with positive and unavoidable loss. I repeat my recommendation, heretofore made, that authority be given to allow in each case a moderate commission on collections and disbursements, not exceeding in the aggregate a sum sufficient as a reasonable indemnity for the risk and trouble attendant on the duty.

I have the honour to submit the reports from the several bureaux of the department, with the estimates for the naval service, and for other objects placed under the control of this department, for the fiscal year ending with the 30th of June, 1850.

The gross amount of estimate is 8,858,856 dollars, of which the following, being for special objects, must be deducted to ascertain the probable annual expense of the navy:

	Dollars.
For transportation of the mails	874,600
For floating dry docks, basin, and railways ..	650,000
Completing stone dock at New York	490,000

Which sums being deducted, will leave for 1 year's expense of the naval service, including invalid and widow's pensions and the marine corps, 5,997,946 dollars.

I have the honour herewith to transmit a statement, from the Fourth Auditor's Office, showing the exact amount of appropriations and expenditures made for the entire public service, under the control of the Navy Department, in each year, from the 30th of June, 1844, to the 1st day of July, 1848, by which it will appear that the aggregate amount of expenditures, for the 2 fiscal years ending on the 30th of June, 1845 and 1846, amounted to 14,967,036 dollars, and the aggregate amount expended in the 2 years ending on the 30th June, 1846, was 21,598,661 dollars.

The first two were in time of peace; the last two embrace, with a trifling exception, the entire period of the war with Mexico. In the last two, it is worthy of remark that, for the construction of war steamers authorized by Congress, but not intended or expected to be employed in the war, and for other special objects, very considerable expenditures were made under appropriations for the purpose, so that the ordinary expenses of the naval service have been but slightly increased by the war with Mexico.

On the 1st day of July last, it appears that there remained in the Treasury an unexpended balance, of the year's appropriations for the naval service, of 3,295,630 dollars. Of this sum, 1,795,630 dollars were carried to the surplus fund, and, as authorized by law, the balance remains subject to expenditure, if required, during the current fiscal year.

It gives me pleasure to bear testimony, as the result of my own experience, to the efficient organization of the Navy Department. Personally, I acknowledge grateful obligations to the distinguished men who are and have been in charge of the several bureaux. The division of its duties secures to the civilian who may be at the head of the department the aid and counsel of experienced officers, whose professional information, at all times freely but unobtrusively given, is eminently useful to him in the conduct of the vast and diversified business under his direction. Besides the ships on the stocks, in ordinary, undergoing repairs, and in commission, and excluding navy yards, and other public lands required for purposes of the navy, with their costly improvements, the reports herewith submitted show that the public property on hand for naval purposes amounts, in the aggregate, to 9,400,370 dollars. The sub-division of duties and of superintendence amongst the several bureaux, has led to the introduction of judicious measures for the preservation of stores and materials, and the enforcement of strict accountability, and thus guarded against an immense waste of public property.

Under this wise distribution of duty and labour, economy and efficiency have been promoted, great improvements introduced in the purchase and inspection of timber, hemp, canvas, and other materials for construction, repair, and equipment; a series of well-conducted experiments in gunnery have been made; and ordnance, ordnance stores, and munitions of war of the most approved description, are procured.

A judicious system has been established and maintained for the necessary buildings at our navy yards, and for a uniform regulation of the quantity and prices of mechanical and other labour in public employment; and the navy is supplied with medicines, provisions, and clothing of the best quality, and on economical terms under regulations digested with care and skill.

There is, however, one great defect in the present organization of the Navy Department. The duty of ordering and detailing of officers for service, of the general superintendence of enlistments, of deciding primarily on applications for service, relief, or discharges, occupies too large a portion of the secretary's time, and cannot be so satisfactorily performed by him as by an officer of rank bearing the relation to the department and to the navy, which the adjutant-general does to the War Department and to the army. The establishment of a bureau for this most important duty would involve a trifling expense. There would not be required for the purpose any additional clerical labour; the register and clerks now engaged on the same duty would be sufficient. It cannot be doubted that the effects of such an improvement in the organization of the department would be highly beneficial.

A revised book of regulations for the navy is very much wanted. In the government of the navy, executive regulations form a large portion of the law of the service. Those now in force are contained in several publications, made at different times and in general orders of the department. It is often difficult for officers to know what they are. A revision and republication in one book would prove of great advantage to the service, and a small appropriation would probably cover the expense.

I renew my recommendation that the appointment of a small number of assistant pursers may be authorized by law.

A joint board of officers of the army and navy has been organized, with orders to proceed to the west coast, and make an examination of the coast of California and Oregon, with a view to the collection of the necessary information to determine on proper points for fortifications and a navy yard, when it shall be the pleasure of Congress to direct such establishments. A navy yard on the California coast, with suitable means for the repair of vessels, would, in my judgment, be of the highest public importance.

I submit herewith the annual estimates for the support of the marine corps.

In obedience to the direction of the Act of Congress of March 2, 1847, "at the termination of the Mexican war the marine corps was reduced, both in men and officers, to a number not exceeding the number in service at the date of the Act." The reduction of the men was effected by discharges, as they arrived in The United States. The duty of reducing the number of officers was more difficult. It was necessary to drop from the rolls 4 captains, 4 first lieutenants, and 4 second lieutenants. It was determined to organize a board of officers of rank superior to that of captain, and they were instructed to designate the officers who could be best spared from the service. They made their report, and the officers designated were dismissed without alleged fault. Copies of the instructions and report are herewith submitted. The efficiency of our ships of war would be promoted if the marine guard allowed by the regulation could be enlarged; and an increase of the rank and file of the corps from 1,000 to 1,500 would, in my judgment, be highly beneficial. The number of landsmen might be reduced to the same amount. Such an increase of the non-commissioned officers and privates would justify an additional number of commissioned officers equal to the number dismissed.

By the joint resolution of Congress, approved on the 10th of August, 1848, the officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, of the marine corps, who have served with the army in the war with Mexico, were placed, in all respects, as to bounty land and other remuneration, in addition to ordinary pay, on a footing with the officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians of the army.

On consultation with the Attorney-General, I felt constrained so to construe the resolution as not to include the marine guards, attached, under orders, to the ships of war in the Pacific and Gulf of Mexico. It did not appear to me that they could be regarded as serving with the army within the meaning of the resolution, as did the battalion of marines who marched into Mexico, and formed a part of the army. It is known that the marine guards of both squadrons were often on land, co-operating in the most gallant manner with the land forces, and encountering all the dangers and privations of the service with the army.

The discrimination has been painfully felt by them, and I may not have given to the terms of the resolution the enlarged construction which its framers intended. However that may be, I deemed it the safer course to wait, and submit the subject again to Congress. I am entirely satisfied that, while both classes of the marine officers and men did their duty, there was nothing in the service of the battalion serving with the army which entitled them to any higher privileges than their brethren, who, belonging to the ships, also served ashore. The number of these was not great; and I respectfully recommend that they be put on a footing, as to bounty land and other remuneration, with those who have already received what was given by law to the officers and men of the army. I have, &c.

The President of the United States.

CHAS. WM. SKINNER,

MESSAGE of the President of The United States, on the Opening of Congress.—Washington, December 4, 1849.

FELLOW CITIZENS OF THE SENATE, AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

SIXTY years have elapsed since the establishment of this Government, and the Congress of The United States again assembles to legislate for an empire of freemen. The predictions of evil prophets, who formerly pretended to foretell the downfall of our institutions, are now remembered only to be derided, and the United States of America at this moment present to the world the most stable and permanent Government on earth.

Such is the result of the labours of those who have gone before us. Upon Congress will eminently depend the future maintenance of our system of free government, and the transmission of it unimpaired to posterity.

We are at peace with all the other nations of the world, and seek to maintain our cherished relations of amity with them. During the past year we have been blessed, by a kind Providence, with an abundance of the fruits of the earth; and although the destroying angel, for a time, visited extensive portions of our territory with the ravages of a dreadful pestilence, yet the Almighty has at length deigned to stay his hand, and to restore the inestimable blessing of general health to a people who have acknowledged his power, deprecated his wrath, and implored his merciful protection.

While enjoying the benefits of amicable intercourse with foreign nations, we have not been insensible to the distractions and wars which have prevailed in other quarters of the world. It is a proper theme of thanksgiving to him who rules the destinies of nations, that we have been able to maintain, amidst all these contests, an independent and neutral position towards all belligerent Powers.

Our relations with Great Britain are of the most friendly character. In consequence of the recent alteration of the British Navigation Acts, British vessels, from British and other foreign ports, will, (under our existing laws,) after the 1st day of January next, be admitted to entry in our ports, with cargoes of the growth, manufacture, or production of any part of the world, on the same terms, as to duties, imposts, and charges, as vessels of The United States with their cargoes; and our vessels will be admitted to the same advantages in British ports, entering therein on the same terms as British vessels. Should no Order in Council disturb this legislative arrangement, the late Act of the British Parliament, by which Great Britain is brought within the terms proposed by the Act of Congress of the 1st of March, 1817, it is hoped will be productive of benefit to both countries.

A slight interruption of diplomatic intercourse, which occurred between this Government and France, I am happy to say, has been terminated, and our Minister there has been received. It is, therefore, unnecessary to refer now to the circumstances which led to that interruption. I need not express to you the sincere satisfaction with which we shall welcome the arrival of another Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from a sister republic to which we have so long been, and still remain, bound by the strongest ties of amity.

Shortly after I had entered upon the discharge of the executive duties, I was apprized that a war steamer, belonging to the German Empire was being fitted out in the harbour of New York, with the aid of some of our naval officers, rendered under the permission of the late Secretary of the Navy. This permission was granted during an armistice between that Empire and the Kingdom of Denmark, which had been engaged in the Schleswig-Holstein war. Apprehensive that this act of intervention, on our part, might be viewed as a violation of our neutral obligations, incurred by the Treaty with Denmark, and of the provisions of the Act of Congress of the 20th of April, 1818, I directed that no further aid should be rendered by any agent or officer of the navy; and I instructed the Secretary of State to apprise the Minister of the German Empire, accredited to this Government of my determination to execute the law of The United States, and to maintain the faith of Treaties with all nations. The correspondence which ensued between the Department of State and the Minister of the German Empire is herewith laid before you The execution of the law and the observance of the Treaty were deemed by me to be due to the honour of the country, as well as to the sacred obligations of the Constitution. I shall not fail to pursue the same course, should a similar case arise, with any other nation. Having avowed the opinion, on taking the oath of office, that in disputes between conflicting foreign Governments, it is our interest, not less than our duty, to remain strictly neutral, I shall not abandon it. You will perceive, from the correspondence submitted to you, in connection with this subject, that the course adopted in this case has been properly regarded by the belligerent Powers interested in the matter.

Although a Minister of The United States to the German Empire was appointed by my predecessor in August, 1848, and has for a long time been in attendance at Frankfort-on-the-Main; and although a Minister, appointed to represent that Empire, was received and accredited here, yet no such Government as that of the German Empire has been definitively constituted. Mr. Donelson, our representative at Frankfort, remained there several months, in the expectation that a union of the German States, under one Constitution or form of Government, might at length be organized. It is believed by those well acquainted with the existing relations between Prussia and the States of Germany, that no such union can be permanently established without her co-operation. In the event of the formation of such a union, and the organization of a central power in Germany, of which she should form a part, it would become necessary to withdraw our Minister at Berlin; but while Prussia exists as an independent kingdom, and diplomatic relations are maintained with her, there can be no necessity for the continuance of the mission to Frankfort. I have, therefore, recalled Mr. Donelson, and directed the archives of the legation at Frankfort to be transferred to the American legation at Berlin.

Having been apprized that a considerable number of adventurers were engaged in fitting out a military expedition, within The United States, against a foreign country, and believing, from the best information I could obtain, that it was destined to invade the Island of Cuba, I deemed it due to the friendly relations existing between The United States and Spain—to the Treaty between the 2 nations—to the laws of The United States, and, above all, to the American honour—to exert the lawful authority of this Government in suppressing the expedition and preventing the invasion. To this end, I issued, a proclamation, enjoining it upon the officers of The United States, civil and military, to use all lawful means within their power. A copy of that proclamation is herewith submitted. The expedition has been suppressed. So long as the Act of Congress of the 20th of April, 1818, which owes its existence to the law of nations and to the policy of Washington himself, shall remain on our statute book, I hold it to be the duty of the Executive faithfully to obey its injunctions.

While this expedition was in progress, I was informed that a foreigner, who claimed our protection, had been clandestinely, and, as was supposed, forcibly, carried off in a vessel from New Orleans to the Island of Cuba. I immediately caused such steps to be taken as I thought necessary, in case the information I had received should prove correct, to vindicate the honour of the country, and the right of every person seeking an asylum on our soil to the protection of our laws. The person alleged to have been abducted was promptly restored, and the circumstances of the case are now about to undergo investigation before a judicial tribunal. I would respectfully suggest that, although the crime charged to have been committed in this case is held odious, as being in conflict with our opinions on the subject of national sovereignty and personal freedom, there is no prohibition of it or punishment for it provided in any Act of Congress. The expediency of supplying this defect in our criminal code is, therefore, recommended to your consideration.

I have scrupulously avoided any interference in the wars and contentions which have recently distracted Europe.

During the late conflict between Austria and Hungary, there seemed to be a prospect that the latter might become an independent nation. However faint that prospect at the time appeared, I thought it my duty, in accordance with the general sentiment of the American people, who deeply sympathized with the Magyar patriots, to stand prepared, upon the contingency of the establishment by her of a permanent Government, to be the first to welcome independent Hungary into the family of nations. For this purpose, I invested an agent, then in Europe, with power to declare our willingness promptly to recognize her independence in the event of her ability to sustain it. The powerful intervention of Russia in the contest extinguished the hopes of the struggling Magyars. The United States did not, at any time, interfere in the contest; but the feelings of the nation were strongly enlisted in the cause, and by the sufferings of a brave people, who had made a gallant though unsuccessful effort to be free.

Our claims upon Portugal have been, during the past year, prosecuted with renewed vigour, and it has been my object to employ every effort of honourable diplomacy to procure their adjustment. Our late Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon, the Honourable George W. Hopkins, made able and energetic, but unsuccessful efforts, to settle these unpleasant matters of controversy, and to obtain indemnity for the wrongs which were the subjects of complaint. Our present Chargé d'Affaires at that Court will also bring to the prosecution of these claims ability and zeal. The revolutionary and distracted condition of Portugal in past times has been represented as one of the leading causes of her delay in indemnifying our suffering citizens. But I must now say it is matter of profound regret that these claims have not yet been settled. The omission of Portugal to do justice to the American claimants has now assumed a character so grave and serious that I shall shortly make it the subject of a special message to Congress, with a view to such ultimate action as its wisdom and patriotism may suggest.

With Russia, Austria, Prussia, Sweden, Denmark, Belgium, the Netherlands, and the Italian States, we still maintain our accustomed amicable relations.

During the recent revolutions in the Papal States, our Chargé d'Affaires at Rome has been unable to present his letter of credence; which, indeed, he was directed by my predecessor to withhold until he should receive further orders. Such was the unsettled condition of things in those States that it was not deemed expedient to give him any instructions on the subject of presenting his credential letter different from those with which he had been furnished by the late administration, until the 25th of June last; when, in consequence of the want of accurate information of the exact state of things at that distance from us, he was instructed to exercise his own discretion in presenting himself to the then existing Government, if, in his judgment, sufficiently stable; or, if not, to await further events. Since that period Rome has undergone another revolution, and he abides the establishment of a Government sufficiently permanent to justify him in opening diplomatic intercourse with it.

With the Republic of Mexico it is our true policy to cultivate the most friendly relations. Since the ratification of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, nothing has occurred of a serious character to disturb them. A faithful observance of the Treaty, and a sincere respect for her rights, cannot fail to secure the lasting confidence and friendship of that Republic. The message of my predecessor to the House of Representatives, of the 8th of February last, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of that body, a copy of a paper called a Protocol, signed at Queretaro on the 30th May, 1848, by the Commissioners of The United States and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Mexican Government, having been a subject of correspondence between the Department of State and the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of that Republic accredited to this Government, a transcript of that correspondence is herewith submitted.

The Commissioner on the part of The United States for marking the boundary between the 2 Republics, though delayed in reaching San Diego by unforeseen obstacles, arrived at that place within a short period after the time required by the Treaty, and was there joined by the Commissioner on the part of Mexico. They entered upon their duties ; and, at the date of the latest intelligence from that quarter, some progress had been made in the survey. The expenses incident to the organization of the Commission, and to its conveyance to the point where its operations were to begin, have so much reduced the fund appropriated by Congress that a further sum, to cover the charges which must be incurred during the present fiscal year, will be necessary. The great length of frontier along which the boundary extends, the nature of the adjacent territory, and the difficulty of obtaining supplies, except at or near the extremos of the line, render it also indispensable that a liberal provision should be made to meet the necessary charges during the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, 1851. I accordingly recommend this subject to your attention.

In the adjustment of the claims of American citizens on Mexico, provided for by the late Treaty, the employment of counsel on the part of the Government may become important for the purpose of assisting the Commissioners in protecting the interests of The United States. I recommend this subject to the early and favourable consideration of Congress.

Complaints have been made in regard to the inefficiency of the means provided by the Government of New Grenada for transporting The United States mail across the isthmus of Panama, pursuant to our Postal Convention with that Republic, of the 6th of March, 1844. Our Chargé d'Affaires at Bogota has been directed to make such representations to the Government of New Grenada as will, it is hoped, lead to a prompt removal of this cause of complaint.

The sanguinary civil war with which the Republic of Venezuela has for some time past been ravaged, has been brought to a close. In its progress the rights of some of our citizens, resident or trading there, have been violated. The restoration of order will afford the Venezuelan Government an opportunity to examine and redress these grievances, and others of longer standing, which our representatives at Caraccas have hitherto ineffectually urged upon the attention of that Government.

The extension of the coast of The United States on the Pacific, and the unexampled rapidity with which the inhabitants of California especially are increasing in numbers, have imparted new consequence to our relations with the other countries whose territories border upon that ocean. It is probable that the intercourse between those countries and our possessions in that quarter, particularly with the Republic of Chili, will become extensive and mutually advantageous in proportion as California and Oregon shall increase in population and wealth. It is desirable, therefore, that this Government should do everything in its power to foster and strengthen its relations with those States, and that the spirit of amity between us should be mutual and cordial.

I recommend the observance of the same course towards all other American States. The United States stand as the great American Power to which, as their natural ally and friend, they will always be disposed first to look for mediation and assistance, in the event of any collision between them and any European nation. As such, we may often kindly mediate in their behalf, without entangling ourselves in foreign wars or unnecessary controversies. Whenever the faith of our Treaties with any of them shall require our interference, we must necessarily interpose.

A Convention has been negotiated with Brazil, providing for the satisfaction of American claims on that Government, and it will be submitted to the Senate. Since the last session of Congress, we have received an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from that empire, and our relations with it are founded upon the most amicable understanding.

Your attention is earnestly invited to an amendment of our existing laws relating to the African Slave Trade, with a view to the effectual suppression of that barbarous traffic. It is not to be denied that this trade is still, in part, carried on by means of vessels built in The United States, and owned or navigated by some of our citizens. The correspondence between the Department of State and the Minister and Consul of The United States at Rio de Janeiro, which has from time to time been laid before Congress, represents that it is a customary device to evade the penalties of our laws by means of sea-letters. Vessels sold in Brazil, when provided with such papers by the Consul, instead of returning to The United States for a new register, proceed at once to the coast of Africa for the purpose of obtaining cargoes of slaves. Much additional information, of the same character, has recently been transmitted to the Department of State. It has not been considered the policy of our laws to subject an American citizen, who, in a foreign country, purchases a vessel built in The United States, to the inconvenience of sending her home for a new register before permitting her to proceed on a voyage. Any alteration of the laws which might have a tendency to impede the free transfer of property in vessels between our citizens, or the free navigation of those vessels between different parts of the world, when employed in lawful commerce, should be well and cautiously considered; but I trust that your wisdom will devise a method by which our general policy, in this respect, may be preserved, and at the same time the abuse of our flag, by means of sea-letters, in the manner indicated, may be prevented.

Having ascertained that there is no prospect of the reunion of the 5 States of Central America, which formerly composed the Republic of that name, we have separately negotiated with some of them Treaties of Amity and Commerce, which will be laid before the Senate.

A contract having been concluded with the State of Nicaragua, by a company composed of American citizens, for the purpose of constructing a ship canal through the territory of that State, to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, I have directed the negotiation of a Treaty with Nicaragua, pledging both Governments to protect those who shall engage in and perfect the work. All other nations are invited by the State of Nicaragua to enter into the same Treaty stipulations with her; and the benefit to be derived by each from such an arrangement will be the protection of this great inter-oceanic communication against any Power which might seek to obstruct it, or to monopolize its advantages. All States entering into such a Treaty will enjoy the right of passage through the canal on payment of the same tolls.

The work, if constructed under these guarantees, will become a bond of peace instead of a subject of contention and strife between the nations of the earth. Should the great maritime States of Europe consent to this arrangement (and we have no reason to suppose that a proposition so fair and honourable will be opposed by any), the energies of their people and ours will co-operate in promoting the success of the enterprise. I do not recommend any appropriation from the national treasury for this purpose; nor do I believe that such an appropriation is necessary. Private enterprise, if properly protected, will complete the work, should it prove to be feasible. The parties who have procured the charter from Nicaragua for its construction, desire no assistance from this Government beyond its protection; and they profess that, having examined the proposed line of communication, they will be ready to commence the undertaking whenever that protection shall be extended to them. Should there appear to be reason, on examining the whole evidence, to entertain a serious doubt of the practicability of constructing such a canal, that doubt could be speedily solved by an actual exploration of the route.

Should such a work be constructed, under the common protection of all nations, for equal benefits to all, it would be neither just nor expedient that any great maritime State should command the communication. The territory through which the canal may be opened ought to be freed from the claims of any foreign Power. No such Power should occupy a position that would enable it hereafter to exercise so controlling an influence over the commerce of the world, or to obstruct a highway which ought to be dedicated to the common uses of mankind.

The routes across the isthmus at Tehuantepec and Panama are also worthy of our serious consideration. They did not fail to engage the attention of my predecessor. The negotiator of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was instructed to offer a very large sum of money for the right of transit across the isthmus of Tehuantepec. The Mexican Government did not accede to the proposition for the purchase of the right of way, probably because it had already contracted with private individuals for the construction of a passage from the Guasacualco river to Tehuantepec. I shall not renew any proposition to purchase, for money, a right which ought to be equally secured to all nations, on payment of a reasonable toll to the owners of the improvement, who would, doubtless, be well contented with that compensation and the guarantees of the maritime States of the world, in separate Treaties negotiated with Mexico, binding her and them to protect those who should construct the work. Such guarantees would do more to secure the completion of the communication through the territory of Mexico than any other reasonable consideration that could be offered; and, as Mexico herself would be the greatest gainer by the opening of this communication between the Gulf and the Pacific Ocean, it is presumed that she would not hesitate to yield her aid, in the manner proposed, to accomplish an improvement so important to her own best interests.

We have reason to hope that the proposed railroad across the isthmus at Panama will be successfully constructed, under the protection of the late Treaty with New Grenada, ratified and exchanged by my predecessor on the 10th day of June, 1848, which guarantees the perfect neutrality of the isthmus, and the rights of sovereignty and property of New Grenada over that territory, "with a view that the free transit from ocean to ocean may not be interrupted or embarrassed" during the existence of the Treaty. It is our policy to encourage every practicable route across the isthmus, which connects North and South America, either by railroad or canal, which the energy and enterprise of our citizens may induce them to complete; and I consider it obligatory upon me to adopt that policy, especially in consequence of the absolute necessity of facilitating intercourse with our possessions on the Pacific.

The position of the Sandwich Islands, with reference to the territory of The United States on the Pacific, the success of our persevering and benevolent citizens who have repaired to that remote quarter in christianizing the natives and inducing them to adopt a system of government and laws suited to their capacity and wants, and the use made by our numerous whale ships of the harbours of the islands as places of resort for obtaining refreshments and repairs, all combine to render their destiny peculiarly interesting to us. It is our duty to encourage the authorities of those islands in their efforts to improve and elevate the moral and political condition of the inhabitants; and we should make reasonable allowances for the difficulties inseparable from this task. We desire that the islands may maintain their independence, and that other nations should concur with us in this sentiment. We could in no event be indifferent to their passing under the dominion of any other power. The principal commercial States have in this a common interest, and it is to be hoped that no one of them will attempt to interpose obstacles to the entire independence of the islands.

The receipts into the Treasury for the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June last were, in cash, 48,830,097 dollars, and in treasury notes funded, 10,833,000 dollars, making an aggregate of 59,663,097 dollars; and the expenditures for the same time were, in cash, 46,798,667 dollars, and in treasury notes funded, 10,833,000 dollars, making an aggregate of 57,631,667 dollars.

The accounts and estimates which will be submitted to Congress in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, show that there will probably be a deficit occasioned by the expenses of the Mexican war and Treaty, on the 1st day of July next, of 5,828,121 dollars, and on the 1st day of July, 1851, of 10,547,092 dollars, making in the whole a probable deficit, to be provided for, of 16,375,214 dollars. The extraordinary expenses of the war with Mexico, and the purchase of California and New Mexico, exceed in amount this deficit, together with the loans heretofore made for those objects. I therefore recommend that authority be given to borrow whatever sum may be necessary to cover that deficit. I recommend the observance of strict economy in the appropriation and expenditure of public money.

I recommend a revision of the existing tariff, and its adjustment on a basis which may augment the revenue. I do not doubt the right or duty of Congress to encourage domestic industry, which is the great source of national as well as individual wealth and prosperity. I look to the wisdom and patriotism of Congress for the adoption of a system which may place home labour at last on a sure and permanent footing, and, by due encouragement of manufactures, give a new and increased stimulus to agriculture, and promote the development of our vast resources and the extension of our commerce. Believing that to the attainment of these ends (as well as the necessary augmentation of the revenue and the prevention of frauds) a system of specific duties is best adapted, I strongly recommend to Congress the adoption of that system, fixing the duties at rates high enough to afford substantial and sufficient encouragement to our own industry, and, at the same time, so adjusted as to insure stability.

The question of the continuance of the sub-treasury system is respectfully submitted to the wisdom of Congress. If continued, important modifications of it appear to be indispensable.

For further details and views on the above, and other matters connected with commerce, the finances, and revenue, I refer to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury

No direct aid has been given by the general Government to the improvement of agriculture, except by the expenditure of small sums for the collection and publication of agricultural statistics, and for some chemical analyses, which have been, thus far, paid for out of the patent fund. This aid is, in my opinion, wholly inadequate. To give to this leading branch of American industry the encouragement which it merits, I respectfully recommend the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau, to be connected with the Department of the Interior. To elevate the social condition of the agriculturist, to increase his prosperity, and to extend his means of usefulness to his country, by multiplying his sources of information, should be the study of every statesman, and a primary object with every legislator.

No civil government having been provided by Congress for California, the people of that territory, impelled by the necessities of their political condition, recently met in convention, for the purpose of forming a constitution and state government, which the latest advices give me reason to suppose has been accomplished; and it is believed they will shortly apply for the admission of California into the Union as a sovereign State. Should such be the case, and should their constitution be conformable to the requisitions of the constitution of the United States, I recommend their application to the favourable consideration of Congress.

The people of New Mexico will also, it is believed, at no very distant period, present themselves for admission into the Union. Preparatory to the admission of California and New Mexico, the people of each will have instituted for themselves a republican form of government, "laying its foundations in such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

By awaiting their action, all causes of uneasiness may be avoided and confidence and kind feeling preserved. With a view of maintaining the harmony and tranquillity so dear to all, we should abstain from the introduction of those exciting topics of a sectional character which have hitherto produced painful apprehensions in the public mind; and I repeat the solemn warning of the first and most illustrious of my predecessors against furnishing "any ground for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations."

A collector has been appointed at San Francisco, under the Act of Congress extending the revenue laws over California; and measures have been taken to organize the custom-houses at that and the other ports mentioned in that Act, at the earliest period practicable. The collector proceeded overland, and advices have not yet been received of his arrival at San Francisco. Meanwhile, it is understood that the customs have continued to be collected there by officers acting under the military authority, as they were during the administration of my predecessor. It will, I think, be expedient to confirm the collections thus made, and direct the avails (after such allowances as Congress may think fit to authorize) to be expended within the territory, or to be paid into the Treasury for the purpose of meeting appropriations for the improvement of its rivers and harbours.

A party engaged on the coast survey was dispatched to Oregon in January last. According to the latest advices, they had not left California; and directions have been given to them, as soon as they shall have fixed on the sites of the 2 light-houses and the buoys authorized to be constructed and placed in Oregon, to proceed without delay to make reconnoissances of the most important points on the coast of California, and especially to examine and determine on sites for light-houses on that coast, the speedy erection of which is urgently demanded by our rapidly increasing commerce.

I have transferred the Indian Agencies from Upper Missouri and Council Bluffs to Santa Fé and Salt Lake, and have caused to be appointed sub-agents in the valleys of the Gila, the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. Still further legal provisions will be necessary for the effective and successful extension of our system of Indian intercourse over the new territories.

I recommend the establishment of a branch mint in California, as it will, in my opinion, afford important facilities to those engaged in mining, as well as to the Government in the disposition of the mineral lands.

I also recommend that commissions be organized by Congress to examine and decide upon the validity of the present subsisting land titles in California and New Mexico; and that provision be made for the establishment of offices of surveyor-general in New Mexico, California, and Oregon, and for the surveying and bringing into market the public lands in those territories. Those lands, remote in position and difficult of access, ought to be disposed of on terms liberal to all, but especially favourable to the early emigrants.

In order that the situation and character of the principal mineral deposits in California may be ascertained, I recommend that a geological and mineralogical exploration be connected with the linear surveys, and that the mineral lands be divided into small lots suitable for mining, and be disposed of, by sale or lease, so as to give our citizens an opportunity of procuring a permanent right of property in the soil. This would seem to be as important to the success of mining as of agricultural pursuits.

The great mineral wealth of California, and the advantages which its ports and harbours, and those of Oregon, afford to commerce, especially with the islands of the Pacific and Indian oceans, and the populous regions of Eastern Asia, make it certain that there will arise, in a few years, large and prosperous communities on our western coast.

It therefore becomes important that a line of communication, the best and most expeditious which the nature of the country will admit, should be opened within the territory of The United States, from the navigable waters of the Atlantic on the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific. Opinion, as elicited and expressed by 2 large and respectable Conventions, lately assembled at St. Louis and Memphis, points to a railroad as that which, if practicable, will best meet the wishes and wants of the country. But while this, if in successful operation, would be a work of great national importance, and of a value to the country which it would be difficult to estimate, it ought also to be regarded as an undertaking of vast magnitude and expense, and one which must, if it be indeed practicable, encounter many difficulties in its construction and use. Therefore, to avoid failure and disappointment; to enable Congress to judge whether, in the condition of the country through which it must pass, the work be feasible; and, if it be found so, whether it should be undertaken as a national improvement or left to individual enterprise; and, in the latter alternative, what aid, if any, ought to be extended to it by the Government, I recommend, as a preliminary measure, a careful reconnoissance of the several proposed routes by a scientific corps, and a report as to the practicability of making such a road, with an estimate of the cost of its construction and support.

For further views on these and other matters connected with the duties of the Home Department I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

I recommend early appropriations for continuing the river and harbour improvements which have been already begun, and also for the construction of those for which estimates have been made, as well as for examinations and estimates preparatory to the commencement of such others as the wants of the country, and especially the advance of our population over new districts and the extension of commerce, may render necessary. An estimate of the amount which can be advantageously expended within the next fiscal year under the direction of the Bureau of Topographical Engineers accompanies the report of the Secretary of War, to which I respectfully invite the attention of Congress.

The cession of territory made by the late Treaty with Mexico has greatly extended our exposed frontier, and rendered its defence more difficult. That Treaty has also brought us under obligations to Mexico, to comply with which a military force is requisite. But our military establishment is not materially changed, as to its efficiency, from the condition in which it stood before the commencement of the Mexican war. Some addition to it will therefore be necessary; and I recommend to the favourable consideration of Congress an increase of the several corps of the army at our distant western posts, as proposed in the accompanying report of the Secretary of War.

Great embarrassment has resulted from the effect upon rank, in the army, heretofore given to brevet and staff commissions. The views of the Secretary of War on this subject are deemed important, and, if carried into effect, will, it is believed, promote the harmony of the service. The plan proposed for retiring disabled officers, and providing an asylum for such of the rank and file as from age, wounds, and other infirmities occasioned by service, have become unfit to perform their respective duties, is recommended as a means of increasing the efficiency of the army, and as an act of justice due from a grateful country to the faithful soldier.

The accompanying report of the Secretary of the Navy presents a full and satisfactory account of the condition and operations of the naval service during the past year. Our citizens engaged in the legitimate pursuits of commerce have enjoyed its benefits. Wherever our national vessels have gone they have been received with respect, our officers have been treated with kindness and courtesy, and they have on all occasions pursued a course of strict neutrality, in accordance with the policy of our Government.

The naval force at present in commission is as large as is admissible, with the number of men authorized by Congress to be employed.

I invite your attention to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy on the subject of a re-organization of the navy, in its various grades of officers, and the establishing of a retired list for such of the officers as are disqualified for active and effective service. Should Congress adopt some such measure as is recommended, it will greatly increase the efficiency of the navy, and reduce its expenditures.

I also ask your attention to the views expressed by him in reference to the employment of war steamers, and in regard to the contracts for the transportation of The United States' mails and the operation of the system upon the prosperity of the navy.

By an Act of Congress passed August 14, '1848, provision was made for extending post office and mail accommodations to California and Oregon. Exertions have been made to execute that law; but the limited provisions of the Act, the inadequacy of the means it authorizes, the ill adaptation of our post-office laws to the situation of that country, and the measure of compensation for services allowed by those laws, compared with the prices of labour and rents in California, render those exertions, in a great degree, ineffectual. More particular and efficient provision by law is required on this subject.

The Act of 1845, reducing postage, has now, by its operation during 4 years, produced results fully showing that the income from such reduced postage is sufficient to sustain the whole expense of the service of the Post Office Department, not including the cost of transportation in mail steamers on the lines from New York to Chagres, and from Panama to Astoria, which have not been considered by Congress as properly belonging to the mail service.

It is submitted to the wisdom of Congress whether a further reduction of postage should not now be made, more particularly on the letter correspondence. This should be relieved from the unjust burden of transporting and delivering the franked matter of Congress, for which public service provision should be made from the Treasury: I confidently believed that a change may safely be made; reducing all single-letter postage to the uniform rate of 5 cents, regardless of distance, without thereby imposing any greater tax on the Treasury than would constitute a very moderate compensation for this public service; and I therefore respectfully recommend such a reduction. Should Congress prefer to abolish the franking privilege entirely, it seems probable that no demand on the Treasury would result from the proposed reduction of postage. Whether any further diminution should now be made, or the result of the reduction to 5 cents, which I have recommended, should be first tested, is submitted to your decision.

Since the commencement of the last session of Congress, a postal Treaty with Great Britain has been received and ratified, and such regulations have been formed by the Post Office Departments of the 2 countries, in pursuance of that Treaty, as to carry its provisions into full operation. The attempt to extend this same arrangement, through England, to France, has not been equally successful; but the purpose has not been abandoned.

For a particular statement of the condition of the Post Office Department, and other matters connected with that branch of the public service, I refer you to the report of the Postmaster-General.

By the Act of the 3rd of March, 1849, a Board was constituted to make arrangements for taking the 7th census, composed of the Secretary of State, the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General; and it was made the duty of this Board "to prepare, and cause to be printed, such forms and schedules as might be necessary for the full enumeration of the inhabitants of The United States; and also proper forms and schedules for collecting, in statistical tables, under proper heads, such information as to mines, agriculture, commerce, manufactures, education, and other topics, as would exhibit a full view of the pursuits, industry, education, and resources of the country." The duties enjoined upon the Census Board thus established having been performed, it now rests with Congress to enact a law for carrying into effect the provision of the Constitution which requires an actual enumeration of the people of The United States within the ensuing year.

Among the duties assigned by the constitution to the general Government is one of local and limited application, but not on that account the less obligatory; I allude to the trust committed to Congress as the exclusive legislator and sole guardian of the interests of the district of Columbia. I beg to commend these interests to your kind attention. As the national metropolis, the city of Washington must be an object of general interest; and founded, as it was, under the auspices of him whose immortal name it bears, its claims to the fostering care of Congress present themselves with additional strength. Whatever can contribute to its prosperity must enlist the feelings of its constitutional guardians, and command their favourable consideration.

Our Government is one of limited powers, and its successful administration eminently depends on the confinement of each of its co-ordinate branches within its own appropriate sphere. The first section of the constitution ordains that "all legislative powers therein granted shall be vested in a Congress of The United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." The Executive has authority to recommend (not to dictate) measures to Congress. Having performed that duty, the executive department of the Government cannot rightfully control the decision of Congress on any subject of legislation, until that decision shall have been officially submitted to the President for approval. The check provided by the constitution in the clause conferring the qualified veto will never be exercised by me, except in the cases contemplated by the fathers of the Republic. I view it as an extreme measure, to be resorted to only in extraordinary cases—as where it may become necessary to defend the executive against the encroachments of the legislative power, or to prevent hasty and inconsiderate or unconstitutional legislation. By cautiously confining this remedy within the sphere prescribed to it in the cotemporaneous expositions of the framers of the constitution, the will of the people, legitimately expressed on all subjects of legislation, through their constitutional organs, the senators and representatives of The United States, will have its full effect. As indispensable to the preservation of our system of self-government, the independence of the representatives of the States and the people is guaranteed by the constitution; and they owe no responsibility to any human power but their constituents. By holding the representative responsible only to the people, and exempting him from all other influences, we elevate the character of the constituent, and quicken his sense of responsibility to his country. It is under these circumstances only that the elector can feel that, in the choice of the law-maker, he is himself truly a component part of the sovereign power of the nation. With equal care we should study to defend the rights of the executive and judicial departments. Our Government can only be preserved in its purity by the suppression and entire elimination of every claim or tendency of one co-ordinate branch to encroachment upon another. With the strict observance of this rule and the other injunctions of the constitution; with a sedulous inculcation of that respect and love for the Union of the States which our fathers cherished and enjoined upon their children; and with the aid of that overruling Providence which has so long and so kindly guarded our liberties and institutions, we may reasonably expect to transmit them, with their innumerable blessings, to the remotest posterity.

But attachment to the Union of the States should be habitually fostered in every American heart. For more than half a century, during which kingdoms and empires have fallen, this Union has stood unshaken. The patriots who formed it have long since descended to the grave; yet still it remains, the proudest monument to their memory, and the object of affection and admiration with every one worthy to bear the American name. In my judgment, its dissolution would be the greatest of calamities; and to avert that should be the study of every American. Upon its preservation must depend our own happiness and that of countless generations to come. Whatever dangers may threaten it, I shall stand by it and maintain it in its integrity to the full extent of the obligations imposed and the power conferred upon me by the constitution.

The following is a translation of the decree :

Republic of Venezuela.

JOSE TADEO MONAGAS, General of Division, President of the Republic, &c., &c., &c.

Considering ;

1st. That the first and most important of the attributes of the Executive Power is to preserve internal order and tranquillity;

2nd. That ex-General José Antonio Paez, not yet satisfied with the tears and blood he has caused to be shed, has just disembarked at the Vela de Coro, with the view of renewing hostilities against the Republic, pretending by his silly obstinacy in so criminal a design, to involve Venezuela in the calamities of another cruel and devastating war; and,

3rd. That, under such circumstances, the Government ought to hasten to dictate all such measures as may be within the sphere of its attributes, in order opportunely to obstruct the consequences of that invasion, to spare greater expense and sacrifices, and opportunely to bring back to their duties those who, departing therefrom a second time, show themselves more hostile and stubborn;

I decree:

ART. I. The coast of the province of Coro, extending from the disemboguing of the River Yaracuy to the mouth of the River Oribono, is declared in a state of blockade.

Only Clause. A maritime division, at present composed of 4 armed vessels of war, the strength of which will be gradually augmented, will enforce the blockade.

II. The vessels of war of friendly and neutral nations shall be allowed to enter into, depart from, and remain at the port of Vela de Coro, the Government being persuaded that they will not in any manner aid the enemies of the Republic.

III. For the penal effects of the blockade, 8 days are fixed for the Island of Curaçao and its dependencies St. Thomas and Santa Cruz; 30 days for vessels proceeding from Demerara and from the Antilles, not specified; 40 days for those proceeding from the United States of America; and 60 days for those coming from European ports.

Only Clause. During the lapse of time specified in this Article, the blockading squadron will limit itself to making known the existence of the blockade to all merchant vessels proceeding from the said points, for which purpose it will note down this fact in the certificate of registry, or on the document which accredits the nationality or property of the visited vessel, and also that it has been duly notified of the existence of the said blockade; and only in the event of attempting, after this notification, to enter at any point comprised within the limits of the blockade shall there be room for the detention and judgment of such vessel, in conformity with the laws and international right.

IV. The Secretary of State in the Departments of War and Marine is charged with the execution of this decree.

Given, signed with my hand, sealed with the seal of the Executive Power, and countersigned by the Secretary of State in the Departments of War and Marine, in Caracas, on the 9th of July, 1849, 20th year of our Law, and 39th of Independence.

TRAITE de Commerce et de Navigation, entre la Sardaigne et le Hanôvre.—Paris, le 11 Août, 1845.

[Ratifications échangées à Paris, le 7 Octobre, 1845.]

SA Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, et Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanôvre, désirant consolider de plus en plus la bonne intelligence qui a si heureusement subsisté jusqu'ici entre les 2 Couronnes, et étendre les relations commerciales entre leurs sujets respectifs, sont convenues d'entrer en négociation pour conclure un Traité de Navigation et de Commerce.

A cet effet Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne a muni de ses pleins pouvoirs le Marquis Antoine Brignole-Sale, Chevalier Grand Cordon de son Ordre Religieux et Militaire de Saint Maurice et Saint Lazare, Chevalier Grand-Croix des Ordres de Saint Joseph de Toscane, et du Daneborg de Danemark, Chevalier des Ordres de l'Aigle Blanc de Pologne et de Saint Stanislas de Russie, son Ministre d'Etat et son Ambassadeur auprès de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanôvre a également muni de ses pleins

pouvoirs le Sieur Bodo Albert de Stockhausen, Chevalier de son Ordre des Guelphes, son Chambellan, Conseiller de Légation, et Ministre résidant auprès de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français ;

Lesquels Plénipotentiaires, après avoir échangé lesdits pleins pouvoirs, qu'ils ont trouvé en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté et signé les Articles suivants :

ART. I. Les navires Sardes qui entreront chargés ou sur lest dans les ports Hanôvriens, et réciproquement les navires Hanôvriens, qui entreront chargés ou sur lest dans les ports Sardes seront, quelle que soit leur provenance ou leur destination, traités, à leur entrée, à leur sortie, et pendant leur séjour, sur le même pied que les navires nationaux, pour tout ce qui concerne les droits de tonnage, de pilotage, de balisage, de quai, de port, de rade, de quarantaine, d'expédition, et généralement pour tous les droits ou charges quelconques qui affectent le navire, que ces droits soient perçus par l'Etat, les provinces, arrondissements, ou communes, ou qu'ils le soient par des établissements publics, ou particuliers, ou par des corporations.

II. Pour pouvoir jouir des avantages que leur assure le présent Traité les bâtiments respectifs de l'un et de l'autre Etat devront préalablement justifier de leur nationalité, d'après les lois et règlements établis dans chacun des 2 Etats.

Afin d'assurer l'accomplissement de cette clause les Hautes Parties Contractantes se communiqueront dans le moindre délai possible les documents exigés pour ladite justification, se réservant de donner mutuellement l'une à l'autre connaissance des modifications successives que chacune d'elles jugerait à propos d'apporter à cette partie de la législation maritime.

III. En tout ce qui concerne le placement des navires, leur chargement et leur déchargement dans les ports, bassins, rades, ou hâvres, rivières, et canaux de l'un des 2 Etats, il ne sera accordé aux navires nationaux aucune faveur, ni aucun privilège qui ne le soient également à ceux de l'autre Etat.

IV. Les navires de l'un des 2 Etats, qui entreront dans les ports de l'autre auront la faculté de ne charger ou décharger qu'une partie de leur cargaison, et de se rendre ensuite dans les autres ports du même Etat pour y compléter leur chargement ou déchargement.

V. Les navires de l'un des 2 Etats qui seront forcés d'entrer dans les ports de l'autre, soit par le mauvais temps, soit par suite de bris ou de naufrage, y jouiront, tant pour le bâtiment que pour la cargaison, des faveurs et immunités que la législation de chacun des 2 pays accorde à ses propres navires en pareille circonstance, pourvu que la nécessité de la relâche soit dûment constatée, et qu'ils ne se livrent à aucune opération de commerce en chargeant ou en déchargeant des marchandises. Il est bien entendu toutefois que les déchargements et rechargements, motivés par l'obligation de réparer le navire, ne seront point considérés comme opérations de commerce.

Les Consuls et autres agents Consulaires respectifs seront admis à surveiller les opérations relatives au sauvetage de la cargaison, à la réparation, au ravitaillement ou à la vente, s'il y a lieu, des navires entrés en relâche, ou échoués, ou naufragés à la côte.

VI. Les navires de l'un des 2 Etats, qui entreront dans un des ports de l'autre pour y passer l'hiver, ne payeront d'autres, ni de plus forts droits de navigation que ceux auxquels sont assujettis en pareille circonstance les navires nationaux.

Si l'hivernage, la réparation du navire, ou d'autres circonstances exigeaient que la cargaison fût mise en entrepôt en tout ou en partie, il ne sera payé d'autres, ni de plus forts droits, impôts, ou charges quelconques sur ce qui en sortira pour être rembarqué et réexporté soit sur le même navire, soit sur tout autre, que les droits, impôts, et charges qui seraient perçus en pareil cas pour les cargaisons des navires nationaux.

VII. La navigation de côte ou de cabotage est exclusivement réservée, dans les 2 pays, aux navires nationaux.

VIII. Toute espèce d'objets de commerce provenant du sol ou de l'industrie des Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, ou de tout autre pays, qui pourront être légalement importés dans les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanovre par les bâtiments Hanovriens; et réciproquement toute espèce d'objets de commerce provenant du sol ou de l'industrie des Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanovre, ou de tout autre pays, qui pourront être légalement importés dans les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne par les bâtiments Sardes, soit que ces bâtiments viennent directement des ports du pays dont ils portent le pavillon, soit qu'ils viennent de tout autre pays étranger, pourront également y être importés par les bâtiments de l'autre Partie Contractante, sans que ceux-ci soient tenus à payer d'autres ou de plus forts droits, de quelque espèce ou dénomination que ce soit, perçus au nom et au profit du Gouvernement, des autorités locales, ou d'établissements publics et particuliers quelconques, que ceux que ces mêmes objets payeraient dans le même cas s'ils étaient importés par des bâtiments nationaux.

IX. De la même manière toute espèce d'objets de commerce qui pourront être légalement exportés des ports de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne sur des bâtiments Sardes, pourront également en être exportés sur des bâtiments Hanovriens; et réciproquement toute espèce d'objets de commerce qui pourront être légalement exportés des ports de Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanovre sur des bâtiments Hanovriens pourront également en être exportés sur des bâtiments Sardes sans payer d'autres ou de plus forts droits ou charges, de quelque espèce ou dénomination que ce soit, perçus au nom et au profit du Gouvernement, des autorités locales ou d'établissements publics et particuliers quelconques, que ceux qui seraient payés pour les mêmes objets s'ils étaient exportés sur des bâtiments nationaux.

X. Aucune priorité ou préférence ne sera accordée directement ou indirectement par l'une ou l'autre des Parties Contractantes, ni par aucune compagnie, corporation, ou individu, agissant en son nom ou sous son autorité, pour l'achat d'aucun objet de commerce légalement importé dans le territoire de l'autre, en considération de la nationalité du bâtiment qui aurait importé lesdits objets, soit qu'il appartienne à l'une ou à l'autre des Parties, dans les ports de laquelle ces objets de commerce auront été importés.

XI. Il ne pourra être imposé par l'une des Parties Contractantes au commerce et à la navigation de l'autre aucun droit nouveau ou plus élevé, ni aucune entrave ou restriction quelconque, qui ne soient appliqués également, et dans la même mesure, au commerce et à la navigation de tout autre pays.

Si l'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes accorde par la suite à quelqu'autre Etat des faveurs en matière de douanes ou de navigation autres ou plus grandes que celles stipulées dans la présente Convention, les mêmes faveurs deviendront communes à l'autre Partie, qui en jouira gratuitement, si la concession est gratuite, ou en donnant un équivalent, si la concession est conditionnelle. Dans ce dernier cas la fixation de l'équivalent fera l'objet d'une Convention spéciale entre les Hautes Parties Contractantes.

XII. Les Consuls, Vice-Consuls, et autres agents commerciaux respectifs seront autorisés à requérir l'assistance des autorités locales pour la recherche, l'arrestation, la détention, et l'emprisonnement des déserteurs des bâtiments de guerre et marchands de leurs pays. Ils s'adresseront, à cet effet, aux tribunaux, juges, et officiers compétents, et ils réclameront par écrit les déserteurs sus-mentionnés en prouvant, par la communication des registres des bâtiments ou rôles des équipages, ou par d'autres documents officiels, que ces individus ont fait partie des équipages. Cette réclamation ainsi prouvée, l'extradition ne sera point refusée. Les déserteurs, lorsqu'ils auront été arrêtés seront mis à la disposition desdits Consuls ou autres agents commerciaux, et pourront être enfermés dans les prisons publiques, à la réquisition et aux frais de ceux qui les réclament, pour être retenus jusqu'au moment où ils pourront être rendus aux bâtiments auxquels ils appartiennent, ou pour être renvoyés dans leurs pays sur des bâtiments nationaux ou autres. Mais s'ils ne sont pas renvoyés dans l'espace de 3 mois à compter du jour de leur arrestation, ils seront mis en liberté, et ne pourront plus être arrêtés pour la même cause. Toutefois, si le déserteur se trouvait avoir commis quelque crime ou délit dans le pays de son arrestation, il pourra être sursis à son extradition jusqu'à ce que le tribunal saisi de cette affaire ait rendu sa sentence, et que celle-ci ait reçu son exécution.

XIII. Les navires Sardes et leurs chargements seront traités, quant au taux et au mode de perception des droits de Stade ou de Brunshausen, sur le pied des navires et chargements des nations les plus favorisées, à l'exception seulement de la Ville de Hambourg et du Royaume de Danemark pour le Duché de Holstein, riverain de l'Elbe.

XIV. Les dispositions du présent Traité seront applicables à la Principauté de Monaco. En conséquence les avantages accordés au commerce et au pavillon Sardes dans les Etats Hanôvriens y seront également accordés aux marchandises et aux navires appartenant aux sujets de ladite Principauté; et, par contre, les avantages accordés au commerce et au pavillon Hanôvriens dans les Etats Sardes seront également établis dans la Principauté de Monaco en faveur du commerce et du pavillon Hanôvriens.

XV. Le présent Traité aura force et vigueur pendant 8 années, à dater du jour de l'échange des ratifications. Si un an avant l'expiration de ce terme le présent Traité n'est pas dénoncé, il continuera à être obligatoire, d'année en année, jusqu'à ce que l'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes ait annoncé à l'autre, mais un an à l'avance, son intention d'en faire cesser les effets.

XVI. Les ratifications du présent Traité seront échangées dans le délai de 3 mois, ou plutôt, si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signé en double original et y ont apposé les sceaux de leurs armes.

Fait à Paris, le 11 du mois d'Août de l'an de grâce, 1845.

ARTICLE SEPARÉ.

Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne jugeant convenable, par des motifs particuliers, de continuer à percevoir pour à présent des droits différentiels au détriment des pavillons étrangers sur les blés, l'huile d'olive, et le vin importés directement de la Mer Noire, des ports de la Mer Adriatique, et de ceux de la Méditerranée jusqu'au Cap Trafalgar, non-obstant les Articles I et VIII du présent Traité, il est spécialement entendu et établi entre les Hautes Parties Contractantes que Sa Majesté le Roi de Hanovre aura pleine et entière liberté d'établir au détriment du pavillon Sarde des droits différentiels équivalents sur les mêmes articles importés des mêmes pays, dans le cas où la perception des droits différentiels continuerait à être exercée au détriment du pavillon Hanôvrien par Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne au-delà de l'espace de 4 ans, à compter du jour de l'échange des ratifications du présent Traité et Article Séparé. Mais ces droits différentiels équivalents, de quelque espèce qu'ils soient, sur lesdits articles de commerce cesseront d'être perçus du moment où le Gouvernement de Hanovre aura été informé d'office de la cessation des droits différentiels de la part de Sa Majesté Sarde.

Le présent Article Séparé aura la même force et valeur que s'il avait été inséré mot-à-mot dans le Traité signé aujourd'hui, et sera ratifié en même temps.

En foi de quoi, nous Soussignés, en vertu de nos pleins pouvoirs, avons signé le présent Article Séparé et y avons apposé les sceaux de nos armes.

TRAITE de Commerce et de Navigation, entre la Sardaigne et le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg.—Berlin, le 21 Avril. 1846.

[Ratifications échangées à Berlin, le 17 Juin, 1846.]

SA Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, et Son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg, désirant consolider de plus en plus la bonne intelligence qui a si heureusement subsisté jusqu'ici entre les 2 pays, et étendre les relations commerciales entre leurs sujets respectifs, sont convenus d'entrer en négociation pour conclure un Traité de Navigation et de Commerce.

A cet effet Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne a muni de ses pleins pouvoirs le Comte Charles Rossi, Commandeur de son Ordre Religieux et Militaire de Saint Maurice et de Saint Lazare, Grand' Croix de l'Aigle Rouge de Prusse et du Mérite de Saint Michel de Bavière, Major-Général dans ses Armées, son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse;

Et Son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg a également muni de ses pleins pouvoirs le Colonel et Chambellan de Röder, Commandeur de l'Ordre Grand Ducal du Mérite, Commandeur de 1re Classe des Ordres d'Ernest de Saxe, du Lion de Brunswic, du Christ, de Saint Benoît d'Avis et de la Conception de Portugal, Chevalier de l'Ordre de 2de Classe de l'Aigle Rouge de Prusse, et Chevalier de l'Ordre du Mérite de Bavière, Ministre Résident de Son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg près la Cour de Prusse;

Lesquels Plénipotentiaires après avoir échangé lesdits pleins pouvoirs, qu'ils ont trouvé en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté et signé les Articles suivants :

ART. I. Les navires Sardes qui entreront chargés ou sur lest dans les ports du Grand Duché d'Oldenbourg, et réciproquement les navires Oldenbourgeois qui entreront chargés ou sur lest dans les ports Sardes, seront, quelle que soit leur provenance ou leur destination, traités, à leur entrée, à leur sortie, et pendant leur séjour, sur le même pied que les navires nationaux, pour tout ce qui concerne les droits de tonnage, de pilotage, de balisage, de quai, de port, de rade, de quarantaine, d'expédition, et généralement pour tous les droits ou charges quelconques qui affectent le navire, que ces droits soient perçus par l'Etat, les Provinces, arrondissements ou communes, ou qu'ils le soient par des établissements publics ou particuliers, ou par des corporations.

II. Pour pouvoir jouir des avantages que leur assure le présent Traité les bâtiments respectifs de l'un et de l'autre Etat devront préalablement justifier de leur nationalité.

Les Hautes Parties Contractantes se réservent d'échanger des déclarations qui indiqueront d'une manière claire et précise, les papiers et documents dont les Etats respectifs exigent que leurs navires soient munis, et de se donner mutuellement l'une à l'autre connaissance des modifications successives que chacune d'elles jugerait à propos d'apporter à cette partie de la législation maritime.

III. En tout ce qui concerne le placement des navires, leur chargement et leur déchargement dans les ports, bassins, rades ou havres, rivières et canaux de l'un des 2 Etats, il ne sera accordé aux navires nationaux aucune faveur, ni aucun privilège qui ne le soient également à ceux de l'autre Etat.

IV. Les navires de l'un des 2 Etats, qui entreront dans les ports de l'autre, auront la faculté de ne charger ou décharger qu'une partie de leur cargaison, et de se rendre ensuite dans les autres ports du même Etat pour y compléter leur chargement ou déchargement.

V. Les navires de l'un des 2 Etats, qui seront forcés d'entrer dans les ports de l'autre, soit par le mauvais temps, soit par suite de bris ou de naufrage, y jouiront, tant pour le bâtiment, que pour la cargaison, des faveurs et immunités que la législation de chacun des 2 pays accorde à ses propres navires en pareille circonstance, pourvu que la nécessité de la relâche soit dûment constatée, et qu'ils ne se livrent à aucune opération de commerce en chargeant ou en déchargeant des marchandises.

Il est bien entendu toutefois que les déchargements et rechargements motivés par l'obligation de réparer le navire, ne seront point considérés comme opérations de commerce.

Les Consuls et autres agents consulaires respectifs seront admis à surveiller les opérations relatives au sauvetage de la cargaison, à la réparation, au ravitaillement ou à la vente, s'il y a lieu, des navires entrés en relâche, ou échoués, ou naufragés à la côte.

VI. Les navires de l'un des 2 Etats, qui entreront dans un des ports de l'autre pour y passer l'hiver, ne payeront d'autres, ni de plus forts droits de navigation, que ceux auxquels sont assujettis en pareille circonstance les navires nationaux.

Si l'hivernage, la réparation du navire, au d'autres circonstances exigeaient que la cargaison fût mise en entrepôt en tout ou en partie, il ne sera payé d'autres, ni de plus forts droits, impôts, ou charges quelconques sur ce qui en sortira pour être rembarqué et ré-exporté, soit sur le même navire, soit sur tout autre, que les droits, impôts, et charges qui seraient perçus en pareil cas pour les cargaisons des navires nationaux.

VII. La navigation de côte ou de cabotage est exclusivement réservée, dans les 2 pays, aux navires nationaux.

VIII. Toute espèce d'objets de commerce provenant du sol ou de l'industrie des Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, ou de tout autre pays, qui pourront être légalement importés dans les Etats de Son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg par les bâtiments Oldenbourgeois, et réciproquement toute espèce d'objets de commerce provenant du sol ou de l'industrie des Etats de Son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg, ou de tout autre pays, qui pourront être légalement importés dans les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne par les bâtiments Sardes, soit que ces bâtiments viennent directement des ports du pays dont ils portent le pavillon, soit qu'ils viennent de tout autre pays étranger, pourront également y être importés par les bâtiments de l'autre Partie Contractante, sans que ceux-ci soient tenus à payer d'autres ou de plus forts droits, de quelque espèce ou dénomination que ce soit, perçus au nom et au profit du Gouvernement, des Autorités locales, ou d'établissements publics et particuliers quelconques, que ceux que ces mêmes objets payeraient dans le même cas s'ils étaient importés par des bâtiments nationaux.

IX. De la même manière toute espèce d'objets de commerce qui pourront être légalement exportés des ports de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne sur des bâtiments Sardes, pourront également en être exportés sur des bâtiments Oldenbourgeois ; et réciproquement toute espèce d'objets de commerce qui pourront être légalement exportés des ports de Son Altesse Royale le Grand Duc d'Oldenbourg sur des bâtiments Oldenbourgeois, pourront également en être exportés sur des bâtiments Sardes, sans payer d'autres ou de plus forts droits ou charges de quelque espèce ou dénomination que ce soit, perçus au nom et au profit du Gouvernement, des Autorités locales, ou d'établissements publics et particuliers quelconques, que ceux qui seraient payés pour les mêmes objets, s'ils étaient exportés sur des bâtiments nationaux.

X. Aucune priorité ou préférence ne sera accordée directement ou indirectement par l'une ou l'autre des Parties Contractantes, ni par aucune compagnie, corporation, ou individu, agissant en son nom ou sous son autorité, pour l'achat d'aucun objet de commerce légalement importé dans le territoire de l'autre, en considération de la nationalité du bâtiment qui aurait importé lesdits objets, soit qu'il appartienne à l'une ou à l'autre des Parties, dans les ports de laquelle ces objets de commerce auront été importés.

XI. Il ne pourra être imposé par l'une des Parties Contractantes au commerce et à la navigation de l'autre aucun droit nouveau ou plus élevé, ni aucune entrave ou restriction quelconque, qui ne soient appliqués également et dans la même mesure au commerce et à la navigation de tout autre pays.

Si l'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes accorde par la suite à quelqu'autre Etat des faveurs en matière de douanes ou de navigation autres ou plus grandes que celles stipulées dans la présente Convention, les mêmes faveurs deviendront communes à l'autre Partie, qui en jouira gratuitement, si la concession est gratuite, ou en donnant un équivalent, si la concession est conditionnelle. Dans ce dernier cas la fixation de l'équivalent fera l'objet d'une Convention spéciale entre les Hautes Parties Contractantes.

XII. Les Consuls, Vice-Consuls et autres Agents commerciaux respectifs, seront autorisés à requérir l'assistance des autorités locales pour la recherche, l'arrestation, la détention, et l'emprisonnement des déserteurs des bâtiments de guerre et marchands de leur pays. Ils s'adresseront, à cet effet, aux tribunaux, juges, et officiers compétents, et ils réclameront par écrit les déserteurs sus-mentionnés, en prouvant par la communication des registres des bâtiments ou rôles des équipages, ou par d'autres documents officiels, que ces individus ont fait partie des équipages. Cette réclamation ainsi prouvée, l'extradition ne sera point refusée. Les déserteurs, lorsqu'ils auront été arrêtés, seront mis à la disposition desdits Consuls ou autres agents commerciaux, et pourront être enfermés dans les prisons publiques, à la requisition et aux frais de ceux qui les réclament, pour être retenus jusqu'au moment où ils pourront être rendus aux bâtiments auxquels ils appartiennent, ou pour être renvoyés dans leur pays sur des bâtiments nationaux ou autres. Mais s'ils ne sont pas renvoyés dans l'espace de 3 mois à compter du jour de leur arrestation, ils seront mis en liberté, et ne pourront plus être arrêtés pour la même cause. Toutefois, si le déserteur se trouvait avoir commis quelque crime ou délit dans les pays de son arrestation, il pourra être sursis à son extradition jusqu'à ce que le tribunal, saisi de cette affaire, ait rendu sa sentence, et que celle-ci ait reçu son exécution.

XIII. Les dispositions du présent Traité seront applicables à la Principauté de Monaco. En conséquence les avantages accordés au commerce et au pavillon Sarde dans les Etats du Grand Duché d'Oldenbourg, y seront également accordés aux marchandises et aux navires appartenants aux sujets de ladite Principauté; et par contre, les avantages accordés au commerce et au pavillon Oldenbourgeois dans les Etats Sardes seront également établis dans la Principauté de Monaco, en faveur du commerce et du pavillon Oldenbourgeois.

XIV. Le présent Traité aura force et vigueur pendant 8 années à dater du jour de l'échange des ratifications. Si un an avant l'expiration de ce terme le présent Traité n'est pas dénoncé, il continuera à être obligatoire d'année en année, jusqu'à ce que l'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes ait annoncé à l'autre, mais un an à l'avance, son intention d'en faire cesser les effets.

XV. Les ratifications du présent Traité seront échangées à Berlin dans le délai de 3 mois, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signé en double original, et y ont apposé les sceaux de leurs armes.

ARTICLE ADDITIONNEL.

Berlin, le 14 Mai, 1846.

Les sujets de chacune des Parties Contractantes pourront librement disposer par testament, donation, ou autrement des biens personnels qu'il posséderont dans les Etats de l'autre, et leurs héritiers qui seront sujets de l'autre nation, pourront succéder à leurs biens personnels soit en vertu d'un testament, soit ab intestato, et en prendre possession soit en personne, soit par d'autres agissant en leur nom; ils pourront en outre en disposer à leur gré, en ne payant à cet effet que les mêmes impositions, taxes, ou droits auxquels sont assujettis dans des cas semblables les habitants du pays où se trouvent lesdits biens. En cas d'absence des héritiers, on donnera pour la conservation desdits biens les mêmes dispositions qu'on prendrait en pareil cas pour les propriétés des natifs du pays jusqu'à ce que le propriétaire ait fait les arrangements nécessaires pour recueillir l'héritage. S'il s'élevait des contestations entre différents prétendants quant aux droits que chacun d'eux soutiendrait d'avoir sur la succession, elles seront décidées en dernier ressort par les Juges et selon les lois du pays où ces biens seront situés. Et si par la mort d'une personne possédant des biens-fonds sur le territoire d'une des 2 Parties Contractantes, ces biens-fonds venaient à passer, par la dernière volonté de leur possesseur, à un sujet de l'autre Partie qui par sa qualité d'étranger serait inhabile à les posséder, on lui accordera un délai convenable pour les vendre, pour en retirer et emporter le produit sans obstacles d'aucune sorte, et sans qu'on lui impose au profit du Gouvernement respectif aucune taxe, imposition, ou droits plus forts que ceux auxquels seraient soumis en pareil cas les habitants du pays où ces biens sont situés.

Le présent Article Additionnel aura la même force et valeur que s'il avait été inséré mot-à-mot dans le Traité signé le 21 Avril dernier et sera ratifié en même temps.

En foi de quoi, nous Soussignés, en vertu de nos pleins pouvoirs, avons signé le présent Article Additionnel, et y avons apposé les sceaux des nos armes.

TRAITE de Commerce et de Navigation, entre les Pays-Bas et le Royaume des 2 Siciles.—Conclu à Naples le 17 Novembre, 1847.

[Ratifications échangées à Naples, le 29 Février, 1848.]

SA Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, d'une part, et Sa Majesté le Roi des 2 Siciles, d'autre part, désirant faciliter et étendre, d'une manière réciproquement avantageuse, les relations de navigation et de commerce entre les 2 pays, sont convenus dans ce but d'entrer en négociation, et ont nommé à cet effet pour leurs Plénipotentiaires respectifs, savoir :

Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Monsieur le Comte Augusto de Liedekerke Beaufort, Commandeur, etc. Chambellan de Sa Majesté et son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près le St. Siège et Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne ;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, Don Justin Fortunato, Chevalier Grand-Croix, etc. Ministre Secrétaire d'Etat des Finances ;

Don Michel Gravina et Requesenz, Prince de Comitini, Chevalier Grand-Croix, etc. Gentilhomme Ordinaire de la Chambre et Ministre Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté, et Don Antoine Spinelli, des Princes de Scalea, Commandeur, etc. Gentilhomme de la Chambre de Sa Majesté, Membre de la Consulte Générale, Surintendant des Archives du Royaume et Intendant de la province de Naples ;

Lesquels, après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, sont convenus des Articles suivants :

ART. I. Les sujets respectifs des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes auront le droit de voyager, de résider, et de trafiquer, dans toutes les parties des Etats de chacune d'elles ; à cet effet, ils y jouiront de la même sûreté et de la même protection dont jouissent les habitants du pays, sauf les précautions de police qui sont ou seront employées envers les nations les plus favorisées.

Ils auront droit d'occuper des maisons et des magasins, et de disposer de leur propriété personnelle, de quelque nature et dénomination qu'elle soit, par vente, par donation, échange ou testament, et de quelque autre manière que ce soit, sans qu'il soit élevé à cet égard le plus léger obstacle ou empêchement.

Ils ne seront tenus sous aucun prétexte à payer d'autres taxes ou impôts que ceux qui sont ou pourront être payés par les nations les plus favorisées.

Ils sont exempts de tout service militaire, soit de terre, soit de mer, d'emprunts forcés et de toute contribution extraordinaire, à moins qu'elle ne soit générale et établie par une loi.

Leurs habitations, magasins et tout ce qui en fait partie et leur appartient comme objet de commerce ou de résidence, seront respectés.

Ils ne seront pas soumis à des perquisitions vexatoires. On ne pourra faire aucun examen, ni aucune inspection arbitraire de leurs livres, papiers et comtes de commerce, et les opérations de ce genre ne pourront être pratiquées qu'en vertu d'une sentence légale des tribunaux compétents.

Les Hautes Parties Contractantes s'engagent mutuellement à garantir en toute occasion aux sujets de l'une d'elles, qui résident dans les domaines de l'autre, la conservation de leurs propriétés et de leur sûreté personnelle, de la même manière dont elle est garantie à leurs sujets et aux sujets ou citoyens des nations les plus favorisées.

II. Les sujets de l'une des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes pourront dans les Etats de l'autre traiter librement toutes leurs affaires par eux-mêmes, ou les commettre à la gestion de toutes les personnes qu'ils nommeront pour leur servir d'intermédiaires, facteurs ou agents, sans être entravés, en quoi que ce soit, dans le choix de ces personnes.

Ils ne seront tenus à payer aucun salaire, ni aucune rémunération à quiconque n'aurait pas été choisi par eux.

Pleine liberté sera laissée dans tous les cas à l'acheteur et au vendeur de ne négocier ensemble et de fixer le prix d'un objet ou d'une marchandise quelconque importée dans les Etats de l'une ou de l'autre des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes, ou qui devrait en être exportée, sauf en général les affaires pour lesquelles les lois et usages du pays réclameront l'emploi d'agents spéciaux.

III. Les sujets d'une des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes ne seront pas soumis dans les Etats de l'autre à un système de visite et de perquisition de la part des officiers de l'administration des droits d'entrée et de sortie, plus rigoureux que celui auquel sont soumis les propres sujets et les sujets ou citoyens des nations les plus favorisées.

IV. Les capitaines et patrons des navires respectifs seront réciproquement exempts de toute obligation de recourir, dans les ports respectifs des 2 Etats, aux expéditionnaires officiels et ils pourront en conséquence se servir, soit de leurs consuls, soit des expéditionnaires désignés par ceux-ci ; sauf les cas spéciaux prévus par les lois des 2 Etats, aux dispositions desquelles la présente clause n'apporte aucune dérogation.

V. Il y aura liberté réciproque de navigation et de commerce entre le Royaume des Pays-Bas et celui des 2 Siciles.

Les Navires Néerlandais venant directement d'un des ports des Pays-Bas en Europe, qui entreront chargés dans les ports du Royaume des 2 Siciles ou qui en sortiront, et réciproquement les navires des 2 Siciles venant directement d'un des ports des 2 Siciles, qui entreront chargés dans les ports du Royaume des Pays-Bas en Europe ou qui en sortiront, seront traités sur le pied des nationaux, en ce qui concerne les droits de tonnage, de pavillon, de port, d'ancrage, de pilotage, de remorque, de balise, de phare, d'écluse, de canal, de quarantaine, d'entrepôt, ou autres charges qui pèsent sur la coque du navire, sous quelque dénomination que ce soit, perçus au nom ou au profit de la couronne, du Gouvernement, de fonctionnaires publics, communautés ou établissements quelconques.

Les dispositions qui précèdent seront également applicables aux navires sur lest des 2 nations, quel que soit le lieu de leur départ ou celui de leur destination.

Seront complètement affranchis de droit de tonnage et d'expédition dans les ports des 2 Etats respectifs les navires qui, entrés sur lest ou avec chargement en relâche forcée dans un port, en sortiront sans avoir rompu charge ou fait aucune opération de commerce.

En cas de relâche forcée, ne seront pas considérés, comme opération de commerce, le débarquement et le rechargement des marchandises pour la réparation du navire, le transbordement sur un autre navire dans le cas où le premier serait devenu impropre à la navigation, ainsi que les dépenses nécessaires au ravitaillement des équipages.

VI. En ce qui concerne le placement des navires, leur chargement et déchargement dans les ports, rades et bassins, et généralement pour toutes les formalités et dispositions quelconques, auxquelles peuvent être soumis les navires de commerce, leur équipage et leur chargement, il est convenu qu'il sera accordé aux navires nationaux aucun privilège ni aucune faveur, qui ne le soit également à ceux de l'autre partie ; la volonté des Hautes Parties Contractantes étant que, sous ce rapport aussi, leurs navires soient traités sur le pied d'une parfaite égalité.

VII. Tous objets de commerce dont l'importation ou l'exportation pourra légalement avoir lieu dans les Etats des Hautes Parties Contractantes par les navires nationaux, pourront également y être importés ou en être exportés par des navires appartenant à l'autre partie.

Les produits du sol et de l'industrie des 2 pays et des colonies Néerlandaises, venant des ports des Pays-Bas en Europe, ne payeront d'autres ni de plus forts droits d'entrée et de transit, à l'importation tant par mer que par terre, que les produits similaires importés de tout autre pays.

Toutes les marchandises du Royaume des Pays-Bas, importées d'un port Néerlandais en Europe, sous pavillon national, dans le Royaume des 2 Siciles, ou d'un port du Royaume des 2 Siciles, sous son pavillon, dans un des dits ports du Royaume des Pays-Bas, jouiront réciproquement des mêmes exemptions, restitutions, primes, ou autres faveurs, ne payeront respectivement d'autres droits, et ne seront assujetties à d'autres formalités que si l'importation avait lieu sous pavillon national. Il en sera de même pour les marchandises de toute espèce du Royaume des Pays-Bas, exportées d'un port Néerlandais sous pavillon du Royaume des 2 Siciles et de ce Royaume sous pavillon des Pays-Bas. Il est d'ailleurs bien entendu que cette disposition ne s'applique qu'à la navigation directe entre les 2 pays.

Les marchandises importées dans les ports des Pays-Bas ou du Royaume des 2 Siciles par navires de l'une ou de l'autre partie, pourront y être destinées à la consommation, au transit ou à la réexportation, où celle-ci est autorisée, ou enfin être mis en entrepôt, dans les lieux où respectivement il en existe, au gré du propriétaire ou de ses ayants-cause ; le tout aux mêmes conditions et sans être assujetties à des droits de magasinage, de surveillance ou autres de cette nature plus forts que ceux auxquels seront soumises les marchandises apportées par navires nationaux.

VIII. Le Royaume des 2 Siciles ne possédant pas de colonies, et par conséquent le principe d'une entière réciprocité, servant de base au présent Traité, ne pouvant leur être appliqué, il a été convenu entre les Hautes Parties Contractantes qu'en compensation de l'admission dans le Royaume des 2 Siciles de tous les produits du sol et de l'industrie des colonies Néerlandaises, venant des ports des Pays-Bas, aux termes de l'Article VII^{me}, les huiles d'olive et le soufre raffiné, importés directement dans les ports Néerlandais par des bâtiments de l'un ou de l'autre pays, jouiront d'une réduction de 50 cents sur le droit établi par le tarif de douane.

IX. Tous privilèges, faveurs, ou immunités accordés en matière de commerce ou de navigation par les Hautes Parties Contractantes à d'autres Puissances, seront accordées pareillement à leurs sujets respectifs.

Si toutefois ces faveurs, privilèges, ou immunités avaient été accordés à d'autres nations à titre onéreux, les Hautes Parties Contractantes pourront les réclamer également pour leurs sujets moyennant une compensation équivalente à fixer de commun accord.

X. Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas déclare que le commerce des sujets de Sa Majesté le Roi des 2 Siciles n'est entravé en aucune manière par un monopole ou privilège exclusif d'achat ou de vente quelconque dans ses Etats en Europe, et qu'ainsi les sujets de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles ont dans ces Etats la faculté pleine et illimitée de vendre ou d'acheter selon leur libre arbitre, et Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas s'engage à ne pas changer l'ordre établi actuellement sous ce rapport dans ses Etats précités.

Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles promet de son côté qu'une liberté pareille de vendre et d'acheter sera assurée aux sujets de Sa Majesté Néerlandaise, commerçant ou résidant dans le Royaume des 2 Siciles.

Sont exceptés toutefois les privilèges royaux pour les tabacs, sels, cartes à jouer, poudre à tirer et salpêtre. Bien entendu qu'aucune des stipulations du présent Traité n'est contraire au droit des Hautes Parties Contractantes d'accorder des brevets d'invention ou de perfectionnement, soit aux inventeurs, soit à d'autres, et que la réciprocité établie par le présent Traité ne s'étend pas aux primes que les 2

Hautes Parties Contractantes peuvent respectivement accorder à leurs propres sujets, dans le but d'encourager la construction des navires nationaux.

XI. Dans tous les cas où le droit imposé dans un des 2 Royaumes sur les marchandises de l'autre ne sera pas une somme déterminée, mais proportionnée à la valeur des marchandises, ce droit ad valorem sera déterminé et fixé de la manière suivante. Celui qui importe donnera à l'entrée de la douane une déclaration, indiquant la valeur des marchandises, telle qu'il croit convenable, et dans le cas où les employés de la douane jugeraient cette évaluation insuffisante, ils auront le droit de prendre les marchandises, en payant à celui qui les importe leur valeur d'après la déclaration qui a été faite, avec un surplus de 10 pour cent, et les employés lui restitueront en même temps tous les droits qui auraient été payés sur les marchandises.

XII. Les stipulations du présent Traité ne s'appliqueront point à la navigation de côte ou cabotage, qui a lieu d'un port à l'autre dans chacun des 2 pays.

Toutefois les navires de chacune des Parties Contractantes pourront prendre ou débarquer une partie de leur cargaison dans un port des Etats de l'autre, et compléter ensuite leur chargement ou débarquer le reste dans un ou plusieurs autres ports des mêmes Etats, sans payer d'autres droits que ceux auxquels sont soumis les navires nationaux et ceux des nations les plus favorisées.

XIII. La nationalité des navires respectifs sera connue et admise, de part et d'autre, d'après les lois et règlements particuliers à chaque Etat, au moyen des titres délivrés par les autorités compétentes aux capitaines ou patrons.

XIV. Si un bâtiment de guerre ou de commerce fait naufrage sur les côtes des Etats de l'une ou de l'autre des Hautes Parties Contractantes, ce bâtiment ou ses débris, ainsi que les effets ou marchandises sauvés, ou leur produit s'ils ont été vendus, seront fidèlement restitués aux propriétaires, à leur demande ou à celle des agents légalement autorisés par eux, et s'il ne se trouve ni propriétaire, ni agent sur le lieu, alors les effets, les marchandises ou leur produit, ainsi que tous les papiers trouvés à bord du navire naufragé, seront consignés au Consul ou Vice-Consul Néerlandais ou des 2 Siciles du district où le naufrage aura eu lieu; et ce Consul, Vice-Consul, propriétaire, ou agent payera seulement les frais encourus pour la conservation de la propriété, ainsi que les droits de sauvetage et de quarantaine à payer en cas de naufrage d'un navire national, et les effets et marchandises sauvés du naufrage ne seront passibles d'aucun droit de douane, à moins qu'ils ne soient livrés à la consommation.

En cas de réclamation légale par rapport à de telles marchandises ou effets naufragés, la dite réclamation serait soumise à la décision des tribunaux compétents du pays.

XV. Dans le cas de mort dans les Etats des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes d'un de leurs nationaux, les Agents Consulaires respectifs seront avertis par les autorités judiciaires compétentes, du jour et de l'heure où l'on procédera à la mise ou à la levée des scellés et à la rédaction de l'inventaire, afin qu'ils puissent y assister.

XVI. Les Consuls respectifs pourront requérir la remise des effets délaissés par leurs nationaux, et celle-ci devra avoir lieu immédiatement, pour autant que les ayants-droit à la succession ouverte ne seront pas présents en personne, ou ne seront pas représentés comme tels d'une manière légale.

En cas d'une opposition à la mise en possession de la part des créanciers du défunt, cette mise en possession n'en devra pas moins avoir lieu immédiatement, dès que les oppositions auront été levées.

XVII. Le présent Traité sera en vigueur pendant 10 années, à compter du jour de l'échange des ratifications, et ainsi jusqu'à l'expiration de 12 mois après qu'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes aura annoncé à l'autre son intention d'en faire cesser l'effet; chacune des Hautes Parties Contractantes se réservant le droit de faire cette déclaration à la fin du susnommé terme de 10 ans, ou à toute époque subséquente.

XVIII. Le présent Traité sera ratifié et les ratifications en seront échangées à Naples dans l'espace de 3 mois, à compter du jour de la signature, ou même avant, si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs ont signé le présent Traité et y ont apposé leurs cachets.

Fait à Naples, en double expédition, le 17 Novembre, de l'an 1847.

LES Soussignés, Comte de Liedekerke Beaufort, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas auprès les Cours de Rome et de Turin, et le Duc de Serracapriola Ministre Secrétaire d'Etat des Affaires Etrangères et Président du Conseil des Ministres de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, en procédant cejourd'hui à l'échange des ratifications du Traité de Commerce et de Navigation conclu entre leurs Majestés et signé à Naples, le 17 Novembre, par les Plénipotentiaires respectifs, ont déclaré, en vertu de l'autorisation de leurs souverains, et au nom des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes, qu'il est bien expressément entendu, que dans le dernier alinéa de l'Article X, paragraphe 4, ainsi

conçu, " que la réciprocité établie par le présent Traité ne s'étend pas aux primes que les 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes peuvent accorder à leurs propres sujets dans le but d'encourager la construction des navires nationaux," il ne s'agit point, quant à cette dernière disposition, de primes ou diminutions quelconques accordés ou à accorder sur les droits de navigation, ou d'entrée et de sortie, mentionnés dans les Articles V et VII du Traité en question; l'intention formelle des Parties Contractantes étant qu'une parfaite égalité et réciprocité existera relativement à ces droits, dans tous les cas spécifiés dans les susdit Articles V et VII.

La présente déclaration aura force et valeur comme si elle était insérée mot à mot dans le Traité.

the Atrevida, under the Spanish flag, has been adjudicated in the Mixed Courts of Sierra Leone. The mate and 3 of the crew (being all who were brought here) of this vessel, were, in accordance with the above-mentioned decree, sent prisoners to the Regente of the Courts of Justice of the Canary Islands; but I have not yet heard the result of their trial.

It is a fact also, that many of the Brazilian slavers, when captured, are found without either ship's papers or flag, thereby preventing the disclosure of the names of the owners of the ship and cargo, also the master, supercargo, and officers; and as the system of trying slave-vessels in the Vice-Admiralty Court does not expose the names of parties to the public, they of course prefer that to the Mixed Courts, where all the parties concerned are annually exposed in the papers laid before Parliament.

During the past year no case was brought before the British and Spanish, British and Netherlands, British and Chilean, British and Bolivian, British and Argentine, British and Uruguayan, Mixed Courts of Justice.

No slaves were emancipated by the Mixed Courts during the year.

The total number of cases prosecuted before the Mixed Commissions since their establishment here in June, 1819, up to the present date, is 529, whereof 502 were cases of condemnation, and 27 were either withdrawn, dismissed, or restored to the claimants.

In the same period, there have been emancipated by these Mixed Courts, 64,625 slaves; of whom 56,935 have been registered here.

I have the honour to inclose for your Lordship's information, an official copy, obtained from his Honour the Chief Justice, of a return of vessels captured on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade, and adjudicated in the Vice-Admiralty Court at Sierra Leone, from the 30th June to the 31st December, 1848, amounting to 17 vessels, which, with the 14 adjudicated in the same court during the previous half year, gives a total of 31 vessels adjudicated in the Vice-Admiralty Court of Sierra Leone, in the year just ended; under the Acts of the 5 George IV, cap. 113; 2 and 3 Victoria, cap. 73; and the Act of the 8 and 9 Victoria, cap. 122.

Of the 31 vessels, 14 were captured under the Brazilian flag, 15 were without either ship's papers or colours; 1 under the British flag, and 1 under the flag of The United States.

The aforesaid captures took place in the following localities: 1 in the Rio Pongas, 2 in the harbour of Sierra Leone, 1 off this colony, 11 between Seabar and Cape Palmas, 14 within 6 degrees south of the line, and 1 captured full of slaves, probably on her passage to Cuba, in latitude 12° 22' south, longitude 37° 14' west.

Among the 31 captures, 13 had slaves on board, the other 18 cases were proceeded against for being found equipped for the Slave Trade.

The locality in which the 13 vessels, having slaves on board, were captured, is as follows: 3 canoes seized with 112 slaves on board within British waters off this colony; 9 vessels within 6 degrees north of the equator; 2 within 4 degrees south of the equator; and 1 was captured full of slaves in latitude $12^{\circ} 22'$ south, and longitude $37^{\circ} 14'$ west.

The number of slaves so captured was 5,619, of whom 5,282 were decreed emancipated; 337 having died before such decree was passed. This dreadful mortality may be accounted for by the inhuman master of the slaver captured by Commander Sprigg of Her Majesty's sloop Ferret, having stowed on board his vessel, admeasurement only 167 tons, 852 men, women, and children; 127 of whom died before they were emancipated; and, but for the humane conduct of Commander Sprigg, who transhipped about 300 slaves on board the Ferret, the mortality must have proved even still more appalling.

In the course of the year just ended, two cases of a rather unusual occurrence have been adjudicated in the Vice-Admiralty Court of this place. The first was that of the British steamer Maid of Islay, William Cunningham Townley, master, which vessel was seized on the 25th of May, in this harbour, by Commander Dunlop, of Her Majesty's sloop Alert, for being engaged in the Slave Trade, or otherwise aiding and abetting that traffic.

The Maid of Islay was adjudicated on the 19th day of July last, when Mr. Heddle, the acting Judge, decreed that the aforesaid vessel, Maid of Islay, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, be restored to William Cunningham Townley, the master and owner thereof; and the goods, wares, and merchandize on board the same be restored to Messrs. Hartung and Co., the owners and proprietors of the said cargo; and further decreed the seizer's costs, and condemned the said parties in such costs accordingly.

Against this decree an appeal to a higher court at home has been made by the seizer.

In my despatch of the 18th of December last, I had the honour of transmitting to your Lordship all the particulars I could obtain in reference to this very extraordinary case, I therefore beg respectfully to refer you to the said despatch.

On or about the 27th of September, the American brig Lawrence, Edward York, master, burthen 170 tons, was seized in the harbour of Sierra Leone by Commander Dunlop, of Her Majesty's sloop Alert, for being found with slave equipment on board in British waters.

The brig Lawrence came into this harbour on the 23rd of September last; her master alleging that she was making 34 inches of water per hour, and that he came into this port for the purpose of getting his vessel repaired.

On November the 25th the aforesaid American brig Lawrence, Edward York, master, was condemned as a good prize in the Vice-Admiralty Court of Sierra Leone. Previous to the day of trial, the master took his departure for Brazil, and I believe carried away the register of the Lawrence.

I have further the honour to report, for your Lordship's information, that Her Majesty's sloop Alert, Commander Dunlop, arrived in our harbour this morning with 100 slaves on board, who were immediately landed in "the Queen's Yard."

I beg respectfully to solicit your Lordship's attention to this novel and interesting era in the history of the abolition of Slave Trade, because it clearly proves that a highly important change has taken place in the very locality (Bissao) where an extensive Slave Trade has flourished for more than a hundred years; but where now many thousands of natives are daily employed in cultivating ground-nuts for shipping. And the Slave Trade is strictly prohibited by the powerful young King Branco of Beeomba. The notorious Cayetano, the Portuguese Governor of Bissao, has also abolished the Slave Trade, and is employing vast numbers of slaves in cultivating ground-nuts upon the British Island of Bulama.

It appears that Commander Dunlop sent his boats into Bissao to search the different creeks that run into the river Jeba, for slavers, and that, on hearing of their arrival, His Majesty King Branco, though sick, officially applied to the commander for help, and requested him to remove to Sierra Leone all the slaves in the barracoons belonging to the 2 Spaniards, Don Bito (alias Victor) Dalreda, and Don José Vanrell.* At the same time assuring Commander Dunlop that he, the King of Beeomba, had finally abolished the Slave Trade in his dominions. Thereupon, the slaves in the barracoons were asked if they preferred to be then and there made free and remain, when they all declared that they wished to be taken to Sierra Leone. This was acceded to by the authorities, and the slaves were embarked on board the Alert, and, as before stated, landed in this colony. The 2 Spaniards fled by land to their companions in human traffic on the Rio Pongas, where the notorious Spanish dealers in slaves, Senior Pellegrin and Don Paul Fabre, reside, also the native slave-dealers, Mrs, Lightburn and Mr. Allen.

The Rio Pongas may now be considered to be the sole mart for the Slave Trade to the northward of Sierra Leone.

I have only heard of 2 slavers having escaped with slaves on board from the Rio Pongas during the year 1848, and I believe they were both owned by Spaniards.

I have the pleasure to report to your Lordship that, by order of the French Government, all the slaves in Senegal and Goree have been emancipated. This highly interesting event cannot fail to produce important effects upon the natives of the neighbouring kingdoms, and to convince them that Great Britain and France are determined, not only to suppress the Slave Trade, but also slavery itself in every part of their dominions.

* José Vanrell was formerly master of the Spanish schooner Atrevida, condemned in the Mixed Courts of Sierra Leone, on the 8th of December, 1847.

Already agriculture, upon a most extensive scale, is in progress among the natives living between this place and Gambia. Rice and ground-nuts are the chief articles cultivated. The ground-nut trade has for several years past formed a highly important and valuable branch of export trade. The demand for ground-nuts from France, Hamburgh, and America far exceeds the supply. I earnestly hope that the spirit of agriculture and commerce, now happily manifesting itself among the natives, is the sure dawn of brighter days for benighted Africa.

With the only exception of the Rio Pongas, I consider that we have now no export Slave Trade between Cape Blanco and Sierra Leone, a distance of coast of upwards of 600 miles.

Before concluding my report, I beg respectfully to make a few remarks on the suggestions promulgated by certain parties in reference to the withdrawal of the British squadron on this coast for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

For more than 30 years I have taken a lively interest in the cause of abolition, and my present position in Her Majesty's service, together with a residence of many years in Africa, enable me to state for your Lordship's information an opinion gained by actual experience and observation upon the present progress of the cause of the abolition of the Slave Trade, which I humbly trust may induce some of those who entertain the mistaken views of advocating the withdrawal of the squadron, to pause ere they sanction a measure so utterly ruinous to millions of the human family.

It is my firm belief that in 9 or 12 months after the withdrawal of our squadron, the whole of Western Africa, from Cape Verd to Benguela, would present a scene of cruelty and devastation too fearful to contemplate. All the progress of Christianity, civilization, and commerce would be annihilated: in a word, Western Africa would, in the course of a year or two, be rolled back to its worst pristine savage condition. The coast would become the resort of the most degraded renegades and pirates of Brazil and other nations.

If our merchants entertain a hope that the trade of palm oil, gold, ivory, ground-nuts, hides, wax, &c. will continue to exist, after the withdrawal of our squadron, I fear that they will be wofully disappointed. The thousands of palm-oil carriers, and agricultural labourers, would instantly be kidnapped and carried on board slave-vessels. After a time the remaining natives would avoid the coast as they would the locality of a plague.

In my humble opinion, this dreaded calamity can only be evaded by a strong Treaty with Brazil, similar to or more stringent than that with Spain. Your Lordship has doubtless noticed the excellent effect of the penal law of Spain, dated the 2nd of March, 1845, upon the Spanish Slave Traders; since its promulgation, upwards of 2 years ago, we have only had one vessel under Spanish colours brought before the Mixed Courts of Sierra Leone.

I would also venture to remark, that hardly any squadron, however vigilant, and none could be more so than the present, would alone effect the total abolition of the Slave Trade on this coast, unless it be supported by a zealous, honest co-operation of the Brazilian and Spanish Governments.

In my opinion, the concluding part of this great undertaking can only be brought to a successful termination by applying gentler means, and strict enforcement of Treaties before the squadron is withdrawn from this coast.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

JAMES HOOK.

HAVANA.

*No. 15.—Her Majesty's Commissary Judge to Viscount Palmerston.
(Received April 24.)*

MY LORD,

Havana, March 27, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose copies of a correspondence I have had with Mr. Consul-General Crawford, on the denunciation I had it my duty to make of several vessels fitting out in this harbour to be engaged in Slave Trade.

On the 22nd instant, having assured myself of the truth of the reports I had previously heard, I addressed my letter of that date to Mr. Crawford, stating there were 3 if not more vessels so fitting out; 1 at a wharf known as Padron's, which had taken in her supply of water more than a week before. Another was the old correo or mail-packet, which had been so much damaged in the hurricane as to have been since laid up as unseaworthy, but was now repairing for the coast of Africa. Of the third I had no particulars; but I knew there was a third fitting out, and also one at Trinidad de Cuba. I had also heard that some parties had sailed hence the same morning in the Adelaide for New York, to purchase vessels for this trade.

Mr. Crawford acknowledged the receipt of this letter on the same day; and, though he did not send me a copy of his communication, I have no doubt he repeated the information explicitly as given.

On the 25th, he sent me his note of that date, with an answer.

now expected with a still larger number. Their introduction, therefore, has the direct sanction of the Government, who have published no formal account of the terms on which they are introduced, as was done in the case of the Chinese colonists, and as I should have wished to see done with regard to these Indians, to guard against the possibility of their being at any time held as slaves.

In their own country, though the constitution recognized these Indians as free, we know they were reduced to a state little different from slavery. Norman, the last traveller I know of, states, p. 71, that "though they wear the outside show of freedom, they have not even as much liberty as the most abject vassal of the middle ages. They are literally degraded to the position of serfs." And Stephens, who published his work in the same year, 1843, though he does not speak so strongly of their condition, gives an account of the "whipping an Indian" he witnessed, which proves the assertion of the other. He says, "We saw the poor fellow on his knees, with his arms clasped round the legs of another Indian, so as to present his fair back to the lash. At every blow he rose on one knee, and sent forth a piercing cry. He seemed struggling to restrain it, but it burst from him in spite of all his efforts. His whole bearing showed the subdued character of the present Indians, and with the last stripe the expression of his face seemed that of thankfulness for not getting more. Without uttering a word, he crept to the major-domo, took his hand, kissed it, and walked away. So humbled is this once fierce people, that they have a proverb of their own, 'The Indians cannot hear except through their backs.'"—Travels in Yucatan, vol. i, p. 146.

From such details, we may well believe there is much truth in the assertions of those who say that the present insurrection of the Indians in Yucatan is only to be ascribed to the tyrannical conduct they have had to endure, and which has at last goaded even them to resistance, when it came to an issue of the worst character, whichever party remained uppermost.

Such are the parties who are now bringing their Indians to this island, and who are proposing to the Government to bring as many more as may be required to supply the demand for labour now arisen on the prevention of Slave Trade. If these Indians were really brought as colonists, with their own free will, which is not apparent, and to hire out their labour as they please, I humbly submit that it is not unnecessary for Her Majesty's Government to receive an assurance that they should be placed in a position permanently of that character, and that a new species of slavery be not introduced, the Treaty of 1835 having again declared the Slave Trade on the part of Spain abolished "in all parts of the world."

I, therefore, in my letter of the 3rd instant, proposed to

Mr. Crawford that he should ask of this Government an official statement of the terms on which these Indians were brought, which proposition, in his letter of the 4th, he declined to act upon, and repeated his refusal in that of the 6th.

Her Majesty's Commissioners having been ordered by the Earl of Aberdeen to restrict their correspondence with this Government to the cases of vessels actually detained under the Treaty, I have no other course than to submit to your Lordship the propriety of coming to such an understanding on the subject with the Government at Madrid, as that these individuals may not be openly at any time held here and dealt with as slaves, though it may be impossible to prevent their being so in fact.

Not anticipating his refusal on this point, I requested Mr. Crawford, in the same letter, to ask what were the Captain-General's intentions respecting the emancipados still held in bondage, respecting whom I had private information, from a person in the Government House, that an order had gone from his Excellency to the office where this business was transacted, that no more were to be sent away from the island.

All I wished was the simple inquiry as to his Excellency's intentions, the which to report officially to Her Majesty's Government, respecting this unhappy class of persons who are more especially entitled to protection and consideration, as captured by British cruisers.

The great object is unquestionably to obtain the speediest liberation of all these persons still held in bondage; and I submit that, to guard against all fraud and evasion, power should be given to the Mixed Court to examine the books, and see, by proper examination of all persons and papers, that the returns are free from fraud. The largest holder of these emancipados was lately, I understand, if he be not now, the Marques de Esteva, Spanish Judge of the Mixed Court. Still I should not doubt of obtaining a full investigation into the condition of these persons, provided the Court had the power to inquire given by the Treaty of 1835 extended to those captured under the Treaty of 1817.

For further particulars I beg to refer to the inclosures, of which the one marked A comprises the letters referring more particularly to the Yucatan Indians; and the one marked B, those respecting the emancipados. The one marked C is the letter I wrote to the Captain-General, in reply to his demanding my informant of his intentions as to not assigning us more emancipados to be removed to Jamaica, to which he has not returned any reply.

MY LORD,

Havana, May 26, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a copy of a letter I have received from Her Majesty's Consul-General, Mr. Crawford, together with one to him from the Captain-General of the island, respecting a denunciation he had made of the sailing hence, to be engaged in Slave Trade, of the brigantine Elvira, formerly the old correo or packet-ship, damaged in the hurricane, one of the 3 vessels I had denounced originally in my letter of the 22nd March last. The sailing of this vessel to one of the out-ports I also reported to your Lordship in my despatch dated the 25th April last. By the Captain-General's letter inclosed, it appears that on his sending the sloop of war Churruca to a place called Mulata, she was found taking in a cargo of fire-wood, with which she has since returned loaded to this port. It seems ridiculous to think of a large vessel like this being sent merely for fire-wood, and I suspected therefore either that this trip was only an experimental one to ascertain her condition, or that the parties had received notice of the pursuit and examination intended, so as to adopt this pretext to escape detention for the present. However it may be, the readiness of the Captain-General to reply in the present instance contrasts strongly with his neglecting to give any to the original denunciation, of the 3 vessels fitting out, respecting which he promised due investigation, though he has not thought proper yet to make any communication as to the result.

MY LORD,

Havana, October 18, 1848.

HAVING felt it my duty on several occasions to express a fear that the late introduction of Indians into this island from Yucatan, where they were in fact held in a state of bondage amounting to slavery, would prove of the same character or worse even here, I regret to have to report now, that those fears already appear to me beginning to be realized. In addition to the letting out of bodies of them in the country, the particulars of which are as yet only known to the parties, there has been for some days past an advertisement in the daily papers, the which if frequently repeated will leave no doubt on the subject. It is placed among the advertisements of slaves to be hired out, and is as follows:—"To be hired, a Yucatan (woman) for wet nurse of one month after delivery, of very good and abundant milk, for price as may be arranged. Street Inquisidor, No. 57."

On sending to inquire into the circumstances, whether the woman was free or not, and to whom the payment in case of hiring should be made, I received for answer that the woman was the slave of the person who had brought her from Yucatan, to whom the payments were to be made.

SIR, (Circular.) Foreign Office, December 21, 1848.

I HAVE to desire that you will in future adopt for your half-yearly return of cases adjudicated by the Mixed Courts of Justice of which you are a member, the form which has been drawn up for the similar returns from British Courts of Vice-Admiralty, and which you will find in print at page 386 of Class A. of the Papers on Slave Trade, presented to Parliament in the year 1847, omitting only the 17th column.

When no case has been adjudicated during the past half-year, you will confine yourself simply to stating that fact.

No. 55.—Her Majesty's Commissary Judge to Viscount Palmerston.

MY LORD, Havana, December 20, 1848.

HAVING had the honour to receive from your Lordship a copy of the evidence given before the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed during the last session to consider the best means for the final extinction of Slave Trade, I venture to submit a few observations on parts of the evidence, which I trust your Lordship will not consider superfluous. Whatever may be the value of the opinions I have from time to time submitted to Her Majesty's Government, I trust I have always in the report of facts, not only acted with good faith, but also with good judgment, to take care they were not without reasonable foundation. Sometimes those facts have been controverted, but I believe I can truly say that in no case have I ever seen reason to alter my opinion, and many times on the contrary have found extraordinary corroborations from other quarters, even from the papers published by order of the Houses of Parliament. A proof I beg to cite in the evidence here given. In my letter to your Lordship of the 28th September, 1839, I stated "that the great slave-dealers, Blanco and Cavallo, here boasted of having agents at Sierra Leone to watch for and inveigle the strange negroes brought there in slave-vessels, and liberated by the Mixed Court, many of whom were said to be thus a second time sent off to slavery." In your Lordship's despatch dated the 17th April, 1841, Her Majesty's Commissioners received inclosed a correspondence with the Colonial Office on the subject, and a letter from the then Governor of Sierra Leone, Colonel Doherty, denying the allegation so peremptorily as to leave me under the imputation of having made it without any foundation. Now, however, in the evidence of Captain the Honourable J. Denman, the fact is distinctly proved. See 1st Report, p. 29; ib. p. 37, question 316; and p. 51, questions 501 and 502.

As Captain Denman has corroborated a supposition of mine which I had further stated in my letter of the 28th September, 1839, respecting the existence of Slave Trade not only in the neighbourhood but in the very territory of Sierra Leone, I feel able to corroborate an opinion of his (question 331), that the mortality and suffering incident to the middle passage as estimated in Sir Fowell Buxton's work, is greatly overstated. Sir F. Buxton appears to me in all his statements to have taken extreme cases for the average, and thus has come to conclusions which persons of very contrary feelings to his have warped to their own purposes. As an instance I beg to refer to his work, p. 30, in which he quotes a sentence from a despatch of one of the Commissioners here, of the 31st May, 1836: "I wish I could add that this list contains even one-fourth of the number of those which have entered after landing cargoes, or sailed after having refitted in this harbour." "This would give," says Sir F. Buxton, "an amount of 60,000 for the Havana alone;" and thereupon he feels authorized to take that number of slaves introduced for all the island per annum. But the writer referred his assertion only to one particular month, and I believe he would have qualified it much if he had thought it would have been taken for so large a computation. At that time the slave-ships were allowed to land their cargoes in the immediate vicinity, and even in the very harbour of Havana; so that as it was most convenient for the slave-dealers, the cargoes of course were almost all brought here. There were few taken to the other ports, at the utmost never I should say more than one-third; so that upon Sir F. Buxton's assumption of the number given in the Commissioners, Report of 15,000 in one year known, instead of quadrupling it I consider the addition of one-third would have been nearer the truth. I believe the number introduced has never exceeded 25,000 in one year into the whole island. This computation I make first upon the informations of such persons as the Conde de Fernandina, and others of his character, who knew the circumstances of the trade, and who had no interest to misstate it. 2nd, from the number of vessels known to be engaged in it, of which about 50 arrived per annum with cargoes for this port. Allowing 300 for an average cargo, the number would be 15,000, exactly what the Commissioners had stated. 3rd, for the demand. The slaves were bought only as other merchandize, for the profit that could be obtained from their labour. Supposing the 15,000 were sold at an average of only 50*l.* each, the total would be 750,000*l.* sterling. But the whole exports of the island in the last year, when that of sugar was double what it was in 1837, did not exceed 5,500,000*l.* sterling, and the imports of lawful merchandize amounted to 6,500,000*l.* sterling. Supposing the values of each equal, it is out of the question to suppose they could be paying 3,000,000*l.* sterling further for slaves, as they must have done if introducing 60,000 per annum. On these grounds I come to the conclusion that the number is more than doubly overstated in Sir F. Buxton's work, as introduced into Cuba per annum; and I suspect on the like grounds, that the number said to be introduced into the Brazils per annum, on which is founded the supposition of the trade being so flourishing, is also much overstated.

I make my estimate on the number of ships which appear to be employed in it, and on the amount of the exports and imports of that country, from which it seems to me clear that even if, as seems to be the fact, there were ever 60,000 introduced in one year, the cost to the purchasers being at the rate above taken, altogether 3,000,000*l.* sterling, it is the very utmost the country could afford to take, and therefore very soon the market would be glutted and the price would fall, if the supply continued at that rate, without supposing an increased supply.

My principal object in submitting these observations to your Lordship is to express my humble hope that the propositions of that party which is so desirous of removing the cruizers from the coast and of allowing the free renewal of Slave Trade, may not be admitted by the Legislature. In this island it is manifest that the efforts of Her Majesty's Government for the suppression of the trade have been attended with full success. The decided blow to it was given by General Valdes, in his refusal to follow the example of his predecessors to receive the head-money on the introduction of slaves, and so connive at the breach of the laws. On this point I wish to correct a mistake in the evidence of Lord John Hay (question 3745), who said "It is fair to say that the foundation of the principle upon which he acted was laid by Chacon, the Captain-General who preceded him, General Tacon, who is no doubt referred to, was not the immediate predecessor of General Valdes. There were 2 other Governors between General Espeleta and the Prince of Anglona. All these took the bribes, Tacon as well, but least from a corrupt motive. He was from principle an advocate of the Slave Trade, and he openly declared his opinion, having seen Spain lose her colonies on the conti-ment, that to prevent a similar loss of this island a large slave population should be permitted and encouraged. The whole credit therefore of the suppression is due to General Valdes ; for, notwithstanding every desire on the part of his successor, General O'Donnell, to renew it, the dealers never seem to have recovered from the prostration into which his measures threw them ; and this seems to me an argument to show that if the trade on the coast be for a few years suppressed, it would be very difficult to revive it without the direct encouragement of the principal Governments of the world.

There is a great mistake entertained, I suspect, respecting the profits of the slave-dealers. It is true that slaves may be bought on the coast at from 5 to 25 dollars each, but the other expenses of the trade are very enormous. A ship cannot be sent at a mere venture to the coast. The parties must have agents on the spot, and the means of communicating with those agents must be very costly. The agents as employed in such confidential matters must be well paid, and from death or dishonesty the principals are often losers by them ; then there is the fitting out of the vessel ; so that it is reasonable to suppose the estimate is correct I have heard here made, of each slave put on board costing 100 dollars. Of course, if the cargo be landed the profit is still immense, but if only half be brought, and that half subjected to the cupidity of a Governor like General O'Donnell, or to the prosecution of one like General Valdes, and the usual risks of bad debts, as must always be the case in such a trade, the profits become much less enormous than are generally stated. If the dealers could have hoped for impunity in the resumption of the Slave Trade, I have no doubt they would soon do so here ; but it would be at a great cost to set on foot again their agencies on the coast. This consideration shows what little weight should be given to the argument, that if the trade be driven from one place, it will spring up at another. Those who use this argument forget that to avail themselves of such means the dealers must have information of those new entrepôts of slaves to send their vessels there ; and the communications require a combination of purpose which cannot be organized without much cost and delay. Therefore the new entrepôts might be made known to the cruisers, and be nullified perhaps as soon as they could be known to the parties who had to send vessels there.

Another reason why I think the number of slaves introduced into the Brazils has been overstated, is that the production of sugar there does not seem to be so much increasing during the last 10 years, judging by the exports, though the production of coffee certainly does in a remarkable degree. In this island it is exactly the reverse ; the production of coffee is only about a tenth of what it was 10 years since, and that of sugar has doubled. From this I judge that the circumstances of the country make Brazil better suited for the production of coffee than of sugar, and consequently that there cannot be such a very great demand there for slave-labour.

I feel myself, however, only competent to speak positively of this island, where there seems to be decidedly a cessation of the trade. If it were to be allowed there is no doubt there would be again 25,000 per annum introduced. If the cruizers were withdrawn, the costly combinations of agencies would be unnecessary, and the slave instead of costing 100 dollars might not cost 50; and he might be sold here for 100 dollars, instead of for from 300 to 500. The planters would of course be glad to obtain double the amount of labour for half the money, and then as the life of the slave would be only worth a quarter of what it was before, the former horrid cruelties would be renewed perhaps double-fold. It is quite a mistake to suppose the people here are afraid of an insurrection among the slaves. They are only afraid of it as much as it would affect their temporary convenience. Where the white population to the coloured is about as 5 to 6, according to the census, and the coloured population are so divided and without any resources whatever for making resistance, the whites have not the least fear of any revolt succeeding. At present the treatment of the slaves is notoriously much ameliorated by the increase in their value. Still it is exceedingly vile in many cases, and the lower the value of the slave may be reduced, the more horrible will be the cruelty exercised.

Another over-statement seems to me to be made respecting the miseries of the passage. There are no doubt cases of shocking mortality and misery, as also we hear of such in emigrant vessels to America, for instance the Virginus from Liverpool, where 158 out of 467 passengers died on the voyage; and the Naomi, which sustained a loss of 110 out of 334 embarked at the same port. I do not believe that such mortality has occurred on board any slave-ship to this port during the last 12 years that I have known it, from the western coast of Africa; and of 6 cargoes I have seen, a very large majority appeared of each to have suffered no inconvenience whatever from the voyage. In the Columbia, which arrived here in July last, though only a miserable boat of 29 tons, we have evidence that only 5 were lost out of 155 embarked; and in the case of the Jesus Maria, a vessel of about 35 tons British measurement, condemned here, there were only 26 lost out of 278 put on board, and of these several had jumped overboard. Yet these were the cases in which we might have expected the greatest loss of life, as having been the most crowded, though they might be accidentally favourable in the other extreme. It is the interest of the parties to bring them over as well as possible, and there is no doubt that this has its effect. It is much more probable that overflowing cargoes and concomitant misery would be found if a free trade in slaves were permitted, when the vessels would be filled without any possible restraint, and where the life and comfort of the slave would be of less consequence than now, when a full cargo can seldom be obtained.

If, however, the sufferings of the slave are so much thought of for a few weeks at sea, I would submit that those should not be forgotten which he is to suffer all his life after he is landed here or in the Brazils. I would submit that the efforts of Her Majesty's Government to suppress the trade cannot be said to be unsuccessful, even if it be true that as many slaves are now exported to Brazil as formerly when the trade was free. The circumstances of the times require a greater number; and the question is, how many would be exported now if the trade were free? No doubt to the Brazils twice as many at least, because if a planter will now give 45*l.* for 1 slave, he would rather give that sum for 2, to have double the labour; and as to this island, the importation would certainly not be less than 25,000 per annum for many years, entailing sufferings and misery upon them, horrible to think of, besides the devastation of Africa.

On this point I have to observe that I have for many years been in the habit of asking the different Africans with whom I have conversed, the circumstances under which they were brought; and they, with scarcely any exception, state, that they were kidnapped or taken in what they call their wars. They also seem to have been almost all brought from the interior of late, representing they were 1, 2, or 3 months in coming to the coast. The conclusion in my mind is, that the demand for any great number of slaves can only be supplied from the interior by carrying devastation further and further through the continent; and that if once effectually put down, the trade could be kept down very easily and at small cost, because it would be so difficult for the dealers to arrange their combinations and correspondences and intercourse with the interior.

I have endeavoured to express my ideas in the fewest words possible, and perhaps they may be altogether unnecessary. But as an eye-witness of the horrid state of the slave in this island, and of the good effects produced here by the efforts of Her Majesty's Government, I feel myself bound to add my humble prayer that those efforts be not relaxed, and that the cruelties I refer to may not be renewed.

SIR, Foreign Office, January 31, 1849.

I HAVE to desire that you will endeavour to ascertain, and that you will report to me, how many slaves are supposed to have been landed in Cuba during the year 1848. I am, &c.

J. Kennedy, Esq.

PALMERSTON.

No. 60.—Her Majesty's Commissary Judge to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received March 7.)

MY LORD,

Havana, January 1, 1849.

I HAVE the honour to submit my annual report on the Slave Trade of this place during the past year, with the usual returns of vessels that I have heard of as having arrived here from the coast of Africa during the year, and of those that sailed hence in it, and in the year preceding, suspected of being intended for Slave Trade.

These returns are certainly very vague and incomplete ; but, as I believe, the main fact is correctly stated, of so many vessels, for instance, having sailed hence during the year for the coast of Africa, the circumstance of our not being able to obtain fuller particulars of the expeditions, affords a proof of the depressed state of the trade, because the more contraband it becomes, the more secret must be the operations carried on. So long as any Captain-General condescended to receive fees for the introduction of newly imported Africans, the dealers cared little for the publicity attending their transactions. But as we have every reason to believe that the present Captain-General, Roncali Conde de Alcoy, refuses to accept these fees, the dealers have not the same security for carrying on their trade with impunity, and are therefore obliged to be so much the more reserved.

It is but justice to repeat this of the Conde de Alcoy as the general belief ; accordingly, the general system of the Government is carried on in a manner above all imputation of former practices ; but he is evidently indisposed to proceed against the trade or its abettors with that severity which would be the best means of effectually suppressing it. I refer here to the case of the 2 vessels which, upon my information, arrived in the neighbourhood in July last, when 130 newly introduced Africans were seized by the Lieutenant-Governor of Mariel. I believe my information of 2 vessels having arrived is correct ; yet the Captain-General declared in no measured terms, that only one vessel had arrived ; leaving the conclusion to be drawn, that he had allowed himself to receive as true, some statement made to him to that effect, though a proper inquiry must, I think, have led to a different result.

But supposing only one had arrived, it was proved that it had met with a collusive reception from the local authorities at Cabanas, as was pointed out to his Excellency at the time ; and no steps have been taken against those authorities, nor against the parties concerned in the adventure. The mate, who offered himself as an informer against the parties, was put into prison ; but the captain, who could have given evidence of the owners, was allowed to go away in the steamer to New York, with the person Zulueta, on whose account the negroes were said to have been brought, and a considerable number of the negroes were given up to this Zulueta, under the pretence of being assigned to him as emancipados.

It appears to me, therefore, that if the trade be, as I consider it, in a depressed state, the cause of this depression must be sought elsewhere, than in the measures of the Government.

At the commencement of the past year, it was indubitable that there was a great animation on the part of all persons interested in the trade, for its revival. A new Governor was expected, and it was hoped that he would favour it more than General O'Donnell lately had done. The latter was to the last a declared favourer of it; but his later measures had disconcerted its operations by proceedings against it, which, if they were owing to stricter orders from Spain, also answered his purpose, for, by seizing the negroes or exacting a larger fee, he gained so much the more, while as he was at the close of his government, the consequences of future distrust could not affect him. It was hoped a new Governor would act on another policy; and vessels were prepared accordingly, to be sent as might be found advisable. 7 were sent during the first 4 months of the year, and 4 have sailed hence since; whereas in 1847 there were only 3 sent altogether, and in 1846 not one. After two such years, if any encouragement had been afforded the dealers, we might have expected a larger number to have been sent; and as so few have been sent, and as the new Captain-General does not appear to be a decided enemy to its continuance, the conclusion seems to me to follow, that even as a contraband trade, it is not one offering advantages sufficient to induce an active prosecution of it.

Having paid much attention to the subject, I am induced to think that considerable over-statements have been made with respect to this trade; 1st, as to the numbers of Africans exported from Africa; and 2nd, as to the profits of the dealers.

1st. It is almost impossible to obtain exact returns of the numbers exported; and many persons who have written respecting it, have taken the numbers known in some 1 month as an average for the year, when perhaps the numbers in that 1 month were so extraordinarily large, as to have made them noted it on that account only. In Havana, however, this difficulty did not exist, as the dealers were so sufficiently knotted together, that they had a particular place formerly of assembly, and books kept there, from which I was, in 1840, able to obtain the exact numbers that had been brought in that year, the one before General Valdes arrived, and when the trade was quite free so far as this Government could permit it. From those books I learned, that the exact number brought in that year to Havana and Matanzas, amounted to 11,756; and that perfectly agreed with the returns we had been able to obtain from other sources, on the arrivals of the vessels, as we reported to your Lordship at the time. As it was most convenient for the dealers to bring them here to the headquarters, whence to supply the demand, and as no difficulty whatever was put in their way in so doing, I feel warranted in saying, that this number may be safely taken as two-thirds certainly of all brought in that year to the whole island.

It may be that the supply was according to the demand, and therefore the next consideration arises as to the demand. If 20,000 were brought every year, and sold at only 50*l.* each, the sum necessary to purchase them would be a drain to the island of 1,000,000 sterling per annum. Such a sum might perhaps be raised in a year for some extraordinary purpose, for investment out of capital hoarded, but it would not be paid year after year, unless there were exports made concomitantly to compensate for such an outlay. But the whole exports of the island did not amount to 5,000,000 sterling, and the imports of lawful merchandize, as given by the Custom-house returns, exceeded that sum; so that, even if we make every allowance, in supposing the value of imports overstated, and of exports the contrary, still it will be impossible to come to any other conclusion than this,—that the number of Africans introduced was decreasing per annum from natural causes, of a sufficient number having been brought to supply the demand. To show how impossible it was for the island to bear such a drain, I inclose further a return of the amount of exports and imports during the last 20 years, which will present so even a balance, as to put it out of the question that so large a number could be introduced year after year, as by some persons has been supposed.

If 20,000 were introduced per annum for a few years, as for investment, it might be done by foreign capital, and the effects would be felt in an increase of production. This has been the fact; but meanwhile the price of the articles of production, sugar and coffee, have both fallen; so that sugar in price now is scarcely half of what it was formerly, and coffee planting has been found so unproductive as to be almost abandoned. I conceive, therefore, that the number of slaves had come to almost the utmost the island required, and that it would have been found continuing to decrease, even if General Valdes had not been appointed Governor, to arrest its progress, somewhat sooner than the course of events indicated. If the same number, say 20,000 per annum, had been continued to be brought, according to this supposition the price would have fallen, and then the question would be, could the dealers afford the slaves at lower prices? I think they could not; and this is the second inquiry I suggested.

2nd. That the profits of the trade were much overstated. All persons are apt to boast much of their gains, but the slave-dealers more especially, as a triumph over the cruizers, and even the Government of England, as well as to console themselves for the discredit they could not but feel attached to their trade. Thus we hear of a few fortunate individuals who have formerly amassed fortunes in it, but of the many who have lost fortune and life in it we hear little or nothing; yet I am satisfied that there are many such, and that on the whole the trade here has not been latterly a productive one. One proof of this is, that the insurance offices lost so much on the policies of slave vessels, that it is nearly 10 years since they resolved to take none on them on any terms whatever; but calculations may be safely made to show this from their own statements. The price of a slave on the coast may be only from 5 to 25 dollars; but the expenses of agencies and factories are necessarily great, besides those of bringing them. The more difficult is the embarkation, the more and better paid agents must be employed, and well paid to be kept faithful to their employers, when it would be so completely in their power, if they pleased to act dishonestly, to set them altogether at defiance. I have heard it said that each slave costs the dealer 100 dollars, by the amount of these expenses, with those of bringing them. If half are captured, then each slave landed here may be said to have cost 200 dollars, and the average price for the cargo round may not perhaps be obtained more than 400 dollars per head. This would still be an immense profit, if no bad debts were incurred, as very often is the case; but if the dealers were further liable to these, and to have a third or a half of those brought seized by the Government, or 50 dollars per head charged for the fee to the Captain-General, then the remaining profit certainly would not compensate for the risk run of utter loss.

It seems to me, therefore, that the trade is in a most depressed state, because the profits have been so much reduced as to make it unadvisable for any to engage in it, except they were persons like Don Julian Zulueta, forming themselves new plantations, and desirous of obtaining slaves for themselves at the lowest rates, and not as speculators for sale. Even if they lost two-thirds of those they had bought on the coast, they would be thus obtaining the remainder at a less price than importers by trade could afford to sell them at, taking the usual brokerage and chances of repayment into consideration.

At present there is less demand for slaves than there was at this time of the last year. The newspapers have been full of advertisements for them to be sold or hired out in bodies for the season; whereas I have not seen one of any required, as was often the case last year, and even in the time of General Valdes. Neither has the price for slaves or for labour risen since the last year; and this and the other considerations before-mentioned, bring me to the conclusion that the Slave Trade is in a depressed state, not only on account of the blockade, but also on account of the dealers not being therefore able to afford slaves at such prices as to meet the wants of the planters at the present rates of produce. If the Slave Trade were again set free, and the planters could get them, as they then might, at one-third or one-fourth of the present prices, the numbers might be taken perhaps even 20,000 or 25,000 per annum, for some years, till the number was found sufficient to check further importations. The high price then is, and must be, a check to the trade, and this high price is owing to the blockade of the coast.

In my last annual report, dated the 1st January, 1848, and a former one, I informed your Lordship that, though lately a larger demand for slave labour had arisen, on account of the higher price of sugar, yet this demand had been met by a supply of negroes from abandoned coffee plantations, to the number then estimated of about 30,000. Since then I learn there has been a return made to this Government of the number so transferred to sugar estates, estimated at 38,000. This supply I should think sufficient for the necessities of some years to come. The extraordinary demand that arose last year and the one preceding for more labourers, was no doubt on the expectation of continued high prices; but with the present prospects it must abate. The calculations also formed last year of the quantity of sugar to be made under particular circumstances have in many cases proved erroneous, and the gains therefore have been less than what was expected.

In the year now concluded very little rain has fallen in the island, so that the canes have proved of inferior quality, and it is supposed by many that the exports of this year (1849) will fall even 30 per cent. below those of the past. Such being the case, as there are several estates on which they do not grind at all this season, and all from 20 to 30 per cent. less than before, the requirement of labour is so much less, and the quantity that sufficed for the last will be quite sufficient for the present. Thus, then, the fact may be accounted for that there is less demand even now for labour than there was a year since, and perhaps no great demand will arise for years to come for the same reason.

As far as can be judged, the best informed merchants seem to think that the price of sugar will not again materially rise, and that this island has already attained the utmost that under present circumstances it is likely to produce. With the present prices, the planters cannot afford to give large sums for labour, and they must economise with what they have. In this they have also another supply, beyond what the abandoned coffee estates afforded, namely, from the numbers formerly employed in the manufacture of tobacco and cigars. Much as has been the falling off in respect of remuneration for sugar, the fall in the tobacco trade is as remarkable. Of 20,000 persons estimated to have been employed in this city in the manufacture of cigars, it is said that half are now out of employment, and this circumstance, if it be true, and if it continue, must lower the rate of prices for labour generally, and give, if required, perhaps several thousand labourers for the estates.

The exports from Havana and Matanzas, which, in 1847, amounted to 1,006,767 boxes of sugar, and 106,904 quintals of coffee, in the past year have amounted to 1,000,341 boxes of sugar, and 31,073 quintals of coffee, there being 5 boxes of sugar and $22\frac{1}{2}$ quintals of coffee to the ton. In 1847, there were exported from Havana 19,368 quintals of leaf tobacco, which was less than half the quantity exported in 1846. But in the past year the exports have fallen still further, to 13,508 quintals.

Of cigars, in 1847, were exported hence 198,268 bundles of 1,000 each, which was $\frac{1}{4}$ th more than in former years. But during the last year the exports have fallen to their former average, 150,729 bundles, with the prospect of this depression continuing.

I conclude from these facts that there is not that incentive for an increase of Slave Trade existing in the higher price and call for slave labour, which would cause it to be continued, against the risk of losses felt in late years. If the blockade were abandoned, and slaves procured at a quarter, a third, or even one-half the present prices, it would be renewed, unquestionably, to as frightful an extent as ever.

From my knowledge of this community, I feel myself warranted in saying that no other than coercive measures will suffice to keep the trade suppressed. They think much of gain, but only of present gain, and they have not the slightest scruples of carrying it on. There are a few advocates for the suppression of the trade, and a few even for the suppression of slavery itself. But these are very few indeed, and it may be doubted whether they would hold true to their opinions in case the alternative were offered them. The great body of the people have not the slightest sense of any injustice perpetrated in the trade. It seems to me, therefore, idle to think for a moment of its being ever put down by other means.

In addition to the return of the exports and imports during the last 20 years, I also submit to your Lordship an account of the revenue of the island, as affording means to judge of its capabilities, and to gather the prospects of increase, of production, and inducements to carry on the Slave Trade, if the planters should find it worth their while to extend their cultivation, either by a rise in the price of sugar, or what is the same thing, a lowering of the price of labour, which would follow on the Slave Trade being opened to them again, so that they could produce sugar at a greater profit.

In the despatch of 1847, dated the 9th March of that year, I gave your Lordship an account of a new estate formed by Don Julian Zulueta, which was expected to produce 10,000 boxes of sugar during the year. Of this estate I am enabled now to give the following further particulars. It is named the Alava, situated in the neighbourhood of Cardenas; it is formed of 60 caballerias (2,000 acres) of land, of which 33 caballerias are laid out in cane, 17 unopened, 3 arid, and 7 occupied in buildings and roads. It has 3 mills, each of which gives 50 pails of syrup per day, at a heat, in January, of $8\frac{1}{2}$, and in March and April, of $10\frac{1}{2}$ —11. Each caballeria gives 1,500 loads of cane; and in the last year, 1848, the produce exported was of boxes of sugar 5,000 white, 3,000 yellow, 312 encurucho, 600 muscovado, and 134 small cases, total 9,046, the number of loaves being at the rate of 2,000 to the caballeria. For these there are 28 caballerias of cane ground, and this year, 1849, they have of molasses 1,500 hog-heads.

The body of labourers is represented to consist of 380 utiles or slaves, 35 Asiatics, and 200 creoles of 10 years and under. The last number is evidently false, and to be understood of the later introduction of slaves in July last, the cargo then brought being well known to have principally consisted of children. There are said to be on the average 25 sick in the infirmary. On the estate are 90 carts, and 170 yokes of oxen, and the buildings are on the best scale. The whole lighted with gas, sufficient for 5,000 lights, but in general they use 60. The apparatus, in England, cost 240*l.*, and the bringing and placing it 600*l.* It has 20 feet of diameter, 12 of height, 3 retorts, and corresponding condenser and purifier.

I have been led to give these details because the former account referred to, has been pronounced fabulous by one of the monthly publications of London. But it is to be observed that there are several others in the island as colossal, one, for instance belonging to the Conde de Penalver, another to the Condesa de Reunion, one to Don F. Diego and others. The Conde de Fernandina has lately formed one, the Agiuca, which it is said will be the largest in the island, as the works are on the most improved scale, and the annual produce calculated at 14,000 boxes of sugar.

The Alava of Don Julian Zulueta this season, is only calculated to produce 6,000 boxes, on account of the drought of last year, but in general years 10,000 boxes, which at 15 dollars a box, would be 150,000 dollars, or 30,000*l.* sterling per annum.

As a general computation, it is stated here in the last number of the Memoirs of the Royal Economic Society of Havana, that an estate with 150 negroes, to putting it in a state to produce 2,000 boxes of sugar, may have cost its proprietor 140,000 dollars, and thereupon gaining a value of 40,000 dollars to that crop; and considering that, with proper management, 15,000 dollars will suffice for the expenses, a net surplus remains of 25,000 dollars, which is about 18 per cent. Could the slaves be bought at reduced prices, the profit would be accordingly greater.

From these considerations, the inference seems to me, that the least relaxation of the present system of prevention of Slave Trade, would be eagerly taken advantage of for the prosecution of those gains of which I have given these details.

The planters are actively intent on the promotion of their interests. They are proceeding with unremitting assiduity to obtain the best machinery, and carry on their business under the best systems they can learn. Meanwhile the Government is also aiding them, by going on with equal pace in promoting the prosperity of the island. Coals are not only admitted free of duty, but the vessels bringing them are admitted at a reduced tonnage duty. Public works on all sides are wisely carried on. New roads and bridges are in course of construction in every direction, and railroad companies encouraged and supported. Harbours are improved and opened to trade, so that both internal and coasting communications are facilitated. Three light-houses on the coasts are now building. Public instruction is much attended to, especially a branch lately established for engineers. Better municipal regulations also are formed for public convenience; but, above all, the administration of the Government under the Count de Alcoy, the present Captain-General, influencing of course every tribunal and subordinate authority, is placed in a remarkable manner on a footing, which, if it be continued so for a few years, cannot fail to give this island the fullest means of developing all the advantages it possesses.

If the Slave Trade were opened to them again, the people here would enter into it with an unscrupulousness, in which the English colonies could not compete with them, and the ruin therefore of the latter, would be complete and immediate.

No. 61.—Her Majesty's Commissary Judge to Viscount Palmerston.
(Received March 7.)

MY LORD,

Havana, January 9, 1849.

I HAVE the honour to report that, having on the 3rd instant seen a statement in one of the public papers that the Government had determined to use the hulk, formerly Her Majesty's ship "Romney," as a lazaretto for cases of cholera, in case that malady should reach this island, I thought it my duty to write my letter of that date (inclosed) to the Marquis de Esteva, the Spanish Judge of the Mixed

Court. In that letter, I submitted my opinion that this determination seemed to me an improper one, as the vessel had been assigned to be held ready for the reception of any captured Africans that might be brought here, which service it could not perform, if it were at the time used as a hospital ship for persons attacked with any contagious disease. I therefore requested him to call a meeting of the court, to consider what steps should be taken in consequence.

On the 7th instant, I received accordingly notice of a meeting of the court on the following day; when, a translation of my letter having been read, the Marquis de Esteva stated that the Government did not intend to use the hulk as a hospital ship, but had only put on board the passengers that had been brought in the English steamers and other vessels, to be kept under observation the number of days according to the regulation. His Excellency observed that, in case of the cholera breaking out, hospitals were to be fixed on the outskirts of the city, and that this application of the hulk was only temporary, required by the present emergency, which was not to affect the arrangement entered into at the sale of the hulk, for it to be kept ready for the reception of any captured Africans that might be brought.

At the time of the sale, it was understood that this Government might use the hulk as a guard-ship, or for any purpose not incompatible with its being always ready for putting on board any captured Africans that might be brought; and under the present emergency I thought this explanation admissible, being satisfied that, if it had been intended to use the hulk for a hospital ship, it would not now be carried into effect after the notice taken of it.

(Received April 15.)

MY LORD,

Cape Town, January 13, 1848.

WE have the honour to report to your Lordship that, from the best information we can obtain, the Slave Trade on the east coast of Africa has by no means diminished during the year 1847, and that the usual proportion of the immense number of negroes, imported into Rio Janeiro during the last 12 months, has been furnished by the Slave Traders in the Mozambique.

The reports we have already had the honour to make, will have shown your Lordship that only 5 vessels have been captured during the year in question, of which 3 were Brazilian, 1 Sardinian, and 1 United States, and that they were all taken before they had shipped their human cargoes.

Of these captures, 1 was made by Her Majesty's ship Brilliant, Captain Watson, and 4 by the Portuguese authorities, and we are glad to be able to report this proof, that, as far as the Governor-General's influence extends, the Slave Trade will be put down. His force, however, is quite inadequate to carry out his views throughout the extensive coast nominally under his jurisdiction; and as your Lordship is already aware, the assistance formerly derived from Her Majesty's cruizers has been much limited since the power confided to them by his Excellency's predecessor, General de Lima, to act in Portuguese waters where there is no Portuguese authority resident, has been withdrawn by the Portuguese Government.

In the month of November last, the Governor-General availed himself of the presence of Her Majesty's ship President, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Dacres, and Her Majesty's ship Eurydice, Captain Anson, to make a severe example of the slave-dealers settled at Angozha, who had set his authority at defiance, and had, on more than one occasion, fired upon the boats of men-of-war of both nations employed in suppressing the Slave Trade.

Aided by the boats of Her Majesty's ships above mentioned, under the command of Captain Anson, Major Campos was deputed by his Excellency to obtain from the Chief of Angozha a written engagement to submit to the authority of Portugal, and to her commercial regulations, to abstain from the Slave Trade, and to give up agents and others concerned therein.

The Chief, in answer, required a delay of 10 days, but it appeared that this was only done to enable him to collect the natives, who assembled in great numbers, and were busily employed in strengthening their defences.

The force was therefore moved up the river on the 23rd November to make a demonstration, but as soon as it appeared before the town, it was fired upon from the shore.

The engagement thus commenced by the natives, was kept up for about an hour and a quarter, when the fire from the boats having silenced the enemy and destroyed their defences, the force returned down the river.

In conclusion, we beg respectfully to repeat the opinion we have already had the honour to convey to Her Majesty's Government, that no effectual check can be administered to the Slave Trade on the east coast without some increase of the force at present at the disposal of the Admiral Commanding-in-chief on this station, which is so limited, and has been so much in request for the service of the colony during the past year, that his Excellency has not been able to keep more than 2, and since the loss of Her Majesty's ship Snake, sometimes only one of Her Majesty's ships in the Mozambique to cruize for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

We are glad, however, to learn that another steam-vessel, Her Majesty's ship Devastation, is shortly to be added to the force on the station.

MY LORD,

Cape Town, March 23, 1848.

WITH reference to our despatch of the 13th of January last, relative to measures taken against the slave-traders established in the Angozha River; we have the honour to acquaint your Lordship that, according to information subsequently received, the result of the attack made upon these lawless people is most satisfactory; the defences they had formed having been totally destroyed, with considerable loss, and the survivors having to all appearance abandoned the neighbourhood.

We have the pleasure to know also that the Governor-General of Mozambique has expressed his warmest thanks to the Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's naval forces on this station, for the good service rendered by the boats of Her Majesty's ships President and Eurydice, in aid of the Portuguese force, on the occasion in question; and has signified his intention to prevent the re-establishment of slave-dealers in the Angozha, by vigilantly blockading the entrance to that river, as suggested by Rear-Admiral Dacres.

MY LORD,

Cape Town, March 24, 1848.

WE have the honour to report to your Lordship that, on the 26th of November last, Major Teixeira, the Governor of Quillimane, absconded from that place in a slave-ship, bound, it is said, for Rio de Janeiro, with 500 slaves on board. He was accompanied in his flight by the President of the Municipality, who had also been for some time suspected of being engaged in the Slave Trade.

A report that Major Teixeira had left Quillimane under the circumstances above stated, reached us some weeks ago, but we hesitated to communicate it to your Lordship until confirmed by those upon whose accuracy we could place reliance.

We learn with satisfaction that the Governor-General of Mozambique has appointed Major Campos to the post vacated by Major Teixeira. Major Campos is favourably known as an opponent of the slave-traders, and left Mozambique on the 2nd of January to assume his duties at Quillimane.

*No. 74.—Viscount Palmerston to Her Majesty's Commissioners.

GENTLEMEN,

Foreign Office, November 1, 1848.

I HAVE to refer you to Article X of Annex B to the Treaty under which you hold your appointments, which specifies the manner in which the place of Her Majesty's Commissioner or of Her Majesty's Arbitrator is to be filled up, whenever either of those officers may be absent from his post, owing to death, sickness, absence on leave, or other legal impediment; and I have now to communicate to you the following rules for your guidance on this subject.

When Her Majesty's Commissioner is absent from his post, Her Majesty's Arbitrator is to take the oath as Acting Commissioner; but neither in this case, nor in the event of Her Majesty's Arbitrator being absent from his post, is the place of Her Majesty's Arbitrator to be filled until an occasion shall occur when the services of the Governor or other duly qualified functionary are required, either to adjudicate in the absence of Portuguese Commissioners, or to arbitrate in the event of a difference arising between Her Majesty's Commissioner or Acting Commissioner and the Portuguese Commissioner; and the duties of such Acting Arbitrator are to cease with the closing of the case in which he may have been called upon to act.

If both Her Majesty's Commissioner and Her Majesty's Arbitrator should be absent from their post at the same time, then the Governor or other duly qualified functionary ought to take the oath as Acting Commissioner, in order that the court may be placed in a state of competency to decide any matters which may come before it as arising out of the Treaty.

With respect to the remuneration to be given to persons who, under the rules herein laid down, may have to assume the office either of Acting British Commissioner or of Acting Arbitrator, I have to state to you that the officers so acting will receive pay only for those

JAMAICA.

No. 81.—Her Majesty's Commissioner to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received August 21.)

MY LORD,

Jamaica, July 20, 1848.

THE Deputy Adjutant-General, Lieutenant-Colonel Farquharson, called on me a few days ago, and left with me a despatch addressed by Lieutenant-Colonel Hill, in command of the 1st West India regiment, to the Military Secretary at Kingston, containing the report of a complaint made to him by Corporal Peter Gordon, that his mother is retained in slavery by a person named Lawrance Hooper, residing in the English possessions at Cape Coast Castle, and stating that on a reference to Captain Murray, of the same regiment, who has lately served on the Gold Coast, he is informed by that officer that a system exists at Cape Castle, by which people are slaves, and that there is a kind of distinction in the servitude, some being designated slaves, some pawns.

Colonel Farquharson left with me also the note, addressed to him by Colonel Darrah of the 97th Regiment, stationed at Newcastle, the officer commanding the forces, in which he desires that Colonel Hill's communication should be laid before me, and my advice and assistance requested on the subject.

As I had previously heard a good deal of the pawn system at Cape Coast Castle, from the report of Dr Madden to Lord John Russell, when his Lordship held the seals of the Colonial Department, and from other authentic sources, I lost no time in waiting on Colonel Hill at Up-Park Camp, and asking his assistance, which he very readily afforded me, in obtaining such farther information as might enable your Lordship to put an end to an ill-disguised system of slavery, which is still manifestly carried on, within range of the guns of a British fortress, and with the direct sanction of chiefs and princes of the Fantee race, who could not maintain themselves in power for a day, against the more warlike Ashantees, without the protection of those very guns.

Colonel Hill having afforded me an opportunity of conferring on this subject with Captain Murray, I was informed by him that the pawn system is carried on in the Fantee country to such an extent as to embrace almost the whole population, 99 out of every 100 being, as he conceives, in this kind of servitude.

With the permission of Colonel Hill, I had also an opportunity of seeing Corporal Gordon, who left Cape Coast Castle about 2 years ago, and Sergeant Edwards, of the same regiment, who arrived from thence with a detachment about a fortnight ago.

The statement of Gordon is, that his father, William Ward, had held his mother Elizabeth as a pawn, and had afterwards married her, and that he was the eldest son of the marriage ; that a sister, Mary Ward, older than himself, is now living a free woman at Cape Coast, the mother of 4 children. Gordon states also that his father died 15 years ago, when he himself was 10 years old, and that his father's chattels and other property, including his mother in her original character of a pawn, were then seized by his father's brother, Lawrence Hooper, the brother of mature age being preferred to the minor son by the laws of the Fantee country, to the inheritance of the property of the deceased father.

Captain Murray seems to confirm this view of the matter, and suggests, that even the succession to the authority of the king or chief descends there in the collateral instead of the direct line.

It is stated by Sergeant Edwards that, shortly before he left Cape Coast Castle, he had heard that Elizabeth Ward had been carried into the house of Amon, a caboceer or head man, under the orders of King Agra ; that both of them live within a quarter of a mile of our castle walls ; and that the poor woman was held there a prisoner in chains, preparatory to her being sent for sale as a slave into the Ashantee country ; where, in the opinion of Sergeant Edwards, she would probably be considered as equal in value to about a Spanish doubloon. Under the influence of the threat of Sergeant Edwards, that if not immediately released, he would report the case to Governor Wynyard, Elizabeth Ward was restored, not to a state of freedom, but to her previous condition, as the pawn of Lawrence Hooper.

The complainant, Peter Gordon, is able to read and write, and appears to be otherwise a person of some intelligence, which his promotion to the rank of a non-commissioned officer confirms. He states that he received a letter from his mother by the transport which lately brought here a detachment of his regiment, complaining of the treatment she had received, as stated and confirmed by Sergeant Edwards : but the letter itself, on being sent for, was found to have been lost or mislaid.

I proposed to transmit a copy of this despatch to Her Majesty's Commissioners at Sierra Leone, by the opportunity which a change of troops is about to afford ; and having conferred with Sir Charles Grey on the subject, I shall also send a copy of it to his Excellency for transmission to the Colonial Office.

I have proposed to my colleague, Mr. Hamilton, to concur with me in the communications ; but, while he entirely approves of what I am doing, he prefers that, on this occasion, I should act independently.

No. 82.—Her Majesty's Commissioners to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received December 22.)

Jamaica, November 18, 1848.

WE take the liberty of submitting to your Lordship's notice a printed copy of the votes of the House of Assembly of Jamaica, dated yesterday, containing a memorial addressed to Her Majesty the Queen, on the subject of the execution of the Treaties with the Spanish and Brazilian Governments for the suppression of the Slave Trade; a similar address has been agreed to by the Board of Council, and both documents will doubtless be transmitted in the regular course by his Excellency the Governor to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The leading point to which our local legislature thus solicits the attention of Her Majesty's Government appears to be the renewal of the negotiation upon which your Lordship entered with the Government of the Queen Regent of Spain in 1840, for the extension of the powers of the Mixed Court at the Havana to an inquiry into the legal status and condition of the native-born Africans now in slavery in Cuba and Porto Rico, so as to secure to those who have been introduced there since 1820, in violation of Spanish law, and in contravention of international Treaties that right to their freedom to which they are entitled, and which the 2 contracting Governments appear to be bound to them and to each other to guarantee.

Another point embraced in these memorials and in the discussions of the legislature which led to them, is the present condition and remaining numbers of that unhappy class of persons known familiarly by the name of "the emancipados." To this subject we took the liberty of drawing your Lordship's attention by our despatch of the 3rd of January, 1846, without entertaining the remotest idea of throwing blame on any British officer whatever, but actuated purely and simply by the wish that persons of this class should not be deprived of their rights by the fraudulent substitution of others who had either purchased their redemption under the operation of the law of Spain, which is known to be applicable to another class of slaves called cuartados, and who had either become desirous of leaving a country where slavery prevails, or whose longer residence in Cuba had become unwelcome to the authorities.

By the printed papers which have lately reached us, it appears that your Lordship had referred our despatch to Mr. Kennedy, who, from his answer, appears to have misunderstood the intent and spirit of the statement he was desired to explain. Every one of the negro passengers brought here by the steam-packets from Havana, so far as our inquiries extend, is provided with some sufficient written authority for leaving the Spanish dominions. Sometimes it consists of the ordinary letters of manumission in favour of an African or creole slave, together with the usual passport in favour of a person of free condition. Sometimes also, but in rarer instances, so far as our observations extend, this authority consists merely of the decree of the Mixed Court, which, instead of being delivered at the time to the party in whose favour it was pronounced, was handed over to the Captain-General of Cuba, whose habit it then was to retain these certificates of freedom in his own possession, not for the purpose of securing the liberty of the emancipated slave, but in order to derive a profit to himself and his subordinates by hiring him out at exorbitant rates for successive terms of years. The mere fact that these certificates must all bear some date between the year 1820 and the year 1835, affords sufficient evidence that justice has not been done to this unfortunate class of persons, and it would clearly be intolerable that the large number of these emancipados for whose absolute freedom the Spanish Government has made itself responsible, should, in any way, be diminished by substituting for them the names of ordinary slaves, who, by large payments in money, had legally entitled themselves to their letters of manumission.

Now the fact that the negroes delivered over by the Captains-General of Cuba within the last 5 years to Her Majesty's Commissioners at the Havana, for the purpose of removal to a British colony, have not been all of the true class of emancipados, does not in the least degree depend upon the knowledge which either of us possesses either of pure Castilian or of that corrupted dialect which is spoken by the negro victims of Spanish Slave Trade. We are all perfectly competent, Mr. Kennedy and ourselves, to distinguish between an act of manumission signed by a Spanish notary, with a common passport annexed, and a certificate of emancipation signed by the British and Spanish Judges of the Mixed Court at the Havana. Our statement, dated in January, 1846, was that, after a careful examination of the passports of the negroes, who in the previous year 1845, had been consigned by the superintendent of liberated Africans at the Havana to the Agent-General of immigration in Jamaica, we had not been able to find that they really in general belonged to the class of emancipados at all, and that from the conversations which Mr. Turnbull had held with more than 20 of their number, it rather appeared that they were for the most part of the larger class of free persons of colour, who had either been born free or had acquired their freedom by manumission, or otherwise, in the ordinary course of things.

This statement we considered at the time sufficiently circumstantial to entitle it to your Lordship's attention. We never imagined that it could give any one offence, and we have seen with some surprise that Mr. Kennedy, writing from London on the 20th August, 1847, attempts to throw a doubt over its accuracy.

Within 10 days from that very date, however, Her Majesty's Acting Commissioner, Mr. Crawford, writing from the Havana, transmits to your Lordship a list of 6 persons, whom, repeating the language of Captain-General O'Donnell, he describes as belonging to the class of emancipados, although in reality only one of the 6 belonged to that class, while the other 5, although no doubt victims of the Slave Trade, had been brought to Cuba in vessels which had not been condemned by the Mixed Court, and whose case therefore afforded a clear justification of that previous statement of ours which Mr. Kennedy has thought himself justified in calling into question.

Still less, in the face of our statement, that Mr. Turnbull had conversed with more than 20 of the persons so consigned to the Agent-General of immigration in Jamaica, is Mr. Kennedy entitled to insinuate, as he does in a subsequent letter, that Mr. Turnbull had met only with one or two of such persons, and that even of these he had not been able to understand the language. The fact is, that these conversations in general took place in the office of the sub-agent of immigration at Kingston, or on board the several steam-packets, in the presence of the sub-agent, who was in the habit, on the arrival of the supposed emancipados, to invite Mr. Turnbull to assist him as an interpreter. The gentleman in question, Mr. R. Sydney Lambert was also a stipendiary magistrate, but having since returned to England, is now resident at Bristol, where we believe he can readily be referred to.

In the archives of the Mixed Court at the Havana there must exist, we apprehend, a specific list seriatim et nominatim of every individual African brought into the ports of Cuba by Her Majesty's cruizers, and declared by the Judges of that court to be entitled to his freedom. These lists, therefore, afford a clear and definite measure of the extent of the responsibility of the Government of Her Catholic Majesty with respect to these emancipados. Of that responsibility the Spanish Government can only be relieved in one of three ways.

1st. By evidence of the death of each individual emancipado ; or 2ndly. By evidence of his now living under Spanish protection in a state of perfect freedom ; or 3rdly. By his transference to the care of some duly qualified British authority.

It humbly appears to us that Her Majesty's Government is intitled to inquire into the personal history of every individual emancipado, and as the Spanish authorities in Cuba, from the Captain-General downwards, have systematically sanctioned the maintenance of the class in a servile condition of the lowest and most degraded character, the Queen's Government is surely intitled to have some better evidence of the fact that the survivors are living in the actual enjoyment of their freedom than the mere certificate of such a man as General O'Donnell, who has been notoriously in the habit of deriving to himself a large pecuniary benefit through the unrequited services of those very persons.

In support of this view of the matter, we need only recall your Lordship's attention to the recorded case of the emancipado Gavino, who, in the course of his unhappy career, had been transferred and re-transferred for 4 several terms of 5 years each, at a profit to successive Captains-General of 36 doubloons, and for bringing whose case under the notice of the Prince of Anglona in 1840, Her Majesty's Consul was threatened with the delivery of his passports.

We have prepared an abstract from the Parliamentary papers of the numbers of persons whom the Spanish authorities describe as emancipados, and to whom they affirm they have delivered the certificates of their freedom, with the names of the slave-vessels in which they are said to have been captured, and the numbers of the children to whom the females have given birth since their arrival in the island of Cuba.

This abstract may possibly facilitate an inquiry into the number of those who remain to be accounted for.

We have, &c. D. TURNBULL.

(Inclosure 1.)—Memorial to the Queen from the House of Assembly of Jamaica.

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Memorial of the Assembly of Jamaica.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

WE, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Assembly of Jamaica, approach your Majesty with ardent feelings of attachment to your Majesty's person, as the Sovereign of a great empire, distinguished alike for benevolent as for glorious achievements.

In offering this expression of our devotedness and attachment to your Majesty's person and Government, we beseech your Majesty graciously to permit us, in the name of the entire body of inhabitants of this colony, to express our regret that the unwearied and generous efforts of the nation should be yet found insufficient to effect the abolition of the African Slave Trade, or to enforce the faithful fulfilment of those Treaties, which have been entered into for the accomplishment of that humane and desirable object.

We would humbly show to your gracious Majesty, that when Great Britain abolished the traffic in slaves on the coast of Africa, in 1807, the Parliament shortly after ensured the rigid prohibition of the trade to British subjects, by declaring it felony in any person under British allegiance to be concerned in pursuing it: and the Government by the Treaties with other nations, promoted, as a solemn obligation, the abandonment of the trade by all other Christian people whatever; strenuous exertions have accordingly been used, and expensive sacrifices have been made, to induce other countries to follow Great Britain in this work of humanity. A series of Treaties have been effected, having for their object, an universal league and co-operation for extinguishing this disgraceful and inhuman traffic, and the moral influence of Great Britain has succeeded in putting an end to the exportation of slaves from Africa by all the Powers of the world, except by Spain and by Brazil, which, removed from the constraint of a colony of Portugal, now continues the traffic as an independent empire.

By recent Treaties, Portugal, which for a long time had aided in covering the importation of Africans into the Brazils, now appears to have determined in good faith to enforce the laws made for the abandonment of the traffic; but your memorialists humbly show to your most gracious Majesty, that the people in the Brazils, in spite of the obligations of Portugal, by which they had bound themselves, and in violation of their own engagements as an independent Power, have persevered to the present day in pursuing the unholy traffic, and that in defiance of stipulated pledges, the Spanish Government is unwilling to fulfil its solemn engagements to terminate the trade.

Your memorialists show, that by Article X of a Treaty of Alliance, made on the 19th of February, 1810, between Portugal and Great Britain, and by subsequent Conventions and Treaties entered into on the 22nd of January, 1815; the 28th of July, 1817; the 11th of September, 1817; the 15th of March, 1823; and again in 1826, Portugal was bound to co-operate with Great Britain in the cause of humanity and justice, by adopting the most efficacious means for bringing about a gradual and total abolition of the Slave Trade, in consideration whereof, Great Britain remitted to the Portuguese Government a debt of 600,000*l*.

That on the 25th of November, 1826, immediately after the recognition of the independence of the ancient South American Portuguese colony, the Brazilian Government entered with Great Britain into a Convention, stipulating:—1st, that 3 years thereafter it should be unlawful for Brazilians to be concerned in the African Slave Trade under any pretext, and that the carrying on of such trade by a Brazilian subject should be deemed and treated as piracy; and that in the meantime the Slave Trade Convention, concluded in 1817 between England and Portugal, should be applied to the restriction of the Brazilian Slave Trade.

That on the 28th of August, 1814, the Spanish Government entered into a Convention with Great Britain, to prohibit all Spanish subjects from being concerned in the Slave Trade, except for supplying Spanish possessions; and on the 23rd of September, 1847, a further Treaty was entered into between Spain and Great Britain, by which it was agreed to put down immediately the African Slave Trade of Spain north of the equator, and to abolish entirely all slave-trading throughout the Spanish dominions after the 30th of May, 1820, and by this Treaty England paid to Spain 400,000*l.* as compensation for losses sustained and to be sustained by Spaniards in consequence of this engagement to terminate the trade.

That on the 19th of December, 1817, the King of Spain issued a decree, having the force of law, in conformity with this Treaty, and on the 28th of June, 1835, Spain concluded with England another Treaty for the same purpose, more efficient in its stipulations than any of the former Treaties.

Your memorialists show to your most gracious Majesty, that notwithstanding the provisions of these Treaties, and the several endeavours made by successive administrations in England, and the zeal and activity of their Ministers and Agents abroad, the Slave Trade has been carried on with various success by Spanish and Brazilian subjects, and exists to this day with great aggravation of all its horrors, and that the Treaty with Brazil has been of no effect; that the faith of that nation has been broken, and its engagements deliberately and systematically, for a long course of time, violated, and that the trade has been carried on by Brazilians openly and constantly, with the sanction and under the protection of the subordinate authorities, notwithstanding powerful efforts have, from time to time, been made by the Government to prevent it.

That the Treaties with Spain are likewise of no avail; that the faith of the Spanish Crown has been constantly broken, and her engagements have been deliberately and systematically, even from the commencement of the first Treaty, violated; and that the Slave Trade has been, and still is, carried on and pursued in Cuba, openly, and with impunity, under the sanction, and under the positive protection of the Governor and Government officers of that island, who disregard and set at defiance all orders on the subject sent to Cuba from Madrid, such orders being by them formally announced, while they are openly, because safely, disregarded and disobeyed.

We further show that these Treaties have been broken, and the faith of Spain and the Brazils violated, for the illegal profit of those public officers who, in the abandonment of their duty under these Treaties, not only permit the traffic to be carried on, but are paid considerable sums of money on the landing of each cargo of Africans.

Your memorialists submit, that so long as the Governments of these 2 countries, paid by Great Britain to support her in her exertions to put an end to the traffic, are permitted to violate their engagements with impunity, so long as the people can profitably pursue the traffic, and so long as officers of these Governments are permitted to participate in emoluments derived from the traffic, so long will all the exertions of Great Britain only tend to change the character, but never to exterminate the traffic. And your memorialists humbly submit to your most gracious Majesty, as the continuance of the Slave Trade by these 2 countries tends seriously to impede the successful cultivation of the British West Indian colonies by free labour, and to jeopardize their existence and usefulness as colonial appendages to the Crown of Great Britain, their agricultural prosperity and commercial importance depending, among other measures, on the extinction of the Slave Trade, it is due to the inhabitants of this and the other West Indian colonies, and your memorialists respectfully and earnestly claim it as a duty which Great Britain owes to her character, and as an act of justice due to her people and to those powers which have been guided in their policy on this subject by her influence, that she should not only continue the means hitherto used by her for the purpose of suppressing this disgraceful traffic, but that all other means, with or without force, within her power, should be brought to bear on the question, in order to accelerate the speedy and entire abolition of the barbarous traffic in human beings, and that she is justified in dealing with infringements of Treaties relating to that traffic in the same way that she would deal with breaches of other Treaties not connected with the Slave Trade.

We, your memorialists, therefore humbly and respectfully suggest and submit, that among other measures which may be adopted for maintaining the integrity of obligations entered into by Spain and the Brazils respectively, the convention proposed to the Queen Regent of Spain in 1840 (by which the Mixed Commission Report, established at the Havana, was to be authorized to inquire into, and adjudicate on, the condition of all Africans, not alone captured in an attempted unlawful introduction, but illegally introduced into the Spanish dominions, and held enslaved therein in defiance of existing Treaties) should be required of Spain as the only sufficient guarantee for the suppression of the African Slave Trade in her colonies; and that from Brazil a similar Convention should be claimed as a necessary security for the fulfilment of her obligations; and as the Governments of Madrid and Rio Janeiro have shown their inability to compel their subjects and official authorities to observe existing Treaties, we would further humbly and earnestly submit that it would be necessary to appoint British agents for co-operation, and for the trial and adjudication of claims under abolition Treaties. The character of British functionaries for zeal, courage, and activity, would, we feel assured, in spite of the difficulties which may be thrown in their way, have the effect of ensuring the adoption of such measures as would compel the performance of their engagements by the subjects of their Governments, or at all events, it would suppress at once those proceedings which render slave-traders successful in their criminal adventures, by the direct connivance of their officials; in the meantime we respectfully and strenuously claim, for humanity's sake, as well as for that of justice to the inhabitants of these your Majesty's West Indian colonies, that the products of Cuba, Porto Rico, and Brazil, inasmuch as they are the growth and manufacture of slaves illegally imported into those countries, be excluded from the British market. When those countries shall be compelled to respect and execute Treaties solemnly entered into by them, we shall then, and not till then, hold them as approaching us as honest competitors in the arduous business of our common staple industry.

We conclude, in the name of the inhabitants of the colony, this our respectful memorial, by fervently and devoutly praying to the Throne of Grace that the enduring glory of your Majesty's reign may be to achieve the great and proud triumph of an effectual and faithful abolition of the Slave Trade, and that your Majesty may have the holy satisfaction of securing the rights and extending the liberties of the African race, and of diffusing the principles of humanity and justice universally among all nations.

Resolved, That the said memorial do pass.

Ordered, That the following message be sent to his Excellency the Governor.

" May it please your Excellency,

" We are ordered by the House to wait on your Excellency, and to request that you will be pleased to forward to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the accompanying memorial to the Queen, with a request that he will present the same, in the most acceptable manner, to Her Majesty."

That Mr. March and Mr. Nockells be a committee to wait on his Excellency the Governor with the above message; who, returning, reported the delivery thereof.

(Inclosure 2.)—List of 1,347 Persons whom the Captains-General of Cuba describe as Emancipados, and to whom they affirm that they have delivered the certificates of their freedom, with the names of the Slave-vessels in which they are said to have been captured, and the number of the Children (412) to whom the females have given birth in Cuba, as shown by the Spanish statements in the Blue Books from 1842 to 1848.

No. 83.—Viscount Palmerston to Her Majesty's Commissioners.

GENTLEMEN,

Foreign Office, January 16, 1849.

I THINK it right to inform you that a proposal is now under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government and of the Government of Portugal, for abolishing the Mixed Commission of which you are members, and that this proposal will probably be carried into effect very shortly.

This measure has been mainly suggested by motives of economy, seeing that since the establishment of the Commission at Jamaica, no case has yet been brought before it for adjudication, and there being ground for supposing that it is very improbable that any case will be brought before that Commission hereafter.

Due provision, however, will be made on the abolition of your Commission for the proper disposal of any slave-vessels and slaves that may, hereafter, at any time be captured, and which would otherwise have been brought before your Commission.

I am, &c.

Her Majesty's Commissioners.

PALMERSTON.

No. 84.—Her Majesty's Commissioners to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received March 9.)

MY LORD,

Jamaica, January 1, 1849.

IN our last annual report on the state of the Slave Trade, we were enabled to announce, that 2 of the ships of Her Majesty's squadron, for the first time since the establishment of the court of which we are members, had been detached from the routine duties of the station for the special purpose of cruising against this odious traffic.

We have now to express our regret, that the cruise thus begun has not been attended with success. This result may possibly in some degree be ascribed to the temporary and partial suspension of the trade in consequence of the known failure of the coffee crops in the island of Cuba, and the transfer of the slaves from that branch of industry to the cultivation of sugar. But if such should prove to be the case, we fear that it will not afford any good ground for concluding that the Spanish Slave Trade has been definitively abandoned. The production of sugar in Cuba being decidedly on the increase, while the numbers of the slave population, during the suspension of this branch of the Slave Trade, are as decidedly on the decline, it appears to us to follow that, as soon as these two co-operating causes shall have absorbed or exhausted the temporary supply of labour obtained from the abandonment of the coffee plantations, the demand for labour will revive as a matter of course, and with it that sort of supply which the traders to the coast of Africa are ever ready to provide.

It is under these circumstances that we venture to renew our suggestion of last year, that as soon as a suitable opportunity presents itself, the negotiation with the Court of Madrid for the extension of the powers of the Mixed Court at the Havana should be re-opened, and that measures should be taken for the establishment of a Mixed Court with similar powers at the Court of the Emperor of Brazil, in whose dominions it is notorious that the Slave Trade is still prosecuted with unrelenting activity.

We are encouraged to press this suggestion the more earnestly on your Lordship's consideration, since we find that within the last few months its urgency has been recognized by two important classes of persons, who in former periods of our Colonial history were diametrically opposed to each other in all their views on this subject. Both bodies of the Jamaica Legislature have concurred in addressing Her Majesty by memorial to this effect; and the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society have been equally earnest in pressing the subject on your Lordship's attention. Thus the material interests of our Colonial Empire are reconciled and identified with the cause of freedom, inso-much that if the one is languishing, the other must languish with it; if the friends of humanity rejoice, the vast interests involved in our tropical agriculture cannot fail to recover from the deplorable condition in which they are involved.

The horrors of the Slave Trade are occasionally exposed to us in a very painful manner by the arrival of some miserable remnant of its victims from Sierra Leone or St. Helena; but the extreme wretchedness and destitution of men, women, and children, natives of the same country, and subjects of the same crown with ourselves, are of such frequent occurrence as to be ever present to our observation. And we hope to be pardoned for clinging to the conviction that it is within the attributes and power of Her Majesty's Government to put an end to these African horrors on the one hand, and to restore, on the other, to the inhabitants of these islands all that ease, comfort, and respectability, of which they have so long been deprived.

We have, &c. D. TURNBULL.

No. 87.—Her Majesty's Commissioners to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received April 27.)

MY LORD,

Loanda, January 3, 1848.

WE have the honour to inclose herewith the annual report, which, in compliance with Article XI of Annex B to the Treaty of the 3rd

July, 1842, the British and Portuguese Commissioners have drawn up for transmission to their respective Governments.

By this, your Lordship will perceive, 1st. That no cases have been brought before them during the preceding year for adjudication; and 2ndly. That the state of the 4 negroes (the only ones that have been liberated by the Commission) remains the same as at the date of their last annual report.

We have, &c.

GEORGE JACKSON.

EDMUND GABRIEL.

(Translation.) Hall of Sessions of the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission, Loanda, December 31, 1847.

MOST ILLUSTRIOUS AND MOST EXCELLENT SIR,

IN fulfilment of Article XI of Annex B to the Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal upon the Slave Trade of the 3rd of July, 1842, we have the honour to report to your Excellency,

1st. That during the whole of this year no case has been adjudicated by the Mixed Commission of which we are members;

2nd. That the 4 negroes liberated by the sentence of this Commission continue, as is well known to us, in service on board the ships of the royal navy of Her Most Faithful Majesty cruising on this coast, and that they are well treated there; we ourselves having seen the aforesaid negroes since the date of our last report, in good health, contented, and well clothed.

We have, &c.

(Extract.)

Loanda, February 14, 1848.

IN submitting our annual report of the state of the Slave Trade in that part of the world wherein we are stationed, it is a gratifying duty to call your Lordship's attention to the fact that, with one single exception—that of the case reported in our No. 26 of the 6th July, 1847, and to which we shall have occasion presently to revert—the measures pursued by the present Governor-General of this province appear to have succeeded in suppressing all direct attempts at Slave Trade in Portuguese vessels, although there can be little or no doubt that the many adventures (numerous beyond all precedent of late years) which have proceeded from the Brazils within the last few months directed to the south of the Line, and more particularly to Ambriz and the points immediately adjacent thereto, have all been, more or less, connected with establishments at this place; and it is a fact deserving of notice as strongly confirming this opinion, that the appearance of them on this coast was immediately preceded by the report of an alarming insurrection at Benguella, got up with a view no doubt of drawing off the cruizers from the northward of this port where they were principally stationed.

With the conviction of this connection strong on our minds we cannot but look forward with much anxiety to the moment when either by the expiration of Captain da Cunha's original term of office, which closes in September next, or from any other cause the administration of this province shall pass into other hands, as should those hands prove less honest or less vigorous in the suppression of the traffic, it would assuredly revive to a greater or less extent according to the nature of the change.

Should, for instance, an interregnum occur so as to call into existence a Council of Government, such revival, with little or no check, would be but the too certain consequence.

As an expedient to bring this about, and despairing probably to affect the Governor's removal by the open attacks made upon him in the Lisbon prints headed from this place, the slave interest had it in contemplation to combine its efforts to return him as a deputy to the Cortes at the election which is now about to take place, a project which has only been desisted from on his Excellency's determination being made known not to serve if elected.

In the opinion we have expressed above we exclude of course the operations of the Portuguese naval force stationed on this coast, which even were it kept up to its original amount, which at present it is not, can only be regarded as an auxiliary, whose value is but secondary with reference to the suppression of the traffic in comparison of that internal vigilance and police now exercised throughout this province, the effect of which may be best estimated by the complaints of the traffickers against the Governor and the unpopularity in which his Excellency is held by them.

This feeling showed itself very strongly in what occurred last spring, and which was attributable far more to their intrigues and ill-will than to any sympathy for the "political prisoners."

At the same time (and this is the best proof of its real nature and origin) this unpopularity is by no means personal. Captain da Cunha is individually respected and esteemed, but it is against his Government as opposed to that traffic to which the great prosperity of Loanda was owing that their hostility is directed.

This prosperity they consider as gone for ever, and the effect of their manœuvres which are unceasing, is beginning, we are sorry to say, to be felt very sensibly in the falling-off of the commerce of this port, and the consequent decrease of the revenue mainly derivable from that source.

The present Governor-General was installed in September, 1845. The receipt from the Customs during the financial year ending the 1st July, 1846, amounted to 187,423 dollars 550 reis: that of the corresponding year ending last July to 144,599 dollars 235 reis, a falling-off of nearly 37 contos.

The Government accordingly is becoming every day more and more embarrassed, hitherto it has found means to pay the troops and to meet, though with difficulty, the various disbursements of the province, but those of the naval station, calculated at about 120 contos annually, are now 18 months in arrears.

This default is comparatively immaterial as affecting a dispersed body like the naval squadron, seldom if ever all present at the same moment; but should it extend to the other branch of the service the consequences naturally to be expected from a soldiery of the character of that which composes the troops in this colony might be most serious.

The abandonment of the port of Loanda for that of Ambriz, the resort now of almost all the foreign vessels, is partly accounted for, it is true, by their having no duties to pay at the latter, but without advertg to the various contributions to which, under one denomination or other, the merchants are subject at Ambriz from the native chiefs, and the increased trouble and risk to which they are liable on spots where there is no recognized predominant authority, fiscal or otherwise, it is obvious that the superior advantage, be it what it may, that Ambriz may offer over this port was always open to them, and that the true cause, therefore, of the transfer of trade from the one port to the other is to be looked for in the expectation on the part of the slave traffickers of being able to coerce the Governor by want of funds to adopt a line of policy less hostile to their interest; in plain terms, to relax in what they designate his persecution of the Slave Trade.

In this we hope and believe they will be disappointed, and the rather because we have heard with much satisfaction that when recently electors were to be chosen to vote for the 2 deputies whom this province returns to the National Cortes, overtures were made in vain to the Executive offering to support the Government candidates, on condition that the passage of slaves through the interior should be winked at; but that their measures are not without their effect may be seen from a portaria addressed by the Governor-General to the Director of the Customs in July last, allowing till further orders the re-exportation of goods from hence to the factories at Ambriz, Ambrizette, Laire, Cabinda, and others within these limits, upon payment of a fourth part of the duties of consumption in lieu of the whole amount which had hitherto for years been exacted.

If this concession should fail, as we anticipate it will, of its intent, it will be an additional proof of the influence and perseverance of this all-powerful party.

We adverted my Lord to the great number of Brazilian vessels which have proceeded to this coast south of the Line in the past year, and to the artifice employed to mislead the cruisers.

This did not succeed, and the consequence has been the capture by Her Majesty's ships of probably the greater part of the slavers, 5 of whom have besides fallen into the hands of the Portuguese squadron, notwithstanding that one of that squadron has returned to Lisbon, without as yet having been replaced by any other vessel, and that the efficiency of the whole, as regards the suppression of the traffic, was materially affected by the political events of last spring, which detained the Commandant of the station with his own and other ships for many months at anchor in this harbour.

To your Lordship the cause of this fresh impulse to the traffic and of a determination on the part of those engaged in it to persevere at all hazards, and to spare no expense even to the fitting out as we see of large armed steamers, will be more readily apparent than it can be to us with our very confined means of information in this remote and isolated spot, but the fact is unquestionable, and each day's experience confirms it more and more.

With regard to the French and American naval force on this coast we have little to report.

The French Admiral was here for a few days in December last, and there has been pretty constantly of late one or more of his cruisers in this harbour superintending, it is said, and keeping guard over, the large cargoes of coal which have arrived here in quick succession during the last half year for the French squadron.

We hear no further supply is expected, and that several of the French cruisers have returned to France, possibly to be relieved by others, but on this point Her Majesty's Government will be more accurately informed than we can hope to be, as also with respect to the movements of the naval force belonging to The United States, of which we have seen but one—a small brig called the Boxer—in this port since March, 1847.

In the beginning of this despatch we alluded to one case of Portuguese Slave Trade, that of a launch belonging to a notorious slave-dealer residing in this city which was proceeding northward with several young slaves of both sexes.

This case was attended with circumstances of the most revolting atrocity, and as such it was publicly denounced in the Official Gazette, but having already had the honour to report it at length, we revert to it only to draw your Lordship's attention to the impunity which has attended the perpetration of this crime, and which will infallibly continue to attend the dealings of any individual whatever concerned in Slave Traffic, so long as the present system of dividing the jurisdiction in such matters between the tribunal of Prizes and the ordinary tribunals of the country shall be allowed to prevail.

In the case in question, when it came before the former the captured launch was declared by its sentence to be a good prize, the surviving slaves were emancipated, the owner was denounced by name, and the place of his residence whence the slaves were embarked accurately pointed out, and ulterior measures were ordered in conformity with what is prescribed by the Decree of the 10th December, 1836,* and the 14th September, 1844.†

This sentence was signed on the 6th July, 1847, and to this day the individual so denounced remains unmolested, nor does it appear that any proceedings whatever have been instituted against him.

Another instance, no less extraordinary and still more strongly confirmatory of our assertion respecting the conflicting nature of the 2 tribunals, is to be found in the case of the Nova Trindade.

A sentence of condemnation declaring the Nova Trindade to be a good prize, as having been engaged by the confession of the master of her, as well as on other evidence in the illicit traffic, was signed on the 5th October, 1847, by the Juiz de Direito, as member of the Prize Court, and on the 18th November following the same Juiz in his own Court acquitted and set at liberty the crew of that very vessel, declaring that "there were no grounds of accusation against them."

A similar acquittal, with the exception of 1 Portuguese seaman, took place in the other cases brought before him; they were all cases of proved Slave Traffic, and nearly all occurred in Portuguese waters; the only difference was that he was no party to their adjudication by the Prize Court, the same having taken place before his arrival.

As regards the disposal of the vessels when condemned, that question is now definitely settled.

Against the practice of breaking them up completely previous to their being sold, 2 representations were made to the Government at Lisbon, the first by the Portuguese members of the Mixed Court, the second by the Tribunal of Prizes.

To both an answer has been received, enjoining the exact and punctual observance of the Decree of the 10th December, 1836.

Our last year's report closed with an account of an attempt to introduce the cultivation and manufacture of sugar into this province.

We then stated that we were not very sanguine as to its success, we are sorry in this to have to announce its complete failure, the parties concerned in it have quarrelled, and a considerable outlay which can be turned to no other account has been expended in vain, and though one of the parties, the Frenchman, is said to be engaged in repeating the experiment in another quarter, there is but little probability of any more satisfactory result.

* Vol. XXIV. Page 782.

The foregoing observations, my Lord, comprise all of fact which appears to us necessary to report, but there are 2 subjects bearing so directly on the general question of the suppression of the Slave Trade, that though they have both been at different times brought under the notice of Her Majesty's Government, we cannot forbear to press them again respectfully on their attention upon the present occasion.

The first respects the abuse of the coasting trade passports given by the authorities in the Brazils, without due caution and supervisal, to vessels professedly dispatched for some neighbouring port, but in reality destined to the coast of Africa.

In almost every instance of capture that we are aware of where the vessel has produced any papers at all they have been of this character, and to show the way in which such papers are obtained it is only necessary to quote a letter found on board one of the vessels recently taken, signed by the noted Manoel Pinto Fonseca, written in August last from Rio de Janeiro to his agent at Mucabé, in which he acknowledges the receipt of a letter from him a few days before announcing his arrival in a schooner, and then says, "the schooner not having any papers it is necessary to apply to the Judge, showing and proving (justificando) that she (the schooner) having been for a long time past employed in the fisheries is desirous of taking her departure from Rio de Janeiro, for which purpose a passport is necessary, which he will soon cause to be delivered to you, and so you may come here with her at once."

In a second letter, after giving his agent directions to select from 2 batches numbered the one 170, the other 30, 6 young negroes of good appearance from 16 to 18 years of age, and to allow Senhor Francisco Domingues de Azevedo to choose out 6 more, he orders the remainder in the state in which they were to be delivered to Senhor Iné Maria Gomes, and those which came addressed to Iné Caetano, he says, are to be given into the hands of whomsoever he may appoint, as he will settle with me here for the freight and landing; and then he goes on to say, "I have already advised how to manage to obtain papers for the schooner. I believe that all will be got, so come here as soon as possible."

By the Decree of the Regency of the 12th April, 1832,* for carrying into effect the law prohibiting the importation of slaves into Brazil, dated the 7th November, 1831,† it is declared in Article I, that "every vessel shall be visited by the police immediately preceding her departure."

In the face of this regulation, we find vessels as above described, day after day, openly leaving not only Brazilian outports, but even the port of Rio de Janeiro with slave cargoes and equipments, and avowedly destined for the coast of Africa, and what has recently happened shows that not even a circumstance so calculated to awaken suspicion as the departure of steam-ships with the same destination is sufficient to excite the attention of the Imperial Government.

We have not heard of any but vessels with Brazilian papers, or vessels without any papers at all, being now actually engaged in slave traffic; but the frequent departures from Rio de Janeiro of American and other vessels for the coast of Africa with cargoes suited for the same, would seem to indicate a close connection between the one and the other.

The Malaga, which since we began this despatch we have heard was taken by Her Majesty's brig Ferret, with a full cargo of slaves in December last, is a strong confirmation of this.

The Malaga cleared out from Rio de Janeiro as an American vessel on the 30th September preceding for the coast of Africa, and we understand that a great part of the original American crew were on board when she was taken.

Under such circumstances, it is evident that so long as these and similar abuses shall be connived at by the Imperial Government or its local authorities, no naval force on the coast of Africa, however numerous, can suffice to suppress the traffic, unless a corresponding force, even though it should not be to so great an amount, be contemporaneously stationed on that of Brazil, and the egress of vessels from her ports be again narrowly watched, as was the case prior to 1845; because, whatever may be the activity of Her Majesty's squadron on this side of the Atlantic, still many vessels must necessarily escape their vigilance, which, when they have once succeeded in clearing this coast, have little further molestation to apprehend.

The second point to which we would draw your Lordship's attention has reference to the disposal of the prize crews taken by Her Majesty's cruisers.

The necessity of doing away with the impunity of these persons was strongly insisted on in the evidence taken before the Duke de Broglie and the Right Honourable Stephen Lushington, D.C.L., in the spring of 1845, and represented as only second in importance to the establishment of an universal right of search; and yet what is the practice? (whether unavoidable or not Her Majesty's Government will decide.) These persons, unless the prize be sent before a Mixed Commission, are for the greater part released instantaneously, or at the most carried to the place of adjudication, from whence every facility is afforded them for their return to their own country, entailing thereby, it may be, considerable expense on the British Government, and, what is a far more serious consideration, enabling, not to say encouraging, those who by liability to an effective personal punishment might be deterred from again engaging in the traffic to persevere in it to the last.

The consequence is such as might be expected.

The same individuals quickly re-appear on the coast with renewed energies and experience.

In 3 instances of vessels recently brought before the Prize Court in this city, the masters of them acknowledged that they had been previously taken within no very distant period, and the same we understand to have occurred with some of those captured by Her Majesty's cruizers.

On a perusal of the operations of Her Majesty's naval force on this coast to the present time, your Lordship will, no doubt, be struck by the unprecedented number of captures made by British cruizers, an amount which, although we cannot from any means within our reach establish the fact authentically, will be found probably to give a total far exceeding that of any previous year.

Her Majesty's steam-sloop Styx alone has taken within these last 6 months 21 vessels in the vicinity of Ambriz.

Creditable, however, as this result must undoubtedly be considered to the zeal, activity, and intelligence by which it has been attained, we should, we fear, be only deceiving Her Majesty's Government, were we to hold out the expectation that by such losses, however severely they may fall on this or that individual, any very material check will be given to the traffic.

Still less are we able to congratulate your Lordship thereupon with that unmingled satisfaction which the capture of so many slave-vessels would, at first sight, seem to warrant, for your Lordship will not fail to observe, that though these 21 vessels (we speak only now of the Styx's prizes, ex. gr.) were all fully equipped and prepared for the reception of their human cargoes, not one had any slaves on board when taken.

These vessels averaging in round numbers 150 tons each, would suppose upwards of 6,000 slaves to have been in readiness for embarkation, because it is well known that a slaver will ship her cargo in the course of a very few hours, and that, consequently, she does not make her appearance on the spot whence she proposes to take her slaves till she has reason to believe that all is ready; but assuming, as we are disposed to do, that the 8 old and unseaworthy craft among them were only used the better to facilitate the operations of the remainder, and that they were not, in fact, reckoned upon for shipping any cargo at all themselves, the number might be taken upon a very moderate computation at about 3,000.

We have, &c. GEORGE JACKSON.

No 92.—Viscount Palmerston to Her Majesty's Commissioners.

GENTLEMEN,

Foreign Office, July 31, 1848.

I HAVE to refer you to your despatch of the 13th of November, 1847, in which you stated that the Governor-General of Angola had represented to the Portuguese Government the difficulty of carrying into execution the Decree of the 10th of September, 1846, for breaking up and selling in different pieces slave-vessels condemned by the Portuguese Prize Court at Loanda, and had proposed that that decree should be so far modified as to allow of such vessels being sold entire, the purchaser covenanting to break it up within 3 months from the date of sale, and the Prize Court being invested with full power to enforce this obligation. I transmitted a copy of that despatch to Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon, and I instructed him strongly to urge the Portuguese Government to refuse compliance with this application of the Governor-General of Angola, and to recommend that, if these slave-vessels cannot be broken up, they should be burnt; because it appeared to me obvious that, if the proposal of the Governor-General were complied with, no such condemned vessels would ever be broken up by the purchasers, and that they would probably all go back to the Slave Trade.

Sir Hamilton Seymour has reported to me that fresh instructions were sent from Lisbon on the 30th of May to the Prize Court at Loanda, to enforce the execution of the Decree of September, 1846; and I herewith transmit to you, for your information, a copy of a despatch which I have recently addressed to Sir H. Seymour, instructing him to suggest to the Portuguese Government that if it should be represented that the process of breaking up these condemned vessels is troublesome and expensive, it may be answered that a small quantity of gunpowder, properly applied, would effectually break up any slave-vessel.

GENTLEMEN,

Foreign Office, October 9, 1848.

WITH reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the difficulty experienced in carrying into execution the decree issued by the Portuguese Government on the 10th of September, 1846, for breaking up slave-vessels condemned by the Portuguese Prize Court at Loanda, I transmit to you herewith for your information a copy of a despatch, together with its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon, stating that the Portuguese Government have adopted a suggestion which I directed him to make to them, that the condemned slave-vessels should be destroyed by gunpowder, and it seems that orders to that effect have already been dispatched to the Governor-General of Angola.

No. 116.—Her Majesty's Commissioners to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received November 8.)

MY LORD,

Loanda, August 21, 1848.

FOR some time past reports had been current here of the appointment of a new Governor-General of Angola, but nothing certain was known on the subject till the 15th instant, when Her Most Faithful Majesty's corvette Oito de Julho arrived from Lisbon, having sailed thence on the 4th of June, and having on board Brigadier-General Adrião Accacio do Silveira Pinto, whom by Decree of the 18th of February, 1848, Her Majesty the Queen of Portugal was pleased to name to that post.

This decree is accompanied by another of the same date relieving Captain Pedro Alexandrino da Cunha from his duties as Governor, his time of service having expired.

In this decree Her Majesty speaks of the efficacious and persevering services rendered by that officer in the Portuguese possessions in the south-western parts of Africa, and of placing him in testimony thereof, in some other situation where he may have an opportunity of serving the public no less usefully.

To this testimony, and more particularly as regards the zealous watchfulness of Captain da Cunha in the repression of the Slave Trade, it may, perhaps, be permitted us, my Lord, on this last occasion to add that of ourselves, and to say that it would be impossible to speak in too high terms either of the probity or the constant exertions of the late Governor in carrying out the views of our respective Governments in this respect.

In the decree appointing the new Governor, reference is also made to his long public career, and to the zeal and efficiency evinced by him during the same.

We understand that, having served in the Peninsular war, he held the appointment of Governor of Macão for 5 years, and was recently on the staff of the Duke of Terceira when that nobleman was made prisoner at Oporto.

The Brigadier-General was installed on the 17th instant, and having been previously presented to him at an entertainment given by his predecessor, the members of the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission, waited on his Excellency according to appointment, and were very courteously received.

The Oito de Julho is commanded by Captain Manoel Thomaz da Silva Cordeiro, who replaces Captain Cardozo, in the command of the naval station on this coast.

The latter officer, lately elected deputy to the Cortes, returns to Europe, as well as the ex-Governor, by the first opportunity.

We have, &c. GEORGE JACKSON.

Loanda, August 22, 1848.

HAVING in our preceding despatch reported for your Lordship's information the arrival and installation of the new Governor-General of this Province, we are sorry to be obliged to add that his Excellency has brought out with him instructions addressed respectively to the squadron and to the Prize Court which will, we fear, go far to render nugatory any further naval operations on the part of the Portuguese in the suppression of the Slave Trade.

Portuguese cruizers are now strictly forbidden either to visit or detain any foreign vessel with or without slaves on board, not actually within the range of cannon shot, or 3 miles from the shore, even though such vessel should have been first seen and chased within that distance, and the Prize Court is prohibited from taking cognizance of any foreign vessel taken under such circumstances.

These instructions are also communicated to the Portuguese Commissioners in the Mixed Court.

Your Lordship will, perhaps, remember that on a former occasion we reported the way in which the Commandant of the Portuguese naval station spoke of the limits prescribed to him as so "many planks of safety for the traffickers."

This feeling must necessarily be much strengthened by the receipt of the present instructions, and will, it is to be apprehended, tend greatly further to discourage the exertions of the naval force on this coast, already enjoying but little of the personal stimulus which other services hold out to captors.

Simultaneously with these instructions, the sentence of the Court of Appeal at Lisbon, in the case of the Flor de Campos, was made public.

That vessel, a Brazilian, was taken, as is known to your Lordship, towards the close of the year 1846, with nearly 200 slaves on board, and condemned in the Prize Court by the unanimous sentence of all its members, as "having been found on the coast of the Portuguese dominions without papers, with a cargo of slaves, the same being an infraction of the Decrees of the 10th of December, 1836, and the 14th of September, 1844," and the slaves received letters of emancipation.

On the crew of the Flor de Campos being tried before the Juiz de Direito, that judge acquitted the Brazilian and Spanish subjects forming part of the crew on the ground that the capture was made at sea beyond 3 miles (the distance was, in fact, upwards of 12) from the shore, and condemned 1 Portuguese sailor found on board, conformably to the 2nd Clause of Article XIX of the Decree of 1836, to 2 years of forced service on board ship.

This sentence was referred by appeal to the Relação, at Lisbon, whither the whole crew, with the exception of the master, who remained on bail at Loanda, were sent.

That tribunal, on the 15th of April last, with one dissentient voice, confirmed the sentence of the Juiz de Direito in this province, as regards the foreigners, declaring that the capture of the Flor de Campos was illegal, and reversed it as regards the Portuguese subject, asserting that the same principle applied equally in his case, and that the detention of the vessel being illegal, his apprehension was so likewise, nor could he be punished under the Decree of the 10th of December, 1836.

His Excellency the new Governor professes publicly his intention of treading in the steps of his predecessor, and that in an address to the inhabitants of the province of Angola, he assures them of his protection of all their "legitimate" interests; the only allusion, direct or indirect, which we have yet noticed as falling from him, bearing at all upon the slave question.

Speaking of the sentence of the tribunal at Lisbon, in the case of the Flor de Campos, his Excellency said the principle there laid down might require the restoration of the vessel, the surrender of the slaves found on board was at least absolutely out of all question, they had already been made free, and no power could replace them in a state of slavery.

Foreign Office, December 11, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatch dated the 22nd of August last, in which you inform me that the Portuguese Government has recently addressed peremptory instructions to the squadron and to the Prize Court, in the province of Angola respectively, to the effect that no Portuguese cruizer is henceforward to visit or detain any foreign vessel with or without slaves on board, not actually within the range of cannon shot, or 3 miles from the shore, even though such vessel should have been first seen and chased within that distance; and that the Prize Court is prohibited from taking cognizance of any foreign vessel under such circumstances. These instructions, it appears, have been issued in consequence of remonstrances which have been made by the Brazilian Government against the capture of Brazilian vessels by Portuguese cruizers.

I have to observe to you that I apprehend the course which the Portuguese Government is pursuing in regard to these matters is the only legal one which they could pursue, and that unless Portugal had a Treaty with Brazil giving mutual rights of search, Portuguese cruizers are not by the law of nations intitled to interfere with Brazilian slavers when beyond the 3 mile limit, which is the extent of territorial jurisdiction.

No. 121.—Her Majesty's Commissioner to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received December 28.)

MY LORD,

Loanda, October 13, 1848.

A QUESTION having arisen on the recent change which has taken place, as well in this Government as in the command of the naval station, respecting the powers of the Curator with reference to liberated negroes who may have become soldiers or sailors in the regular land or sea forces of the State in whose territories they shall have been emancipated, the archives of the Board of Superintendence were consulted to ascertain precisely what occurred in the case of the 4 negroes captured on board a launch by Her Most Faithful Majesty's corvette Relampago, in 1845, and liberated by sentence of the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission of the 29th March of that year.

On search, however, being made, it appeared that at that time the office of Curator was held by another individual since dead, and no satisfactory account could be traced in the archives of the Board, of the proceedings had on that occasion, nor could the receipt of the Government for the negroes, which the last clause of Article XX of Annex C to the Treaty says, "shall be delivered to the Curator at the time of the enlistment," be anywhere found.

Under these circumstances, I considered it my duty to propose to the present Governor a special meeting of the Board, for the double purpose of giving full effect to the whole of the aforesaid Article XX, and of definitively instructing the Curator on the question which had been raised, namely, whether his inspection of liberated negroes, disposed of in conformity with that Article, ceased upon delivery to him of the specified receipt above referred to.

His Excellency very readily concurred with me in the propriety of this step; and, in inclosing, as I have the honour to do herewith, in original and translation, a copy of the minute of the Board of Superintendence, which was held on the 9th instant, I can only express my hope that the view I have taken of this point, in conjunction with the Portuguese member of the Board, will meet with your Lordship's approval.

The terms of the Articles bearing on this question do not seem to be very explicit, but combining the wording of Article XIX with that of Article XX, and with considerations of general expediency as resulting from military discipline, it seemed to me that the enlistment of the negro once completed, his own free will having been previously fully ascertained, and the Government having signed a registered receipt for the same, it was no longer competent or practicable for the Curator to examine and inspect periodically a negro so circumstanced.

I cannot conclude this statement without adding my individual testimony to the highly satisfactory state of the 4 negroes in question.

They speak readily the Portuguese language, are well fed and clothed, and their whole appearance bespeaks health, strength, and cleanliness.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE JACKSON.

(Inclosure.)—Minute of the Board of Superintendence of Emancipated Negroes.
(Translation.)

ON the 9th day of the month of October, in the year 1848, in this city of St. Paul de Loanda, and within the palace of residence of his Excellency the Governor-General of this province, the Board of Superintendence of Liberated Negroes established in the said city, in virtue of the stipulations of Annex C to the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842, concluded between Great Britain and Portugal, for the suspension of the Slave Trade, met in session in order to take cognizance of the 4 liberated negroes; João Francaniz, João Cartuxo, Catumba Antonio, and Francesco Quartolla, who had entered as sailors in the Portuguese navy, for the purpose of ascertaining their condition, and whether, of their own free will, they were now in that service; because, by the minutes of the Board it did not appear that this investigation had been proceeded with at the proper time, in conformity with what is prescribed in Article XX of the aforesaid Annex C, neither is there to be found the receipt which the Portuguese Government ought to have passed on the occasion of their being enlisted in the service of the Portuguese navy, as required by the Article referred to; and the said 4 negroes being present and having with them their respective letters of emancipation, and it appearing by their names and marks that they were the identical libertos, and on being asked whether, of their own free will, they wished to continue in that service, the nature of which they now were well acquainted with from the experience of between 3 and 4 years which had elapsed since the period of their being enlisted, they replied in the affirmative; on which the Board, taking into consideration that they, as sailors in the Portuguese navy, were in the enjoyment of the privileges and protection of the military laws, resolved, that according to the true intent of Article XX, the inspection of the Curator of Liberated Negroes was, in their case, neither necessary nor practicable; on the same occasion, his Excellency the Governor-General declared that, to supply the want of the receipt, which is not to be found, nor does it appear (from the archives of the Board) to have been passed by the Portuguese Government, he was ready now to give a receipt for these libertos, in order, as far as possible, to fulfil the stipulations of Article XX.

And there being no other question before the Board, the session was closed, the present minute having been drawn up to preserve a record of these proceedings.

GEO. JACKSON.

No. 122.—Viscount Palmerston to Her Majesty's Commissioners.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 9, 1849.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 13th of October last, on the subject of the duties of the Curator of negroes emancipated by the Mixed Commission at Loanda under the Treaty of 1842, with respect to such among them as may enlist in the naval or military service of Portugal.

It is provided by Annex C to the Treaty, that negroes emancipated by the Mixed Commission and apprenticed either to private individuals or to the Colonial Government, shall reside within 20 miles of the seat of the Mixed Commission, and that all negroes so apprenticed shall be visited and inspected once at least in every 3 months by the Curator.

But permission for emancipated negroes to enlist being recorded in Article XX of Annex C to the Treaty, and their consequent liability to go whithersoever their military or naval duties may call them being admitted, it is clear that it was intended that the periodical inspection by the Curator should not apply to enlisted negroes when beyond the 20 mile limit. It is not so clear that it was not intended to apply to them when within that distance from the seat of the Mixed Commission. Nevertheless Her Majesty's Government are ready to admit that, even when such enlisted negroes are within that distance, it would be an improper interference with the Portuguese naval or military authorities for the Curator to insist on the production of such soldiers or sailors for inspection. So far, therefore, I approve of the view which you have taken of this matter, and of the rule laid down by the Board of Superintendence for such cases.

It appears, however, to have been foreseen that such enlisted negroes would be out of the jurisdiction of the Curator; for it is stipulated by Article XX of Annex C, in lieu apparently of the care of that officer, that the Board of Superintendence "shall take measures to insure that the full and permanent emancipation of such negroes should be secured to them, according to the true spirit of the regulations of Annex C.

This stipulation points clearly to measures different to those laid down for securing the well-being of negroes not enlisted, though the Article is silent as to the nature of such other measures. I abstain from offering any suggestions as to what those measures ought to be; but I have to desire that you will bring this matter again under the notice of your colleague in the Board of Superintendence, and that you will invite him to adopt, in concert with you, such measures as may effectually prevent any negroes emancipated by the Mixed Commission, and enlisted in the Portuguese service, from losing the benefit of the regulations laid down in Annex C for their welfare.

I approve of the decision taken by the Governor to give to the Curator a receipt for the 4 negroes emancipated in 1845 and enlisted in the naval service of Portugal, which formality appears to have been omitted at the time when they were enlisted; and I learn with pleasure that the 4 negroes in question are in the satisfactory condition reported by you.

I am, &c.

Her Majesty's Commissioners.

No. 131.—Viscount Palmerston to Her Majesty's Commissioner and Arbitrator.

GENTLEMEN,

Foreign Office, January 16, 1849.

I THINK it right to inform you that a proposal is now under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government and of the Government of Portugal for abolishing the Mixed Commission of which you are members, and that this proposal will probably be carried into effect very shortly.

This measure has been mainly suggested by motives of economy, seeing that since the establishment of the Commission at the Cape Verds no case has yet been brought before it for adjudication, and there being ground for supposing that it is very improbable that any case will be brought before that Commission hereafter.

Due provision, however, will be made on the abolition of your Commission for the proper disposal of any slave-vessels and slaves that may hereafter at any time be captured, and which would otherwise have been brought before your Commission.

I am, &c.

Her Majesty's Commissioner and Arbitrator.

BRAZIL.

No. 1.—Lord Howden to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received April 4.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, February 9, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that according to the best estimation I have been able to make, above 60,000 Africans have been imported as slaves into Brazil during the year 1847.

There is no doubt that this frightful number has been greatly occasioned by the concentration of the English naval force in the waters of the Plate; at the same time I learn that never have the slave-dealers so perfected all the appurtenances and appliances of their vile trade as at present; never have they so organized the whole range of shore signals from St. Katherine's to Bahia, nor established such facilities for landing their cargoes as now; and I am afraid I may add with perfect truth, that never was the toleration, not to say co-operation, of this Government more open than at the present moment.

It is a well-known fact here that a vessel belonging to this port made 5 voyages to the coast during the last year, and landed in safety all her cargoes; at a moderate calculation this single ship must have brought from 2,000 to 3,000 slaves.

I have &c.

HOWDEN.

No. 3.—Lord Howden to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received May 8.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, March 20, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship a copy and translation of a note from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, detailing his reasons for not accepting the Slave Trade Treaty which I proposed. I also adjoin a copy of my answer.

As your Lordship forbade me to make any alteration in the draft of the Slave Trade Treaty as delivered, on receiving the counter-project I shall immediately transmit it to your Lordship, informing the Minister for Foreign Affairs that I cannot enter into any negotiation upon its substance.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

HOWDEN.

(Inclosure 1.)—Senhor P. Bueno to Lord Howden.

(Translation.)

February 19, 1848.

THE Undersigned, Minister for Foreign Affairs, &c. has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of 2 notes addressed to him on the 8th and 9th instant, by Lord Howden, &c.

In the first, Lord Howden impugns the reasons produced by the Undersigned under date of the 7th, which prohibited the Imperial Government's immediate acceptance, or simple rejection of the projects for Treaties which accompanied his communications of 18th and 21st of December last, and insisting on being furnished with a categorical reply thereto, he declares that unless he receives it before the 1st of March next, he will consider the said project to have been rejected.

In the second of the 9th, he refers to the conversation which passed between him and the President of the Council on that same day in the presence of the Undersigned, and in consequence of the explanation then given, that the Government of His Imperial Majesty could not accept the projects in their present state, but would with the least possible delay transmit 2 counter-projects, he states that if he should still be here, he will forward them to his Government, concluding, after divers considerations, that he will restrict himself, until ulterior orders from Her Britannic Majesty, to such communications as may be absolutely necessary towards the fulfilment of his duties. The Undersigned, with reference to the tenor of the said notes, will first briefly relate in due order the facts which have occurred, and will afterwards reply to the most important topics. Towards the latter end of December of last year Lord Howden offered the Project of Treaties to the Imperial Government, one of them in regard to commerce, and the other in regard to the trade in Africans. 30 and some odd days had scarcely elapsed when it pleased His Majesty the Emperor to appoint the Undersigned, on the 29th of January, to the situation of Minister and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

On the 31st January, the Undersigned made the Diplomatic Corps acquainted with this Imperial resolution, and on the 1st February Lord Howden called for an immediate reply in reference to the acceptance or rejection of the Treaties which he had presented.

Without pretending to qualify what may be deemed remarkable in such a demand, the Undersigned believes that Lord Howden, on reconsideration of this fact will agree that the possibility of so prompt a solution was very premature. In the meantime his note was replied to on the 7th, with assurances that the Imperial Government continues to bestow its serious attention to such important subjects; and that though desirous to come to an early decision thereon, it would not do so without taking such time and steps as might be required in order to maturely ascertain that which was most suitable to the interests of the empire.

On the following day Lord Howden dated his note in reply to the preceding urging for a reply in regard to the simple acceptance or refusal of the Treaties such as they were drawn up; and on the 9th, before time being allowed for a reply he expressed in a conversation with the President of the Council, in the presence of the Undersigned, that his wish was limited to the desire of being informed whether the said projects were or were not accepted in the precise terms in which they were conceived, and without any modification whatever, adding that in regard to the traffic in slaves he could not admit of the slightest alteration.

Lord Howden's demand being then precisely understood, he was told that the Imperial Government, although resolved to treat, could not accept the said projects without alterations, and therefore that it was its intention to frame 2 counter-projects for the purpose of entering into negotiations.

To this declaration Lord Howden replied that he would lay them before his Government, understanding at the same time that those presented by him were rejected, which he transferred to writing in his note of that same date, the 9th, only delivered on the following day.

Such is the order of facts, the simple exposition whereof will certainly convince the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the Imperial Government has proceeded not only within the indisputable circle of right, but also is animated by the sincere desire to maintain the best relations between the 2 Governments.

It is certainly evident that it was not possible for the Undersigned to transmit the categorical answer called for during the first few days of his entrance into the Administration. Although Lord Howden presents in opposition, that notwithstanding his recent entrance into the Administration, the Undersigned became a member of a Cabinet which for a length of time was acquainted with the said project, still there cannot exist a doubt that the last assertion, were it even correct, would not be sufficiently peremptory to inhibit the Undersigned from exercising his judgment on a subject of such magnitude which is committed to his guidance as Minister for Foreign Affairs.

It is equally evident that there was no intention, nor does any exist, to delay the expression of the opinion of the Imperial Government, and a proof thereof rests in the fact of the declaration made to him on the 9th, which the Undersigned ratifies as soon as Lord Howden's wish was perfectly understood; and it became manifest that he considered the substitution of the tendered projects as a rejection of them. The Undersigned will be very explicit in his exposition of the opinion of the Imperial Government in regard to the project relative to the traffic in Africans.

The Imperial Government does not object, nor did it ever object, to enter into negotiations on this subject, as shown by official documents of irrefragable proof. Without remounting to anterior dates, the Undersigned will submit that even on the days of the recent sanction of the Bill of 8th August, 1845, which seriously and directly jeopardises the independence and sovereignty of Brazil, one of his predecessors in office, whilst solemnly protesting against that violent and unjustifiable act, declared in the name and by the order of His Majesty the Emperor, that nevertheless the Imperial Government, giving precedency above all other considerations to the generous sentiments by which it was actuated, was very desirous that the Government of Her Britannic Majesty should accede to an agreement which, in respecting the interests of the lawful trade of Brazilian subjects, should accomplish the desired object of putting a stop to that traffic, which it deplores and condemns.

The said Minister, a faithful organ of the Imperial Government, immediately after that framed the basis of a project which tended towards that double purpose, which was communicated to Lord Aberdeen, and subsequently was transmitted to Lord Palmerston, and the Brazilian Government is not the cause of its not having produced the desired effect.

It is a fact that, until the present day, we have not been able to come to an agreement, but impartial reason, if it were consulted, will repeat that which the said predecessor of the Undersigned has already submitted for consideration. The obstacle which has presented itself to the conclusion of a just, prescient, and spontaneous Treaty, has been the alternative in which the Imperial Government has been placed, either of refusing, or of being compelled to subscribe to the complete ruin of the lawful commerce of its subjects; an alternative which could have no other result than a negative on the part of the Imperial Government, as the natural protector of and watcher over the interests of the Empire.

The project actually presented by Lord Howden contains stipulations still more inadmissible. In establishing that the right of visit, search, and detention will not be exercised in the Mediterranean and European Seas, it subjects thereto all the coasting trade of Brazil, it institutes, as sufficient reason for trial and condemnation, suspicions framed even on the most groundless foundations, and refuses compensation even in cases where condemnation is not the result.

A rapid perusal of the 7th Article of the above-mentioned project and of its paragraphs demonstrates this truth; therein it is declared that any one probable evidence of those alluded to will constitute a proof primâ facie that the vessels are effectively employed in the traffic; not even the coasts of Brazil themselves would be respected. In vain would its subjects attempt to enter into any lawful undertaking without being liable to serious vexations; even European colonization, which the country stands so much in need of, would become impossible. With such capital defects, as viewed by the Brazilian Government, Lord Howden requires that his project be purely and simply accepted or rejected, without the possibility of the least modification, and goes so far as to declare that any alteration would render it impracticable as a substitute for the now existing state of things, such a fact would amount to the same as an exchange of the bill; against the protest of the Brazilian Government for a substitute, which, for the reasons given, it cannot subscribe to without attacking the rights of Brazil as a Contracting Party and as a free and independent nation. Lord Howden, whilst he cannot but be satisfied of the right which every supreme Government has to accept or to reject a Treaty according to its own judgment or conviction in regard to the legitimate convenience and interests of its country, contradicts his confession by complaining of slow proceedings, incompatible with diplomatic usages, and by the threat of impending collision and others which the Undersigned will further on record.

The march of the Imperial Government has been more just and undeviating. It attempted at sundry periods to negotiate with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, and, although unsuccessful, it respected its conviction and rights. The Undersigned may also make the same observation in reference to the range of Lord Howden's expression, when he says that his Government prefers the unjust Bill of 1845 to the co-operation of the Imperial Government: propositions of this nature are certainly not conducive towards harmonizing relations between the 2 countries.

In regard to the Commercial Convention, although it may depend upon the withdrawing of the above-mentioned Bill, the Imperial Government has under consideration the project offered by Lord Howden, and will make those alterations consonant with the liberal principles it has adopted in its mercantile relations, and will in that negotiation comprehend matters of mutual and deep interest which ought not to remain pending in order that they may not be the origin of future misunderstandings. Meanwhile the Government of Her Britannic Majesty cannot disavow that the note which the Undersigned addressed to Lord Howden under date of 10th instant in the name and by order of the Imperial Government, attests, without the least contradiction, that the politics of Brazil do not swerve from the principles laid down in the Decree of 1st October last, nor from the means for removing the difficulties now subsisting between the 2 countries.

The sentiment, therefore, of the Imperial Government is to treat with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty as soon as it shall have framed the 2 counter-projects which are to substitute those offered by Lord Howden, they shall be communicated to him, and the Undersigned hopes that justice will then be done to the sincere wishes of the Imperial Government.

From what precedes, it is concluded that there is no pure nor simple rejection on the part of the Brazilian Government, that the only impediments which obstruct the negotiations are the Bill which attacks the sovereignty and independence of the Empire, the nature of the stipulations proposed, and the extraordinary and inadmissible manner in which the concurrence of the Imperial Government is demanded. It is necessary that reciprocal rights should be contemplated, that mutual interests be conciliated, and that recourse to threats be renounced, this being, without doubt, the worst of all means for smoothing difficulties.

Lord Howden says that these difficulties, which it is certainly necessary to remove, have been occasioned by Brazil, in consequence of her conduct in reference to the remonstrances of the British Government and to the treatment of its subjects. The Undersigned, wishing to avoid all irritating expressions, will limit himself to a few observations.

If the British Legation has a few claims pending it is beyond a doubt that many others have been decided, and that those still pending have been discussed, and are in train of settlement; whereas, on the contrary, many claims of the Imperial Legation in London have not only never been discussed, but are unregarded; the argument, therefore, as to the inconvenience will, with greater justice, affect the British Government.

Similar to this is the other imputation. The Undersigned must certainly believe that Lord Howden is misinformed in regard to the treatment of the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty in this empire. They enjoy in Brazil the most ample liberty in common with all other foreigners, not because the Imperial Government measures the force and extent of power of the respective Governments, but because it is the nature of her politics, and the effect of the liberal institutions of Brazil. It is Brazilian subjects who have been sacrificed, violently dragged from imperial protection, and subjected to strange tribunals and laws.

It being, however, expedient to waive the discussion of this and of other disagreeable subjects, the Undersigned cannot withal omit to repel the insinuation manifested by Lord Howden, and which has already been manifested by one of his predecessors, that in the absence of Conventions with the Imperial Government he will come to an understanding with the Governments of the provinces where subjects of his nation consider themselves injured by their laws and call upon them for explanations and indemnifications.

Whatever may be the sentiments of the Imperial Government as to the propriety of some of the acts of the provincial assemblies, it is beyond doubt that no Government can pretend to decide the difficulties that they may create. By the Constitution of the Empire, CHInd Article, 7th paragraph, the Imperial Government is the only one competent to treat with foreign nations, and is sufficiently enlightened and provident not to tolerate such a fact incompatible with all ideas of order and international duties, and on the other hand the provincial Governments are too faithful to their Sovereign to lend themselves to such illegitimate expedients. The Imperial Government trusts that the Government of Her Britannic Majesty will always respect, in regard to Brazil, the same principles it has respected in regard to other nations in similar cases.

Acquainted with Lord Howden's resolution to limit his communications entirely to the fulfilment of his duties, until further orders from his Government the Undersigned will make the observation that he is firmly persuaded no motive has been given to Lord Howden, on which he can, with justice, found the least cause of resentment.

The Undersigned, &c.

Lord Howden.

JOSE ANTONIO PIMENTA BUENO.

Rio de Janeiro, February 23, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c. has the honour to acknowledge the note which his Excellency Senhor Pimenta Bueno, &c. addressed to him, dated the 19th February, 1848.

As his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs states the impossibility of concluding a Treaty for the repression of the traffic in slaves in the practical form proposed by the Government of the Queen, and as the conclusion of a Commercial Treaty has been made by the Brazilian Cabinet to depend on the other contingency, the Undersigned will confine his answer to the arguments of his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs to simply informing him that yesterday morning a Brazilian steam-vessel landed 900 Africans just outside the harbour, within a few miles of the fort of Santa Cruz, and within view of the forts of San João and Praia Vermelha. The above fact embraces in extenso all the objections of the Brazilian Government to conclude an efficient Slave Trade Treaty, and concisely explains, at the same time, the desire of the Government of the Queen that such a Treaty should be concluded in consonance with the declaration made by Brazil in Article I of the Treaty of 1826.

The Undersigned, &c.

No. 7.—Lord Howden to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received May 8.)
(Extract.)

Rio de Janeiro, March 20, 1848.

AN intended rising of blacks at a place called Pellotas, near the town of San Pedro do Sul, in the province of Rio Grande do Sul, has been discovered and prevented.

The slaves implicated in this plot are exclusively natives of Mina, and come from the north of the Line, to the east of Cape Coast. This race is the same that prepared the nearly successful insurrection of Bahia in 1835, and the slaves belonging to it are entirely and most remarkably different from all other Africans in Brazil, both physically and intellectually. These Mina slaves all speak the same language, have organized societies, and elected chiefs, wherever they meet in any numbers, are remarkable for their habits of order, their serious and dignified deportment, their economy, their prevision, and their sullen courage; and they are corporally the finest specimens of the human race I ever saw. It is said that the inhabitants of the province of Rio de Janeiro, afraid of the slumbering energies of such men, buy them unwillingly; and, in fact, but comparatively few of this easily distinguished race are to be seen in the capital. I have no doubt but this is the people charged by Providence with the dreadful and inevitable retribution of Africa.

HOWDEN.

No. 8.—Lord Howden to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received May 8.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, March 20, 1848.

THE existence of no less than 3 depôts and marts for imported Africans within the port of Rio de Janeiro and in the immediate vicinity of the town, is a notorious fact. The permission lately given by a Minister of the Crown to a slaver to leave this port at night, contrary to regulation (which the Brazilian newspapers stated and applauded with pride), will give your Lordship the measure of the connivance of this Government.

There is not a slave-dealer that comes periodically from the provinces of the interior, who does not know where to go to lay his hand immediately on any number of slaves he may require.

These 3 depôts are,—one at the Saco de Jurujuba, nearly opposite my house, one at the corner of the Ponta d'Anea, and one at the Ponta de Caju, opposite the Ilha do Governador.

The principal importers of captive Africans (as they are mildly called here) are Manoel Pinto de Fonseca, and the next, but with a long interval, José Bernardino de Sá, Tomas da Costa Ramos, Francisco Ravinoso y Urguelles, José Antonio de Miranda e Silva, José Antonio Fernandez Lima, Amaral e Bastos, Barboza e Castro.

Many of the above are decorated with the orders both of Portugal and Brazil, and the family alliance of the first on the list was easily sought, for the individual who has this day been named Prime Minister of this country.

No. 13.—Mr. Hudson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received July 8.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, May 23, 1848.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 31st of last March, inclosing lists of Brazilian vessels engaged in Slave Trade which have been captured by Her Majesty's cruizers and condemned by the British Courts of Vice-Admiralty, I have the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship the copy of a note which I have addressed to the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in obedience to your Lordship's instructions.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

JAMES HUDSON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Hudson to Senhor D'Abreu.

Rio de Janeiro, May 17, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c. has the honour to transmit to his Excellency Senhor Limpo d'Abreu, &c. a list of Brazilian vessels engaged in the Slave Trade, which have been captured by the cruizers of the Queen between the period extending from the 8th of August, 1845, to the 31st of December, 1847, and condemned by the British Courts of Vice-Admiralty under the Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, of the 8th of August, 1845.

It will be seen that this list comprises no less than 79 vessels, of which 71 were condemned for being equipped for the Slave Trade and 8 for having slaves actually on board, the number of which amounted in the aggregate to 2,940: and the Government of the Queen in instructing the Undersigned to present this list to the Imperial Government, order the Undersigned to represent to them that Her Majesty's Government cannot imagine that Slave Trade undertakings so extensive as those of which these captures are a proof, could be engaged in by the subjects of the Emperor, if the Brazilian Government had used any endeavours to fulfil the Treaty engagements by which the Crown of Brazil has bound itself to the Crown of Great Britain to prevent Brazilian subjects from being in any way concerned in the Slave Trade.

The Undersigned is also instructed to say that, although the above-mentioned list affords positive proof of extensive Slave Trade undertakings engaged in by Brazilian subjects, there is good reason to assume that the greater part, if not the whole, of the vessels mentioned in the other list, No. 2 (a copy of which is herewith inclosed), were employed in the Slave Trade of Brazil.

These vessels were captured for being engaged in the Slave Trade, and were condemned on that charge by the Vice-Amiralty Courts as having no nationality. But there is good reason to suppose that the slaves whom they were to ship were destined for Brazil, because the Cuba Slave Trade has latterly been almost entirely suppressed, and because no other Transatlantic State except Brazil carries on this criminal traffic.

The Undersigned, &c.

Senhor D'Abreu.

JAMES HUDSON.

No. 18.—Viscount Palmerston to Mr. Hudson.

SIR,

Foreign Office, August 28, 1848.

THE attention of Her Majesty's Government has been called to the fact that several witnesses examined before the Committee of the House of Commons on Slave Trade which has been sitting during the present session, have expressed an opinion that nothing would so much tend to the suppression of the Slave Trade as the infliction of severe punishment on the persons found engaged in that traffic.

The transportation of slaves from Africa to America is now, as you are aware, almost entirely directed to the coast of Brazil; and Her Majesty's Government are of opinion, that if the masters and crews of vessels engaged in the transport of slaves to that country could be brought to trial and adequately punished, a severe blow would thereby be given to the traffic.

You are aware that the Statute of the 8th and 9th Victoria, cap. 122, by which the British Legislature authorized Her Majesty's cruizers to capture Brazilian vessels found on the high seas engaged in Slave Trade, and empowered the High Court of Admiralty and all Courts of Vice-Admiralty to adjudicate upon Brazilian vessels captured by Her Majesty's cruizers, or being engaged in Slave Trade, did not give power to any British court of law to inflict punishment on the master, seamen, or other persons found on board such captured vessels.

Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that Parliament would be fully justified, under the stipulations of Article I of the Convention of the 26th of November, 1826, with Brazil, for the suppression of the Slave Trade, in enacting a law by which Brazilian subjects taken in the fact of Slave Trade should be rendered liable to be tried and to be sentenced to punishment by British courts of law.

But before resorting to this step, Her Majesty's Government are desirous of making a final attempt to put to the test the sincerity of the Brazilian Government in their professed desire to fulfil the engagements of the Treaty of 1826. For if the Government of Brazil would rigidly enforce the Brazilian Laws of 1831 and 1832 against slave-traders, Her Majesty's Government would be relieved from the necessity of adopting measures likely to prove unpalatable to the Brazilian Government.

Accordingly, Her Majesty's Government intend to try the experiment of sending to Rio Janeiro, accompanied by proper witnesses, the master and crew of some Brazilian slave-vessel captured with slaves on board, in order that such offenders may be delivered up to the Brazilian authorities to be tried by a Brazilian court of law.

But before issuing the necessary instructions for this purpose, I have to desire that you will take this subject into your consideration, and that you will report to me your opinion as to the best manner of carrying the project into effect; and further, that you will state to me the propable time which it would take to bring such persons to trial after their arrival at Rio de Janeiro. I am, &c.

PALMERSTON.

No. 19.—M. Lisboa to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received Sept. 5.)

Légation du Brésil, le 4 Septembre, 1848.

LE Soussigné, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté l'Empereur du Brésil, en déplorant profondément l'état anormal où se trouvent les relations du Brésil et de la Grande Bretagne, depuis la promulgation de la Loi du 8 Août, 1845,* mais animé par la nature conciliatrice des rapports qu'il a eu immédiatement après avec le Foreign Office (ainsi que par l'espoir que la mission subséquente de Lord Howden mit un terme prochain à un si fâcheux état de choses), s'est fait une règle de ne pas entraver la marche d'un dénouement si ardemment désiré par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Impériale.

Dans ce but, et pour ne pas aigrir et irriter les esprits, au lieu de les calmer et de les apaiser, le Soussigné s'est même abstenu d'adresser à son Excellence le Très Honorable Lord Vicomte Palmerston, Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique au Département des Affaires Etrangères, de fréquentes doléances officielles qui auraient pu le dévier de la ligne de conduite qu'il s'était tracée, attendu qu'il ne lui eût pas toujours été facile d'en régler les termes avec la mesure et le sang froid désirables.

Les captures et les condamnations de navires Brésiliens qui ont suivi la promulgation de la susdite loi du 8 Août, 1845, n'étant d'ailleurs, aux yeux du Gouvernement Impérial, que des fruits odieux de la force et de la violence, le Soussigné pourrait, à la rigueur, se dispenser de répéter, à l'occasion de chaque condamnation, qu'il a, à ce sujet. et en tems opportun, intimé au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, qui lui en a donné acte, une protestation solennelle qu'au nom de l'Empereur le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Impériale a depuis ratifiée et confirmée de la manière la plus formelle.

Cependant, il est une limite à tout ménagement, et en présence de la modification qu'évidemment ont subie les circonstances dont il vient d'être question plus haut, le Soussigné ne peut, sans faillir à son devoir, conserver plus long tems l'attitude expectante à laquelle il s'était condamné. Il vient donc rompre un silence qu'il lui a été parfois pénible de garder, mais, sans fouiller dans un passé qui renferme des griefs multipliés d'une grave nature, et dont son Gouvernement se réserve de demander la réparation quand il lui paraîtra le plus opportun, le Soussigné n'aura l'honneur d'entretenir aujourd'hui Lord Palmerston que de quelques procédés récents qui ont eu lieu à Bahia lors du séjour qu'y a fait un navire Brésilien capturé par un croiseur Anglais.

Vers la fin d'Avril dernier, le bâtiment Brésilien Bella Miguelina est entré à Bahia, ayant été capturé par le brick de Sa Majesté Britannique Grecian, avec 517 noirs à son bord.

La crainte d'une épidémie, qui paraissait alors imminente sur la Bella Miguelina, fit désirer, en premier lieu, le départ immédiat de ce navire; mais son Excellence le Président de la Province de Bahia changea bientôt d'avis et le notifia officiellement au Consul Anglais.

En attendant, la Bella Miguelina ayant été abordée par des canots armés—des malheurs déplorables ayant eu lieu dans le conflit—le Président et les autorités subalternes prirent des mesures efficaces pour éviter de nouveaux attentats et firent procéder contre les auteurs du premier, en conformité des lois.

Les plus zélés exécuteurs de la loi Anglaise du 8 Août, 1845, ne sauraient assurément prétendre que les clauses en soient obligatoires pour les sujets de l'Empereur. La Bella Miguelina était cependant criminelle d'après les propres lois Brésiliennes, quoique indûment capturé par un navire de guerre Anglais, à qui le Brésil ne reconnaît pas qualité à ce suffisante et légale.

La conséquence naturelle était donc que l'autorité Brésilienne en réclamât la remise au capteur, qui se trouvait dans les limites territoriales de l'Empire, pour la faire juger par qui de droit; cette demande fut éludée, et le Consul répondit au Président que la Bella Miguelina et le Grecian étaient déjà partis.

En présence de ce qui précède et des circonstances que le Soussigné vient d'énumérer, son Gouvernement pense qu'il y a eu de la part du Capitaine du brick Grecian, violation flagrante des lois qui établissent la souveraineté, la juridiction des nations libres et indépendantes dans les limites de leurs territoires respectifs; et le Soussigné est chargé de confirmer auprès de Lord Palmerston, comme il confirme par la présente, la protestation qu'a faite à cet égard son Excellence le Président de Bahia, en s'y adressant au Consul de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Mais en donnant même la latitude la plus élastique aux clauses de la Loi du 8 Août, 1845, le Soussigné cherche en vain à s'expliquer un second fait qu'il a l'ordre de soumettre à Lord Palmerston, à la charge du Capitaine du brick Grecian.

Un esclave noir, le nommé João Freeman, appartenant à un sujet Brésilien, s'évade de chez son maître et se présente à bord du Grecian en se disant Anglais; et cette simple assertion, sans la moindre preuve à l'appui, suffit pour que ce noir y soit comme tel admis, reçu, et gardé.

Le Président de la province, dans un esprit évident d'équité et de bienveillance, a proposé qu'on gardât le noir en lieu de sûreté, afin de faire bonne justice, soit en sa faveur, soit en faveur du maître—celui-ci pouvant justifier de ce titre, mais il paraît que le Capitaine du Grecian a une jurisprudence sommaire; à lui, en vertu de laquelle il s'arroe le droit de s'ériger en juge de la nationalité d'autrui, et de substituer son caprice aux formalités consacrées par la législation des pays où il se trouve. Le noir réclamé a quitté le Brésil à bord du Grecian.

En réclamant une satisfaction proportionnée à la gravité de cette offense, et de cette inconcevable déviation de toutes les règles établies pour l'administration de la justice dans tous les pays civilisés, le Gouvernement Impérial demande, en outre, que le noir João Freeman retourne à Bahia et y soit délivré à l'autorité compétente pour les fins ci-dessus indiquées.

Le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Impériale aime aussi à croire que les procédés du Capitaine du Grecian, dont le Soussigné porte plainte en ce moment, ne seront pas sanctionnés par Lord Palmerston, mais qu'au contraire prompte et suffisante réparation en sera faite, et que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique adoptera les mesures convenables pour en éviter la répétition à l'avenir.

MARQUES LISBOA.

No. 20.—Mr. Hudson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received Sept. 2.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, July 6, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith the copy of a note which, in obedience to the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 31st of March, 1847, I have addressed to the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs, upon the condition of the negroes emancipated by order of the Mixed Commission Court at Rio de Janeiro.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

JAMES HUDSON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Hudson to Senhor de Souza Franco.

Rio de Janeiro, June 26, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c. is instructed by his Government to state to his Excellency Senhor Bernardo de Souza Franco, &c. that they have had under their consideration a despatch addressed to them by Lord Howden, Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at this Court, inclosing the copy of a note addressed to him by Senhor Saturnio de Souza e Oliveira, late Imperial Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, which note is dated the 16th of November last, respecting the condition of the Negroes emancipated by the Mixed Commission at Rio de Janeiro and delivered over to the Brazilian Government, to be employed as servants or free labourers.

And the Undersigned is ordered to say to his Excellency Senhor Bernardo de Souza Franco, that Her Majesty's Government have seen with pleasure the expressions contained in the communication of Senhor Saturnio to Lord Howden, of a desire on the part of the Imperial Government to provide for the good treatment of these emancipated negroes.

But Her Majesty's Government observe with regret that this communication is wholly silent as to the detailed arrangements which have been established for carrying these benevolent intentions into effect.

Her Majesty's Government would therefore be glad to know what is the present number of these emancipated negroes? where they now are? and how they are employed? and especially what arrangements had been made for giving them moral and industrial instruction, according to the engagements contained in the Treaty under the provisions of which they were captured? and as the greatest portion of the negroes so captured and decreed by the Mixed Commission, to be free, must by this time have been for several years in Brazil, and have become entitled to their entire and unrestricted freedom, Her Majesty's Government would wish to have a list of those who have been placed in the full enjoyment of their liberty.

The Undersigned, &c.

Senhor de Souza Franco.

JAMES HUDSON.

No. 22.—Viscount Palmerston to M. Lisboa.

Foreign Office, September 18, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c. has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the note, addressed to him on the 4th instant by M. Lisboa, &c. in which, after expressing his regret at the state in which the relations between Great Britain and Brazil have existed since the promulgation of the Law of 1845, which authorizes British cruizers to capture Brazilian vessels found engaged in Slave Trade, and after stating that his Government look upon all the captures and condemnations of Brazilian vessels made under the authority of that law, in the light of the odious fruits of force and violence, M. Lisboa proceeds to bring under the notice of Her Majesty's Government the case of the Bella Miguelina, a Brazilian slaver, which was captured with 517 slaves on board, by Her Majesty's ship Grecian, and whilst under the charge of an officer and prize crew from that vessel, was obliged to put into Bahia, being in want of provisions and water. M. Lisboa complains of the conduct of the commander of the Grecian in refusing to give up the prize to the authorities of Bahia, when called upon by them to do so, as being a flagrant violation of the laws which establish the jurisdiction and sovereignty of free and independent nations within the limits of their respective territories.

M. Lisboa also calls the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the conduct of the commander of the Grecian, in receiving on board that vessel, and carrying away from Brazil, a negro named John Freeman, who presented himself on board the Grecian as a British subject, and claimed protection as such, and M. Lisboa demands that this negro be sent back to Bahia, and there delivered to the competent authorities, for the purpose of ascertaining his nationality, in order that, according to the result, he may be restored to his former master or to freedom; and M. Lisboa concludes by expressing the hope of the Government of Brazil, that the conduct of the commander of the Grecian in both these matters will not be sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government, but that, on the contrary, prompt and sufficient reparation will be made for it, and that Her Majesty's Government, will adopt suitable measures for preventing the recurrence of similar conduct in future.

The Undersigned, in reply, has the honour to state, that none can regret more sincerely than do Her Majesty's Government, the present unfortunate state of the relations between the Government of Brazil and the Government of Great Britain, and Her Majesty's Government regret the state of things the more, because as it has arisen entirely from the conduct pursued by the Government of Brazil, and from its long-continued, flagrant, and undisguised violation of the Treaty engagements of Brazil towards Great Britain, Her Majesty's Government are unable by any act of theirs, or by any change in the policy of Great Britain, to apply a remedy to those evils.

The Crown of Brazil engaged by the Treaty of 1826, that after March, 1830, it should not be lawful for the subjects of the Emperor of Brazil to be concerned in the carrying on of the Slave Trade under any pretext or in any manner whatever; and that the carrying on of such trade after that period by any person, subject of His Imperial Majesty, should be deemed and treated as piracy.

Such is the still subsisting engagement of the crown of Brazil; but from the day when that Treaty was signed down to the present time, that engagement has never been executed, but has, on the contrary, been wholly and entirely neglected and disregarded; nay, it has been so systematically and positively violated, that the subjects of His Imperial Majesty who are openly and publicly known to be engaged, not merely indirectly but directly and avowedly, in this stealing, selling, and buying of the flesh and blood of man, so far from being treated as pirates, are received and treated as personal friends and honoured guests by the men in power and authority in Brazil, whose duty it has been to carry into execution the Treaty engagements of their Sovereign : and the consequence is, that instead of the Brazilian Slave Trade having been long ago put an end to, in conformity with the solemn obligations of the Crown of Brazil, the number of African negroes yearly imported into the Brazilian territory in order there to be sold and bought and worked out as slaves, is supposed to range from 40,000 to 60,000.

In this state of things the Undersigned cannot refrain from expressing some surprise that the Chevalier de Lisboa should, on the part of his Government, voluntarily bring these matters into discussion. But as M. Lisboa has thought fit to do so it has been impossible for the Undersigned to avoid reminding him, and through him the Brazilian Government, of the long-continued violation of the Treaty engagements of the Crown of Brazil in regard to these matters.

With respect to the particular cases to which M. Lisboa refers, the Undersigned begs to say, that the Bella Miguelina was captured under the Act of 1845, which was passed by the British Parliament in consequence of the omission of the Government of Brazil to make good its engagements. That Act, indeed, was imperfect for its purpose, inasmuch as it applies only to the ships which may be found engaged in Slave Trade, and does not provide suitable punishment for the pirates who may be found on board of those ships, but such as the law is, it must of course be acted upon, and the naval officers commanding Her Majesty's ships of war are bound to obey its enactments, and to execute the instructions which in pursuance thereof they may receive from the Admiralty. It is enough, therefore, with regard to the conduct of the officer commanding the Grecian, to say, that if he had delivered up the Bella Miguelina to any Brazilian authority, he would have been guilty of a breach of duty, and that it was incumbent upon him to carry her to a British Court of Admiralty, to be there dealt with according to the law ; this course, in this respect, has therefore been entirely approved by Her Majesty's Government. Her Majesty's Government might indeed complain of the hostile attack and unfriendly treatment experienced in the port of Bahia by the officers and prize crew who were in charge of the Bella Miguelina, but the assailants sustained on the spot from the British crew, a punishment which will probably deter others from attempting a similar outrage on a similar occasion ; and Her Majesty's Government trust that the Government of Brazil, mindful of its Treaty engagements, will give the proper and necessary orders that, on any future occasion, British officers and men who may enter a Brazilian port while employed in carrying into effect the mutual engagements of the 2 crowns, shall be received and treated with that courtesy and hospitality to which they will be so justly entitled.

With regard to the case of the British subject who claimed refuge and protection on board the Grecian, it appears to the Undersigned that the captain of the Grecian was perfectly right in receiving him, and that he would not have been justified in refusing to do so. The Undersigned has in the first place to observe that it is presumable that according to the law of Brazil of the 7th November, 1831, there can be very few negroes now in existence in Brazil, who are not legally entitled to their freedom; for by that law, all negroes landed after its date were declared to be ipso facto free; and as the life of a slave is understood, seldom to exceed 15 years after the beginning of his slavery, it is next to impossible that there should be now living in Brazil any considerable number of negro slaves who were in existence as such in Brazil, at the time of the promulgation of that law; and it is only, therefore, the small number of negroes in Brazil, who may have been born there, who are now legally held in slavery. It would appear, therefore, primâ facie, that the negro in question who sought refuge on board the British vessel, was, in all probability, legally free, and not justly subject to be held in bondage, or to be restrained in his liberty by any person whatever. But at all events, no person in Brazil could be entitled to hold in slavery a British subject, and any officer in Her Majesty's service will at all times be doing nothing more than his duty, by receiving and protecting, in any part of the world, any British subject whom the subject of any other country shall have presumed to hold in bondage; and so far are Her Majesty's Government from thinking that the Government of Brazil, or any person living in Brazil, can be entitled to make any claim on this score against Her Majesty's Government or the captain of the Grecian, that if they could entertain the slightest hope that the Brazilian courts would do justice in a case of this kind, they would take the necessary steps for causing proceedings to be instituted against the person who had held in slavery the British subject in question.

PALMERSTON.

No. 24.—M. Lisboa to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received Oct. 4.)

Legation Impériale du Brésil, le 3 Octobre, 1848.

LE Soussigné, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté l'Empereur du Brésil, a eu l'honneur de recevoir la note qu'en réponse à la sienne du 4 Septembre dernier, lui a été adressée le 18 du même mois par son Excellence le Très Honorable Lord Vicomte Palmerston, Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique au Département des Affaires Etrangères, relativement à la situation générale des rapports actuels des Gouvernements de leurs dites Majestés, et plus particulièrement au sujet de la capture du navire Brésilien Bella Miguelina, ainsi que des circonstances aggra-vantes auxquelles a donné lieu le séjour de ce bâtiment dans le port de Bahia.

Le Soussigné est plus peiné que surpris de voir que Lord Palmerston ne maintient la capture de la Bella Miguelina, et le refus de la remettre, pour jugement, aux autorités locales, qu'en s'appuyant sur la Loi de 1845, contre laquelle le Brésil a protesté de la manière la plus formelle avant et après sa promulgation. A ce sujet le Soussigné se bornera à avouer qu'il ne comprend nullement comment une loi spéciale de l'Angleterre peut mettre au néant les droits et les prérogatives qui constituent l'indépendance et la souveraineté d'une nation amie dans les limites de son territoire et de sa juridiction.

La justification des procédés exorbitants qu'on a eus envers l'esclave John Freeman, au mépris des allégations qui précèdent, et parceque, dit-on, il pourrait bien, primâ facie, paraître libre au capitaine d'un navire étranger mouillé dans le port d'un pays où l'esclavage n'a pas été aboli;—une telle justification ne semble pas assez sérieuse et concluante pour que le Soussigné revienne sur l'argumentation contraire de sa première note.

Il se croit dispensé également de s'arrêter sur la tirade relative à l'hypothèse figurée d'un sujet Britannique retenu en esclavage au Brésil, et des démarches auxquelles le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté la Reine aurait actuellement recours "if they could entertain the slightest hope that the Brazilian courts would do justice in a case of this kind." Le Soussigné répète qu'il se croit dispensé d'insister sur ce passage: il ajoutera qu'il s'en félicite—la forme n'en étant pas plus heureuse que le fond, ainsi que le prouve du reste l'aménité de la citation ci-dessus.

En remplissant les ordres de sa Cour, le Soussigné a dû rompre le silence et demander réparation des griefs sérieux qu'il a énumérés; il obéit aux mêmes injonctions en protestant formellement, comme il proteste par la présente, contre le déni de justice que Lord Palmerston vient de notifier au Soussigné par la note à laquelle il a l'honneur de répondre.

La tâche du Soussigné serait à présent terminée si son Excellence n'avait pas jugé convenable de faire précéder sa décision négative par de vagues récriminations dont la véhémence gratuite suffirait, au besoin, pour en démontrer l'injustice. Blessé de cette étrange et désobligeante déviation des règles et des égards usités dans les relations internationales, le Soussigné n'a pu lire sans le plus vif chagrin, les insinuations passionnées, les déductions offensantes de Lord Palmerston; il les repousse avec la plus grande énergie de son âme. Aussi contraire à la Traite que Lord Palmerston,—que qui ce soit au monde,—le Soussigné, veut toutefois des raisons plus plausibles pour porter atteinte à l'honneur d'autrui, que l'indice de complicité (le seul clairement formulé par Lord Palmerston) qu'on s'efforce de tirer de l'allégation pure et simple que tel ou tel individu qu'on suppose se livrer à la Traite soit l'hôte ou le commensal de tel ou tel Ministre. Il répugne au Soussigné de prolonger cette singulière polémique, qu'il regretterait d'ailleurs vivement d'avoir entamée, et il s'abstiendra conséquemment de s'enquérir si les personnes dénoncées n'ont pas dans quelque opulente et philanthropique cité Européenne des commanditaires ou des commettants, et quelle y est la position sociale de ceux-ci.

Quoiqu'il en soit, le fait signalé par Lord Palmerston, de l'incessante importation de noirs au Brésil est sans doute affligeant, et personne ne le déplore plus sincèrement que le Soussigné, mais le Soussigné en déduit l'enseignement significatif, que les moyens de répression les plus efficaces ne sont assurément pas ceux de l'arbitraire, de l'intimidation, et de la force, auxquels, néanmoins, on paraît donner encore la préférence. Le Soussigné, &c.

MARQUES LISBOA.

No. 26.—Mr. Hudson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received October 7.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, August 5, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith extracts and translations from 2 newspapers recently established and published in this city, and edited by several Brazilian gentlemen, who are determined to use their best efforts to put a stop to the importation into Brazil of slaves from Africa.

Amongst these public-spirited individuals are some of the most distinguished men in the Chamber of Deputies, in the Senate, and in the Government.

The time appears at last to have arrived when the leading politicians of Brazil have shaken off their former indifference to the question of importing slaves. It is unnecessary, perhaps, to analyse the reasons which have led to the appearance of these distinguished gentlemen in the lists as champions of a cause which, if ably and vigorously handled, will prove as great a source of honour to themselves as it will be beneficial to their country.

All of them, however, are agreed, and some of them have declared in their places in the Chambers, that from the importation of slaves into Brazil flow those vices which corrupt Government and taint society.

On the 12th ultimo, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in replying to a member of the Chamber of Deputies, who had urged upon the Government the necessity of enforcing the law of Brazil against the importation of slaves, said that in his opinion one of the best means of putting a stop to that illegal traffic would be to encourage the immigration of white artisans and labourers, and thoroughly to protect the interests of foreigners and of foreign capital.

His Excellency declared that this is the opinion of his colleagues, who were convinced of the prejudice which resulted to Brazil from the importation of slaves, and who would do everything they could to prevent it.

This declaration met with very cheering symptoms of assent from all parts of the House.

Senhor Christiano Ottoni, one of the most distinguished leaders of the Santa Luzia party, declared in his place in the Chamber of Deputies, no later than the 17th ultimo, that he would give the most frank and decided assistance to any measure which tended to repress the traffic. He thought no one could be blind to the evils which must inevitably follow in the train of the late enormously increased importations of slaves.

Senhor Terraz, on the 21st ultimo, when debating the peculations which have recently taken place in some of the Custom Houses of this country, took occasion to point out how fertile in expedients and in-trickery the trade in slaves had rendered some of the Custom-House officers of Macahé and of Rio de Janeiro.

Under the Customs' laws of Brazil, goods re-exported pay a duty of 5 per cent. only to the State. The slave importers, therefore, take up goods for re-exportation and ship them as though for the coast, dispatch their vessels from Rio de Janeiro to Macahé and other out-ports, there to complete their slave equipment, and, at the same time, by connivance with the Custom-House officers, land the goods which they shipped at Rio, which are then smuggled up the country, and escape the duties of from 30 to 50 per cent. with which they ought to have been charged.

Senhor Farraz, in commenting upon these facts, declared that in his opinion this vicious state of things sprang from the traffic in Africans, which demoralised and corrupted everything.

The present mode of carrying on the Slave Trade in Brazil is on the system of a lottery; the profits are enormous, the losses are ruinous. It is a fact that there is a Portuguese in this city who arrived here a pauper and is now worth half a million sterling at least, all made in Slave Trade. This example is not without its effect on other men of the same class; consequently, the army of slave-dealers in this country never wants recruits; if bad luck thins their ranks, there is no want of the needy or of the avaricious to fill their places. If the voyages are prosperous, the result is certain wealth.

The law against the importation of slaves may be an obstacle, but the profit made is so enormous, and the pay of Brazilian Customs' officers so small, that resistance to bribery has gradually become the exception, and one general system of corruption has tainted almost all. But this is not the worst part of the corrupt arts practised by the slave-dealers ; the unhappy officer, who is first tempted and then sold to these worst enemies of Brazil, falls with less scruple into the meshes of the net set for him by the smuggler, and thus the revenue which is ample if collected, is sapped and insufficient for the wants of the State.

It was discovered only last month that there was a defalcation in the Customs' revenues of Pernambuco to the amount of 40,000*l.* sterling, and that in one department the officers had quietly pocketed the duties, and had kept no accounts at all.

It is calculated at Rio de Janeiro that the public Customs' revenue is defrauded to the enormous amount of one-third of the receipts.

Senhor José de Assis, in a remarkable speech delivered in the Chamber of Deputies on the 22nd ultimo, declared that this system of corruption may clearly be traced to the demoralization consequent upon the importation of slaves, hardening the heart, deadening the moral sensibilities, and laying the foundations of the splendid superstructure of vice, which the slave-importers have quickly raised upon them.

Senhor Goes, on the 28th ultimo, said in the Chamber of deputies, that he had remarked an assertion in the report presented by the Minister of Justice to the Chambers, that vigorous measures would continue to be employed against the traffic in slaves ; but it appeared to him that this was the stereotyped expression of every Minister, and was limited entirely to the report ; that he was of opinion there were other means of checking the importation of slaves besides violent ones ; that the Government ought to favour the immigration of white men ; to take advantage of the surplus labour of Europe, and to offer such inducements as would lead white colonists to give to Brazil the advantage of their skill in art and science ; that labour was wanted ; that the temptation to import slaves was so great in consequence of the lax application of the law, and of the corruption practised by the slave-importers, that slaves would continue to be imported and purchased if other labour was not prepared to supply its place.

I will not trouble your Lordship by a further repetition of opinions uttered upon this topic by other highly distinguished members of the Brazilian legislature.

It has been admitted by public men of every shade of political opinion, that the importation of slaves produces laxity of conduct, corruption and demoralization amongst the public officers of Brazil, and particularly in that class who are employed to guard the interests of and to collect the public revenue.

It appears also at last to have occurred to them that the reason why they cannot find volunteers for the military service of this empire may be traced to the same cause ; and public men are beginning to reflect that if 70,000 slaves are imported annually into Brazil, many thousands of white men must be employed in watching them, and consequently that in gaining the labour of so many blacks, the more valuable labour of a certain number of whites must be abstracted from the service of the country.

They feel, too, that an imported slave may prove an enemy, and never can be a friend.

It has long been admitted that the existence of slavery is a curse to Brazil; but when to that curse is added the still greater of thousands of barbarians annually imported and introduced into the very heart of society, where they become domestic servants and nurses in Brazilian families, impressing unknown to or unremarked by the Brazilians, their very features upon society in this country, which is gradually and visibly retrograding and becoming more deeply tinged with the blood of the most worthless offcasts of the most worthless family of the human race; where the African is so notoriously sunk even in his own low scale, that the creole negro spurns him as his dog, and, slave as he is himself, despises and maltreats his brother bondsman.

It must infallibly result from such a state of things that this wretched class of beings carry with them into the very heart's core of Brazil depraved manners and conduct, and a disregard of all moral obligations, and therefore that the Brazilian members of the General Assembly are not wrong in their idea that this stream of corruption, which is silently spreading over the surface of the Brazilian body politic, is tainting and polluting all that it touches.

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, August 5, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that on the 3rd instant the Brazilian Government ordered the imperial steamer Urania to put to sea with sealed orders.

She went to sea accordingly, and returned towards Rio at night, disembarking some men on the beach called Praia do Foro, on the eastern side of the mouth of this bay; the detachment then proceeded across the hills to Jurujuba Bay, where is a noted depôt for slaves. They met there another detachment of troops, under the orders of the Viscount de Barbacena, the President of this province, and both then proceeded to the slave depôt, which they entered, and seized all the negro slaves there confined.

This event has caused great consternation to the slave-importers, and comes in proof of that determination of the Imperial Government to put a stop to the Slave Trade, which I have had the honour to report to your Lordship in my other despatch of this day's date.

THE Undersigned, &c. has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the note addressed to him on the 3rd instant by M. Lisboa, &c. acknowledging the receipt of, and containing observations upon, the note which the Undersigned addressed to M. Lisboa on the 18th ultimo, in reply to the complaints made by M. Lisboa against the conduct of the Commander of Her Majesty's ship Grecian; 1st, for not delivering up to the Brazilian authorities at Bahia, the Brazilian vessel Bella Miguelina, which had been captured by him, with 518 slaves on board, and had been forced to enter the harbour of Bahia to obtain provisions; and 2ndly, for carrying away from Bahia a slave who had taken refuge on board Her Majesty's ship Grecian, who represented himself to be a British subject, and who claimed protection as such.

In reply the Undersigned has to state to M. Lisboa that he thinks it only necessary to advert to the last passage of M. Lisboa's note, and to observe, with reference thereto, that the large annual importation of negroes into Brazil is not merely a proof that the means of repression hitherto employed by Great Britain have not been fully successful in preventing the Slave Trade, but is also a demonstrative evidence that the Government of Brazil has not hitherto fulfilled, and does not now fulfil, those Treaty engagements by which it has bound itself to Great Britain to prevent the subjects of the Brazilian Crown from taking part in any way whatever in the traffic in slaves.

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, September 12, 1848.

I HAD the honour to report to your Lordship, in my despatch of the 5th ultimo, that the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs had advocated in his place in the Chamber of Deputies the introduction of white colonists into Brazil, in order to supply the place of the Africans whose present illegal importation himself and his colleagues are determined to prevent.

Since that declaration on the part of his Excellency a measure has been brought into the Senate by the Viscount Abrantes, and which is now under discussion by the branch of the Legislature, for the regular and systematic colonization of Brazil by white colonists.

I shall have the honour, in due time, to report to your Lordship the principal features of this scheme and of its progress through the Chambers.

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, September 12, 1848.

On the 1st instant the Brazilian Chamber of Deputies commenced the discussion of a project of Law, No. 133, sent down to them by the Senate with certain amendments.

As this project of law is the same as that against which your Lordship instructed Mr. Hamilton to protest in your despatch of the 4th of December, 1837, I considered it my duty to address the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs upon the subject, and I have the honour to inclose herewith the copy of a note which I transmitted to his Excellency on the 4th instant.

Not having up to yesterday morning received any reply to that note, I addressed a further remonstrance to his Excellency upon the subject, a copy of which I also inclose.

I do not transmit to your Lordship the decree itself because it is to be found in Mr. Hamilton's despatch to your Lordship of the 3rd July, 1837.*

I inclose a short analysis of the debate which has taken place in the Chamber of Deputies, upon this project of law, but which is not yet concluded.

JAMES HUDSON.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Hudson to Senhor de Souza Franco.

EXCELLENT SIR,

Rio de Janeiro, September 4, 1848.

UPON several occasions of late I have had the honour to receive from your Excellency assurances conveyed to me in a manner so positive, solemn, and impressive, of the determination of the Imperial Government to put a stop to the scandalous importation of slaves into Brazil, that I did not hesitate to convey them to my Government with entire conviction that Brazil, under the auspices of your Excellency and your colleagues, was about to enter upon a series of measures which had for their object the complete and effectual repression of the traffic in slaves.

I learn from your Excellency that the Imperial Cabinet had prepared one measure in particular, complete in all its parts, and sufficiently comprehensive to meet the gigantic evil it was intended to encounter.

From the outline given of that measure, I readily recognize it in the project of law No. 133 which came on for discussion in the Chamber of Deputies on the 1st instant, as sent down to them by the Senate, and as amended by the Imperial Government.

Without the slightest pretension in any way to call in question the absolute right of the Imperial Cabinet to frame such laws as are best suited to the taste and temper of the Brazilian people, I cannot forget, as a servant of the Queen, that it is my duty to watch over the interests of a certain class of persons whose rights have been conferred upon them by the mutual consent of the Crowns of Great Britain and Brazil.

The assurances which I received from your Excellency of the determination of the Imperial Cabinet to put a stop to the traffic in slaves, the recorded declarations of your Excellency and of your colleagues before the world, as given in your speeches from your places as Ministers of this empire in the Legislative Assembly of Brazil, wearing the solemn air of truth, and carrying with them that complete conviction which unsullied justice invariably commands, left no doubt on my mind of the honesty of purpose and singleness of heart which animated and guided the Imperial Councils.

I so expressed it to the Government of the Queen.

It was not, therefore, without surprise that I recognized in the project of law No. 133, the same scheme which the late Marquis of Barbacena presented to the Senate in 1837, and which in its 13th paragraph contains the deadliest blow ever levelled by a Brazilian statesman at the only remedy which Brazilian law affords to the slave to assert his rights to freedom.

The 13th paragraph of this project in 3 short lines condemns to perpetual slavery thousands of men and their descendants without a hope, without a chance that their doom can be changed—that their cup of bitterness can be drained.

I am willing to believe that your Excellency and your colleagues do not comprehend the drift and scope of the 13th paragraph of this decree, which declares, in terms the most positive and clear, that “no action can be commenced in virtue of the law of the 7th November, 1831, which is hereby repealed, as well as all others to the contrary.”

A comparison of the law of the 7th of November, 1831, with the project of law No. 133, now brought forward by the Imperial Government, shows that the difference between them is, that the former establishes the legal presumption of freedom, whereas the latter admits the importation of slaves, and only gives a right to their re-exportation, and entirely destroys the presumption of freedom.

By the project of law, the legal presumption is of slavery, and can only be destroyed by proof of freedom.

By the law of 1831, the presumption of freedom must be destroyed by proof of slavery.

It therefore becomes my duty to call the attention of your Excellency to the position which Brazil is about to assume towards Great Britain, if the 13th paragraph of the project of law becomes the law of this empire.

Great Britain and Brazil having mutually engaged to put a stop to the traffic in slaves, the negroes found on board vessels employed in that trade, when condemned by the Mixed Commission Court at Rio de Janeiro, were, with the consent of that tribunal and of Her Majesty's Government, apprenticed to masters in Brazil.

Your Excellency is aware from the recent correspondence of this Legation—a correspondence which yet remains unanswered by your Excellency—that there are in Brazil many negroes who were released from on board ships captured by Her Majesty's cruizers who have been apprenticed in Brazil, and who have not yet received their freedom.

The repeal of the law of the 7th November, 1831, will prevent men in the condition of these negroes from coming into court, and from commencing an action at law for the assertion of their just rights and the recovery of their freedom.

They are placed at once beyond the pale of the law. They are reduced to the condition not of slaves or of serfs, but of the beasts which perish.

Your Excellency and your colleagues cannot intend to offer this specimen of the legislation of Brazil to the world as the great and crowning work which your Excellency vaunted to me, and which I was led by you to laud beforehand to my Government.

Your Excellency is surely aware that the project of law No. 133 is merely directed against the traffic in slaves.

And that the law of November, 1831, contains general dispositions against slavery.

Your Excellency can scarcely be ignorant that this project contains merely regulations against Slave Trade, and contains no provisions against illegal slavery; that it establishes a gigantic system of slavery, and utterly abolishes all legal presumption of freedom.

Your Excellency and your colleagues cannot intend to consign to hopeless and perpetual slavery men who have a perfect right to freedom, and to whose freedom, and to that also of their descendants, Her Majesty's Government are, in my opinion, pledged, and to whom Her Majesty's Government stand in the position of a trustee.

The terms of the 13th paragraph of the project in question are so utterly at variance with the honourable, just, and humane sentiments which I have heard fall from the lips of your Excellency, that I feel assured of your thanks in offering and inviting you to clear up the inconsistency which exists between the terms of that paragraph and the expressed intentions of the Imperial Cabinet.

Your Excellency, by your speeches, and by your declarations to myself, which as in duty bound I have conveyed to Her Majesty's Government, has taken up a position before the world from which it would surely be your last wish to recede; it is the position of a benefactor, just and firm of purpose. But it appears to me that that position is perilled by the provisions of the 13th paragraph of the measure offered by your Excellency to the Chambers, and I have now the honour to invite you to explain this apparent contradiction.

In any case it is my duty to protest against the provisions of that measure, as infringing the rights of persons who I must consider as being still under the joint tutelage of the British and Brazilian Governments; and who, having acquired by virtue of Treaty stipulations, by the law of this country, and by other mutual arrangements between the 2 Crowns, positive rights, cannot now, by any species of Brazilian legislation, be placed in that hopeless position of perpetual slavery to which the project in question would consign both them and their descendants.

I avail, &c.

Senhor de Souza Franco.

JAMES HUDSON.

(Inclosure 2.)—Mr. Hudson to Senhor de Souza Franco.

EXCELLENT SIR,

Rio de Janeiro, September 11, 1848.

I HAD the honour, on the 4th instant, to address to your Excellency some general observations upon the project of law No. 133, and to protest particularly against the provisions which are contained in its 13th paragraph, as calculated to affect the interests and just rights of men who were conditionally introduced by Her Majesty's Government into Brazil, under a mutual understanding with the Government of this country.

As I perceive by the reported debates of the Chamber of Deputies that the discussion on this subject is still in progress, I am led to conclude that the protest which I had the honour to address to your Excellency, has not met with a full share of your Excellency's consideration; and I have therefore the honour to call your Excellency's attention to some further points which it is my duty to lay before you respecting this project of law.

Your Excellency is aware that when this project of law was first presented to the Brazilian Legislature in 1837, Her Britannic Majesty's Envoy at this Court, by order of his Government, entered a protest against it as subversive of the spirit of the Conventions which Great Britain had concluded with Brazil: and that the then Imperial Cabinet, upon due reflection, acquiesced in that opinion, and withdrew the measure.

It is to be presumed, from the recent declarations of your Excellency, both in public and to myself, that the spirit which heretofore impelled the Imperial Cabinet to resist the importation of slaves into Brazil, has rather increased than diminished; and it might have been supposed that a measure which a former Brazilian Government abandoned as inconsistent with its public obligations, as inadequate for the purpose intended, and as subversive of certain sacred rights, would have found no favour with your Excellency and with your colleagues.

The protest which the Envoy of Her Britannic Majesty at that time addressed to the Brazilian Government, still exists in full, nay, in greater force, so far as its principle is concerned.

The Project of Law, No. 133, is even more objectionable now than it was in 1837, and unless your Excellency and your colleagues are prepared to pursue a retrograde system of policy with regard to the Slave Trade, I feel convinced that the reasons which induced the Government of Her Britannic Majesty to protest against that measure, and which led the Imperial Cabinet of that day to withdraw it, will again meet with equal attention and a similar result.

The Law of the 7th November, 1831, enacts that all slaves arriving in Brazil after the date of that law, are, ipso facto, freed from slavery.

This legal presumption of their freedom continues to exist until it be proved that they arrived in Brazil under one or other of 2 peculiar circumstances, which exclude them from the benefits of the general provisions of the law.

The other Articles of this law tend to repress Slave Trade, and prescribe the penalties incurred by the slave-importers, in addition to those which are imposed by the Criminal Code on persons who enslave free men.

But the Project of Law, No. 133, presented to the Chamber of Deputies, although in the first Article it declares the act of importing slaves to be illegal, does not free them from slavery.

Whereas, according to the Law of 1831, freedom is the natural and inevitable consequence of their importation.

If, therefore, this project becomes the law of Brazil, an African imported as a slave into Brazil will be considered in that condition, unless he can prove that he was free in the country from whence he was imported.

There is therefore this great and remarkable distinction between the Law of 1831 and this project, that by the latter the legal presumption is of slavery in all those cases, where the former presumes and supposes freedom:

And this is proved by the 8 following Articles, which, repressing the Slave Trade on the high seas and coast of Brazil, do not contain any regulations respecting the Slave Trade on shore.

Therefore, if the slave-trader can evade the cruizer and the police officer, slaves may be landed with impunity, their sale will be lawful.

and they will be placed entirely beyond the control and reach of the provisions of this project, which is limited to the material act of carrying slaves by sea.

It follows, therefore, that the slave-trader, having once landed and housed his slaves, runs no further risk, because by Article IX of the project the right to re-exportation is assigned only to those negroes who are captured on the coast or in the ports of the empire.

The XIIIth Article of the project repeals the Law of the 7th November, 1831, and declares that no action can lie in courts of justice under its provisions :

Consequently, all Africans who have been imported into Brazil since the 7th of November, 1831, have no longer any means of claiming their freedom from illegal slavery, because the project being an ex post facto law, destroys the importance which previously attached to the period of their importation, and reduces them and their descendants to a condition of jure et facto slavery.

The general tendency of this project of law is therefore to enslave freemen, in contradiction to Article CLXXIX of the Brazilian Criminal Code.

It becomes, therefore, my duty to urge these considerations in the most earnest manner upon your Excellency, protesting against the Project of Law No. 133, as inconsistent with, and as prejudicing the just rights of persons to whom this Legation of the Queen stands in the position of a trustee ; who have a right to expect that the Power which placed them in this country shall see that no damage is done to their interests ; that their rights are not swept away by a measure springing from one of the parties to the compact and agreement under which they were brought into Brazil.

Great Britain, when she entrusted those persons to the care and custody of her ally, never contemplated the possibility of a measure becoming the law of Brazil, which would reduce these Africans (of whom I speak) as if in mockery of their service to irrecoverable slavery.

This decree, therefore, is a departure from the principles which guided Great Britain and Brazil in concluding the several Conventions and Treaties against Slave Trade ; it is a relapse to that system of law which has once already been discussed by the Brazilian Legislative Assembly ; which has been denounced by its members, and abandoned by an Imperial Government.

I avail, &c.

Senhor de Souza Franco.

JAMES HUDSON.

No. 32.—Viscount Palmerston to Mr. Hudson.

SIR,

Foreign Office, November 3, 1848.

I HAVE received and laid before the Queen your despatches of the 5th of August last: the one reporting that feelings of hostility to Slave Trade were rapidly spreading among the public in Brazil, and that the Brazilian Government had determined to put an end to the importation of slaves; the other reporting the seizure of slaves in a slave depôt in the neighbourhood of Rio de Janeiro, by order of the Imperial Government.

I have also received your despatch of the 12th of September, stating that M. Souza Franco had advocated, in the Chamber of Deputies, the introduction of white colonists into Brazil in lieu of slaves; and that a measure had been brought into the Senate by Viscount Abrantes for the systematic colonization of Brazil by white colonists.

I have now to instruct you to state to the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs, that if it really is the wish of the Brazilian Government to encourage immigration of Europeans into Brazil, and if Europeans resorting to Brazil, could upon their arrival be employed as agricultural labourers profitably to themselves, and with full security as to their personal liberty, and as to their freedom to dispose of their labour as they chose; and if, moreover, the Brazilian Government would defray the expense of their passage out, there is good reason to believe that a considerable number of families might be found willing to emigrate to Brazil from Ireland, and that there can be no doubt that such emigrants would be a useful and valuable addition to the population of Brazil.

If the Brazilian Government wish to encourage such emigration, and upon such terms, they would do well to send over an agent to this country to make inquiries and arrangements, and such an agent would receive all proper assistance from Her Majesty's Government.

I am, &c.

J. Hudson, Esq.

PALMERSTON.

No. 35.—Mr. Hudson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received Nov. 30.)
(Extract.)

Rio de Janeiro, October 15, 1848.

I HAD the honour to report to your Lordship, in my despatch of the 12th ultimo, that the Brazilian Chamber of Deputies were discussing the project of a law, the object of which was to repeal the Brazilian law against Slave Trade, of November 7, 1831.

The 12 first Articles of that Project have passed the Chamber of Deputies with certain amendments, a report of which I have the honour to inclose herewith; but when Article XIII came on for discussion the Chamber determined to discuss it in secret session.

It was so discussed, and on the 26th ultimo Senhor Carvalho

Moreira, a deputy for Sergipe, moved as an amendment, that its further discussion should be postponed until next year, and this amendment being put to the vote, was carried by 32 votes to 29.

I cannot congratulate your Lordship upon this determination of the Brazilian Chamber of Deputies.

The measure, with all its hideous features of oppression levelled against an inoffensive, unresisting, unprotected mass of human beings, still hangs suspended, and may become law at an early period of next session.

That Brazilian Government which has recently retired from office used every effort to force the Bill through the Chamber. They were met with a determined resistance from a small body of members who, more alive to the honour of their country and to its public engagements with Great Britain, stoutly maintained the position that the Convention against the Slave Trade concluded by Great Britain with Brazil in 1826, is perpetual in the obligations which it imposes on this empire.

This point was contested by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Bernardo de Souza Franco, who declared that he considered the project of law as in no wise militating against or as affecting those obligations; but, on the contrary, as the project is directed against Slave Trade, it is therefore in entire accordance with the stipulations of the Treaty of 1826.

I can readily believe that the Minister for Foreign Affairs made that declaration, because he said as much to myself at a conference which I had with his Excellency, and at which I remonstrated against the continued progress of the discussion of the project by the Chamber, and before I addressed my second note to him of the 11th of September.

That note, and the one which preceded it on the 4th of the same month, having been read in the Chamber of Deputies during the secret session, a member said, he "understood, therefore, that the British Legation arrogated to itself the right of trusteeship over all Africans brought into Brazil since 1831."

Your Lordship will have perceived that the argument of those notes is based upon a different assumption. But I am informed that the Minister for Foreign Affairs, though present in the Chamber, was at no pains to set the member right.

That Minister is now fallen; but before his fall he never replied to the notes which I addressed to him upon this subject, and I know that he used his best endeavours to push the project through the Chamber of Deputies.

Your Lordship will remember that, in a despatch which I had the honour to address to you on the 5th of August, I related the expressions used by Senhor Bernardo de Souza Franco, when declaring in his place in the Chamber of Deputies, his determination and that of his colleagues to put a stop to the introduction of slaves into Brazil, and to substitute the labour of African slaves by that of white men, who were to be systematically introduced into Brazil under legislative enactment.

These declarations were followed up by the seizure of a small depôt of slaves near Rio, and by the presentation to the Senate of a Bill to encourage the immigration of white colonists.

For a short time the public of this capital believed that the Brazilian Cabinet were sincerely bent upon suppressing Slave Trade.

The Colonization Bill was, however, no sooner presented than it was abandoned; and it was soon discovered that the slave depôts in and near Rio, where they abound, were not molested; that slave-ships fitted out in this and other Brazilian ports with the same impunity as heretofore; that at no period has the Slave Trade been more active than at present at Rio, Bahia, Macahé, and Santos; and that at no time were slaves landed with less risk of interference on the part of Brazilian authorities.

When this state of things is contrasted with the declarations of the late Cabinet and of Members of the Legislature, with the abandonment of the Colonization Bill, and with the presentation to and discussion by the Chamber of Deputies, of the Project of Law No. 133, and with the earnestness with which the late Government attempted to pass that Bill through the House; I imagine that your Lordship will agree with me in thinking that the unhappy, unresisting African, the object of all this bitter persecution, cannot trust to the friendship of Brazilian Cabinets.

Certainly at no period of the history of Brazil, and perhaps at no period of the world's history, has a more deliberate attempt been made by a Government civilized and Christian, to reduce vast numbers of men to the condition of brute beasts.

Because this project of law, by substituting the legal presumption of slavery for that of freedom (which is the basis of the Law of November 7, 1831), by repealing that law, and by enacting that no action can lie under its provisions, deliberately puts all slaves brought into Brazil since 1831 beyond the pale of the law.

The legal presumption of freedom being destroyed, is it to be supposed that an African, kidnapped at Congo, can send to Congo for proof that he once was a free man?

As in duty bound, I reported to your Lordship the declarations of the late Brazilian Cabinet against Slave Trade; the same sense of duty now obliges me to declare that it was time only that was wanting when the discussion of this project of law was adjourned till next session. The Budget and many other necessary measures were not voted, and members were anxious to return to their homes.

The animus of the project is evident: it is an attempt to escape from the obligations which Brazil has contracted with Great Britain; and it visits, in a Brazilian sense, upon the head of the unoffending African, the sins of Lord Aberdeen's Bill of 1845.

The Brazilian press has not been altogether silent upon this occasion, and I have the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship the translation of an article which appeared lately in a newspaper published in this city upon the subject of this project of law.

 MY LORD, Rio de Janeiro, October 15, 1848.

I HAD the honour to report to your Lordship in my despatch of the 12th ultimo, that a measure had been brought into the Senate by Viscount Abrantes, for the regular and systematic colonization of Brazil by white colonists.

The Viscount of Abrantes has informed me that he has abandoned that measure.

The effect of this abandonment will be to give a greater stimulus to Slave Trade; because as the friends of that measure would probably have attempted the cultivation of their estates by white labourers, they have now no other alternative than the purchase of negroes, or the abandonment of their agricultural labours.

 MY LORD, Rio de Janeiro, November 16, 1848.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 12th September last, inclosing the copies of 2 notes which I addressed to the Brazilian Government, protesting against the principle of the Project of Law, No. 133, which aimed at the repeal of the Brazilian Law against Slave Trade of the 7th November, 1831, I have the honour to inclose herewith the copy of a note which I have received from the Brazilian Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, informing me that the Imperial Cabinet have abandoned the project of law in question, and that, convinced of the absolute necessity of putting a stop to the African Slave Trade, they intend to present a measure to that effect to the Brazilian Legislature at its next meeting, May, 1849.

It is to be hoped that whatever measures the present Cabinet intend to bring forward against Slave Trade, may, if they eventually become law, be more faithfully regarded and executed than the existing Law of 1831, which, if it were duly put in force and honestly acted upon, instead of being constantly evaded and set aside, is quite sufficient for the repression of the traffic in question.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

(Inclosure.)—Viscount Olinda to Mr. Hudson.

October 26, 1848.

THE Undersigned having laid before the august presence of His Imperial Majesty the notes of the 4th and 11th of September last past, which Mr. Hudson, &c. addressed to his predecessor, in which he explains the reasons which induced him to protest against the Project of Law No. 133 of 1837, the discussion of which took place this year in the Chamber of Deputies; and from the same august personage he received orders to declare to Mr. Hudson, in reply to the above-mentioned notes, that the Imperial Government being convinced of the absolute necessity of forbidding the introduction of Africans into Brazil, will leave no means untried which are at their disposal, in order to effect it; and in the conviction that it is necessary to accomplish these ends by legitimate measures, in which the principles of justice and the vital interests of the Empire shall be consulted, will seek them from the Assembly as soon as that body shall have met. And as it is not the intention of the actual Cabinet to use its means and the influence of which it is legitimately possessed, in order to follow up the adoption of that (above) cited project, but intending to substitute it by another, which, after mature deliberation, is to be presented to the Chambers of the Legislature, it is evident that it becomes useless and unnecessary to discuss the notes to which the Undersigned has the honour to reply; a discussion which thus becomes completely aimless.

The Undersigned is certain that Mr. Hudson having to lay before his Government a knowledge of those intentions which he has thus expressed, will at the same time inform them of the aid which he expects from the representatives of the nation, in order to bring about the effectual repression of the traffic in Africans.

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, November 16, 1848.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 28th of August, upon the subject of sending to Rio de Janeiro, accompanied by proper witnesses, the master and crew of some Brazilian slave-vessels captured with slaves on board, in order that such offenders may be delivered up to the Brazilian authorities, to be tried by a Brazilian court of law; and instructing me to report both as to the best mode of carrying the project into effect, and as to the probable time it would take to bring such persons to trial after their arrival in Rio de Janeiro; I have the honour to state that in my opinion the offenders in question would never be brought to trial at all, but upon their arrival at Rio de Janeiro they would be brought up before a judge on a writ of habeas corpus, and discharged from custody.

The Brazilian Law of the 7th of November, 1831, under which alone these offenders could be tried, provides especially that the arrests of persons engaged in Slave Trade shall be made by the Brazilian "national forces."

I believe that this law was purposely thus drawn, in order to provide for the very case which Her Majesty's Government now contemplate, and therefore in the eye of that law, and under the protest of the Brazilian Government of 22nd October, 1845, the capture of these offenders would be held to be illegal, and all further proceedings at law against them would at once be dropped.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

JAMES HUDSON.

No. 41.—Mr. Hudson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 8, 1849.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, November 16, 1848.

THE most remarkable events connected with Slave Trade which has recently occurred in this province, have been the seizure of 110 Bozal Negroes, on their passage up the harbour of Rio de Janeiro, to one of the numerous barracoons in and near this city.

These negroes were delivered up to the Brazilian Government, and having been adjudged free, have been apprenticed to the public arsenals.

The other events have been the landing of the cargoes of slaves from vessels named in the inclosed list.

Your Lordship will not fail to remark the unhappy success which attends the employment of steam-power in this iniquitous traffic. The Povidencia steamer, which was built for this trade, has made 4 successful trips since she was first launched, and has landed nearly 4,000 slaves.

I am informed that there is now building in this city a vessel to be propelled by steam, calculated to carry 2000 slaves.

The importation of slaves from Africa into Brazil, in vessels of The United States, will also attract your Lordship's attention.

It used to be said with honest pride, by the citizens of The United States, that they were a "law-abiding people." The inclosed statement, which shows their utter contempt of their own law, its weakness and inefficiency, and the timidity of their own Government when opposed by kidnappers and the very scum of society, will go far to destroy this legitimate source of satisfaction.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, November 16, 1848.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 12th July, inclosing the copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Commissioners at the Cape of Good Hope, stating that Major Teixeira, the Governor of Quillimane, had absconded from that place in a slave-ship bound to Rio de Janeiro, with 500 slaves on board; I have the honour to report to your Lordship that Major Teixeira, after having landed the slaves in question on the coast of Brazil, repaired to this city, where he remained but a short time, and then sailed for Portugal, where, after being at large for some months, he was, as I am informed, imprisoned.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 16, 1849.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 16th of November last, reporting the seizure of 110 Bozal Negroes, by the Brazilian authorities; inclosing a list of vessels which had landed cargoes of slaves in the province of Rio de Janeiro, from August to September last; and calling attention to the success which attends the employment of steam-vessels in Slave Trade, and to the use of United States' vessels in that traffic.

I have now to instruct you to use your best endeavours, by seeking information from Her Majesty's Consuls, or from other trustworthy quarters, to obtain as accurate an estimate as can be formed, of the number of slaves landed in Brazil in the year 1848.

I am, &c.

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, December 16, 1848.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 16th ultimo, in which I reported the great extension and support given to the Slave Trade by the employment in it of United States' vessels, I have now the honour to acquaint your Lordship that not only do United States' vessels bring slaves to Brazil, but that they are sold, fitted, and armed for Slave Trade in this port; the purpose of the armament being, as it is publicly stated, to sink the boats of those British cruisers which may venture to overhaul them on the coast.

The United States' brig Flora, of 280 tons, sold to Manoel Pinto da Fonseca, is now being armed and fitted for Slave Trade in this harbour.

The United States' barque Globe landed 600 slaves a short time ago, at Rio dos Ostras; and The United States' brig of war Perry went in pursuit of an American ship known to be intended for Slave Trade, no later than the day before yesterday; but the moment the ship perceived that the brig was following her, she dropped her anchor within the limits of this port, where she still remains, to all intents and purposes guarded and protected by the Brazilian authorities.

The efforts of The United States' Minister at this Court, Colonel Fox, and The United States' Consul for this port, Mr. Parkes, are unceasing to prevent Slave Trade being carried on by United States' citizens; but they are of no avail against the countenance and protection given to the traffic by the Brazilian Government and authorities.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

MY LORD, Rio de Janeiro, December 16, 1848.

THE Brazilian legislature at their last session passed a law increasing the duties levied upon all goods shipped in Brazil for the coast of Africa.

It was said at the time, that this measure was intended to check Slave Trade; but as I conceived its provisions would be evaded by the slave-dealers, I waited to see its operation before reporting upon it to your Lordship.

I have now the honour to state that this law is evaded in the following manner:

The slave-dealer loads his vessel, clears for, and sends her to, Monte Video, or any other neighbouring port. At Monte Video the master receives his certificate of entry, which is transmitted to Rio de Janeiro, where bond has been given at the Custom-House that the vessel was not intended for the coast. The bond is then cancelled; but in the meanwhile the vessel has sailed for Africa and has shipped her cargo of slaves.

SIR,

Foreign Office, February 3, 1849.

I HAVE received your despatch of November 16, 1848, and its inclosures, respecting the case of a man of colour named John Freeman, a native of Sierra Leone, who had been held in slavery at Bahia, and who having, as a British subject, claimed the protection of Commander Tindal of Her Majesty's ship Grecian, while that vessel was at Bahia in the month of May last, was carried away from Bahia by that officer, and placed on board Her Majesty's ship Crescent at Rio de Janeiro; and further stating that the negro in question had at your suggestion been sent back to Bahia by order of Commodore Sir T. Herbert, in order that his case might be inquired into at that place.

I have in reply to state to you that 2 questions arise out of this case. The first is, whether this man is or is not a British subject; and in regard to this point, the full and clear statement which the negro made with respect to himself when he first came on board the Grecian, the exact description which he gave of Sierra Leone, and the manner in which he speaks English, can leave no reasonable doubt that he is a British subject.

But no British subject can legally be held in slavery in any country; and if a British subject, being held in slavery in Brazil or elsewhere, contrives to escape, and seeks refuge on board a British man-of-war, the commanding officer thereof is bound to receive him and to protect him, and to convey him away at a convenient opportunity, without asking the concurrence of the authorities, and without making his conduct in such a matter depend in any degree upon any proceeding to be had before any local court of law. Commander Tindal was therefore perfectly right in receiving and affording protection to John Freeman; and I hope that by this time John Freeman has been sent back to Sierra Leone, the only place where the truth or falsehood of his statement could be correctly ascertained.

The second question which arises is whether, supposing Freeman not to be a British subject, he is or is not a slave according to the law of Brazil; and that question certainly turns very much upon the point mentioned by you, namely, whether he was imported before or after the time specified in the Law of 1831. That is an inquiry which undoubtedly could not be carried on except in conjunction with the Brazilian authorities; but you were quite right in not allowing the man to be given up to the Brazilian authorities pending such inquiry.

The result of such inquiry would certainly be, as you state, either that compensation should be made to the owner, if the man was legally a slave, or that punishment ought to be awarded to the owner if the man being legally entitled to his freedom, was illegally detained and dealt with as a slave. I am, &c.

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, January 8, 1849.

I WAITED this day upon Viscount Olinda, and placed in his Excellency's hands your Lordship's despatch of the 3rd of November last, stating that Her Majesty's Government would extend to a Brazilian agent sent over to England, all proper assistance in connection with emigration to Brazil, under certain conditions.

Viscount Olinda having attentively read that despatch, said that the Imperial Government were very sensible of the great benefit to be derived from the immigration of white colonists into Brazil; but as the project of law respecting colonization which was introduced into the Senate last session had been suspended, there were no resources at the disposal of the Imperial Government, which would enable them to assure immediate employment to the colonists on their arrival in Brazil.

No. 54.—Mr. Hudson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received March 1.)

MY LORD,

Rio de Janeiro, January 13, 1849.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 16th of December last, upon the mode in which the men-stealers of Rio Janeiro evade the operation of the Brazilian Customs' Laws. I have the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship the copies of 2 letters and of their inclosures which I have addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video, upon the subject of an American vessel, named the Flora, which is owned by Manoel Pinto da Fonseca, and the fraudulent sale of which to Fonseca was effected by the agency of one Clapp, a citizen of The United States; the object being on the part of Fonseca, to evade payment of the increased Brazilian export duties of 30 per cent., and on the part of Clapp, to lend his name, for a pecuniary consideration, to the sale of the Flora, and thus to enable the kidnapper to sail her under American colours to the coast.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

JAMES HUDSON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Hudson to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video.

SIR,

Rio de Janeiro, December 25, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith the copy of a letter (and its inclosures) which has been addressed to me by the Acting

British Consul for this province, from which you will perceive than an American vessel the Flora has been brought by Manoel Pinto da Fonseca, a man-stealer and seller established in this capital, and has been loaded by him with a cargo of goods, intended (as is evident from her manifest) for the Slave Trade, and has been cleared out by him for Monte Video.

It will occur to you, therefore, that as the cargo of the Flora is intended to be exchanged against slaves, the clearance for Monte Video is intended to cloak some other object, which is this:

The Brazilian Customs' Law enacts that goods cleared from Brazilian ports for the coast of Africa, shall pay increased export duties.

The man-stealers in order to escape the provisions of this enactment, clear out their vessels with coast goods for some neighbouring port, giving bond at the port of clearance.

The vessel then proceeds on her voyage, and arriving at her destination, she receives her certificate of entry, which is sent back to the port whence she sailed, where the owners bond is immediately cancelled at the Custom-House.

The vessel in the meanwhile has sailed for the coast, having escaped the obligations of the Brazilian Code with perfect ease.

In the present case of the voyage of the Flora, I have to suggest that you should watch her proceedings at Monte Video, where she doubtless will put this fraud into execution.

There is moreover another fraud contemplated in this voyage of the Flora, to which I have also to direct your attention.

The Flora is said to have been owned by a citizen of The United States, and the go-between of the man-stealers of Rio de Janeiro. He lends his name to sales of American vessels, which preserve that character as long as it suits the purpose of the man-stealer, who thus uses both Brazilian and United States' flags.

The Flora, for instance, having been partly sold to the man-stealer Fonseca by this United States' citizen, sails for Monte Video under American colours, but when she arrives there will probably throw off the mask and proceed under Brazilian colours to the coast.

This fraudulent use of flags will at once engage your attention, and you will probably be able to defeat the contemplated iniquity, by communicating with the proper authorities.

I have, &c.

H.M.'s Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video.

CONSULAR.

No. 59.—Consul Porter to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 7.)
 MY LORD, Bahia, May 6, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Lordship the inclosed copies of a correspondence with his Excellency the President of this province and Commander Tindal of Her Majesty's sloop Grecian, relative to an attack made by a large party of armed men on the prize polacca Bella Miguelina, having on board 517 slaves, captured by the said sloop, and unfortunately compelled to put into this port for want of water and provisions, unaccompanied by her captor.

This piratical attempt was made at 10 o'clock on the night of the arrival of the said polacca, when anchored under the batteries of the fort and 4 Brazilian ships of war.

On my hearing the firing and disturbance, I hastened to the President, requesting his immediate assistance, which was instantly given, and a communication forwarded to the Commander of the Brazilian naval forces. It arrived, however, too late to be effective, as the attacking party had already been beaten off by the prize-crew, 3 of whom were slightly wounded, including the officer in command, Lieutenant D'Aguilar. The attacking party is stated to have consisted of about 80 individuals, of whom 2 were killed and others wounded.

This affair has caused considerable excitement and ill-feeling towards the British residents; happily no insult has yet been offered to any of them, and as the Grecian sailed with her prize on the evening of the 3rd instant, I trust it will soon subside.

As Her Majesty's steamer Firebrand, which arrived here on the 4 instant, leaves again to-day, we shall have no British vessel-of-war in port, which under existing circumstances would have been desirable.

I have likewise the honour to annex further copies of a correspondence relative to an African calling himself John Freeman, who, being a slave in this place, presented himself on board Her Majesty's sloop Grecian, claiming protection as a British subject on the ground of having been born at Sierra Leone. Commander Tindal has decided to keep this individual on board, and to refer his case to the Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's naval forces in the Brazils.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

EDWARD PORTER.

Copies of the inclosed correspondence (1 to 26) have been transmitted to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Rio de Janeiro.

No. 60.—Consul Porter to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 7.)
 MY LORD, Bahia, May 6, 1848.

I TAKE the liberty to transmit to your Lordship the inclosed statement relating to the African John Freeman, who claimed protection as a British subject on board Her Majesty's sloop Grecian, and referred to in my despatch to your Lordship of this date.

The communication was made by the African in question to an Englishman of respectability.

I beg leave to state to your Lordship that I have not seen the black, John Freeman, he having been kept on board Her Majesty's ship Grecian; consequently the whole of this affair is at present in the hands of Commander Tindal, whose intention it is to submit the same to the consideration of the Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's naval forces in the Brazils.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

EDWARD PORTER.

(Inclosure.)—Statement respecting John Freeman.

JOHN FREEMAN went as servant with Mr. Coleman, an English missionary, to Badagry, on the coast of Africa, where some black people seized upon him as he was walking out one night, put him in confinement, and in 14 days afterwards he was carried on board a slave-vessel, where the master and crew told him that if he spoke English he would be immediately thrown overboard. He was brought to this city of Bahia, confined in the Trapiche with the other slaves, and was sold to a black man of the name of Joaquin.

SIR, Foreign Office, June 16, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatch dated the 6th ultimo, inclosing copies of a correspondence which you have held with the President of the Province of Bahia and with Commander Tindal, of Her Majesty's sloop Grecian, relative to an attack which had been made by a party of armed men upon the prize polacca Bella Miguelina, which vessel, with 519 slaves on board, had been captured by the Grecian, and had been compelled, for want of water and provisions, to put into the port of Bahia, unaccompanied by her captor; and also inclosing a correspondence relative to an African calling himself John Freeman, who, being held as a slave at Bahia, had presented himself on board the Grecian, and had claimed protection as a British subject on the ground of having been born at Sierra Leone.

I have to convey to you my approval of the course which you have pursued on both these matters, as reported in your despatch.

MY LORD,

Bahia, May 17, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that His Imperial Majesty has appointed Joaquim Jozé Pinheiro de Vasconcellos to the Presidency of this province.

It affords me pleasure to state to your Lordship that his Excellency is greatly opposed to the Slave Trade.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

EDWARD PORTER.

No. 63.—Consul Porter to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 27.)

MY LORD,

Bahia, May 23, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship further copies of correspondence relating to the attack made on the prize polacca Bella Miguelina.

The slave-dealers here are fully aware of the weakness of the authorities, and that any act of violence or insult can be committed with impunity. At first the rabble meditated an attack on the Consular residence, from which they were diverted by the idea of attempting to recapture the polacca. They are also under an impression that the latter plan would have been lawful according to the English law, quoting, as they do, the case of the Brazilian schooner Felicidade.

The party who instigated the proceedings against the Bella Miguelina, gave, it is said, to each person engaged the sum of 50 milreis, or about 5*l.* sterling, and 60 milreis to the leader, who was killed in the attempt to board the prize.

With the view of making your Lordship acquainted with the opinions generally entertained by the Brazilians relative to the above affair, and of their power to detain the prize by force, I have the honour to lay before you the inclosed extracts from the debates of the Provincial Assembly, by which it appears that the virulence of their remarks is chiefly directed against myself, under the mistaken impression that it was in my power to have prevented the departure of Her Majesty's sloop Grecian and her prize.

I had forewarned Commander Tindal of the great excitement which would take place should he be compelled to bring to this port any captured slaver, but the arrival, without the protection of Her Majesty's sloop Grecian, of the Bella Miguelina, whose owners reside in this city, and having slaves on board, greatly increased the exasperation and thirst for revenge, and might have subjected the English residents to insult and annoyance.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

(Extract.) Bahia, May 23, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Lordship the accompanying statement made by the African, John Freeman, and transmitted to me by Commander Tindal.

The authorities here consider that a great indignity has been offered to them by the act of carrying away in Her Majesty's sloop Grecian the aforementioned individual, and by Commander Tindal's non-compliance with the request of his Excellency the President to have John Freeman deposited under his protection, leaving the decision of the case to the national tribunals.

The President has intimated to me his intention to transmit the particulars of this affair to the Central Government.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.,

(Inclosure.)—Statement by the Negro John Freeman, claiming protection as a British subject.

NAME, John Freeman; born at Sierra Leone; son to John Freeman, who keeps a small shop at that place; was baptized by Mr. Dove, a missionary at the missionary school there, which school he left six years ago. Mr. Saunders was the master.

He went as servant to Mr. Golman, a missionary, down to Badagry, about a year ago; was kidnapped by a man at that place, sent to Whydah, where he remained some months, and then sent across here in a slaver.

His master is a black man named San Joachino, living in Bahia, but he cannot describe the place.

Note.—This man describes Sierra Leone correctly, and speaks the English language as a person brought up in that colony.

Given under my hand on board Her Majesty's sloop Grecian, at Bahia, May 2, 1848.

SIR,

Foreign Office, July 4, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatch dated the 17th of May, informing me that the Emperor of Brazil has appointed Joaquim Joze Pinheiro to the Presidency of the Province of Bahia, and that his Excellency is greatly opposed to the Slave Trade.

Her Majesty's Government have received this intimation with much pleasure; and I have to instruct you to take every opportunity of urging upon the new President the expediency of prompt and energetic measures to prevent and to put down the Slave Trade. You will represent to his Excellency that the continued existence of this crime, and the protection and encouragement afforded to it by many persons in authority in Brazil, are the main causes which obstruct the establishment of those friendly relations between Great Britain and Brazil, which, if cordial and mutual, would conduce so much to the advantage of both countries.

I am, &c.

E. Porter, Esq.

PALMERSTON.

No. 68.—Consul Porter to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. October 30.)
 MY LORD, Bahia, September 9, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship, that the British falucho Fuente Santa, of Gibraltar, of about 20 tons burthen, arrived at this port in December last, evidently for the purpose of being sold for slave traffic.

In the month of July following Mr. John Sechino, an Italian merchant and consignee of said vessel, presented himself at this Consulate, requesting a certificate of clearance, to be presented to the public departments of this city; which document having been granted, the said consignee informed me that the falucho had been sold for the sum of 8,500 reis, about 850*l.*, in all probability for the purpose of being employed in the Slave Trade.

A few days afterwards this clearance certificate was returned to me by the consignee, on the ground of its being insufficient; and I was then requested to certify to the identity of a person named Domingo Gaibisso, a Genoese, and to the validity of powers of attorney which had been sent to the said individual, authorizing him to sell the vessel; likewise to give my express permission in writing for the sale of the Fuente Santa, in conformity with the Imperial decree of the year 1846, regarding the sale of foreign vessels in Brazil.

Having taken into consideration the following circumstances connected with the said falucho:

1st. That this vessel had been actually sold to a noted slave-dealer, Joaquim Alves da Cruz Rios, who had already commenced fitting her up for carrying slaves.

2ndly. That Domingo Gaibisso, being a Genoese and non-resident in this province, had never presented himself to this Consulate; that his name appears on the muster-roll of the Fuente Santa as common seaman, he being unable either to read or to write.

3rdly. That the powers of attorney drawn up by a notary public of Gibraltar, had already been authenticated by the Brazilian Vice-

Consul of that place, for the purpose of making it valid in this country, had been registered at this Consulate, and the usual certificate of registration endorsed thereon; and, lastly, that by granting the certificates required, I should be sanctioning an act in direct contravention of the laws of Great Britain. I therefore deem it my duty to withhold them.

The parties then put forward their request in writing, but not succeeding in altering the decision I had previously come to, they were unable to effect the change of flag; consequently, a judicial protest was served upon me, copy of which I have the honour to inclose.

The falucho Fuente Santa cleared for Gibraltar, and sailed from this on the 16th ultimo. Her papers and the whole proceedings of the parties interested in this vessel being irregular and suspicious, I addressed a letter to his Excellency the Governor of Gibraltar, likewise to Her Majesty's Consuls at the different ports on this coast.

In a slave-trading country it is at all times difficult to obtain personal confirmation of a fact, however notorious, when relating to slave traffic; such is applicable to the case of the falucho Fuente Santa.

The high price given by slave-dealers for vessels of her class, will I fear lead to the arrival of others, and the British flag be thus made instrumental in facilitating the carrying on of the Slave Trade. I therefore beg leave to solicit your Lordship's instructions for my guidance, in case my surmise should prove correct, and whether, as Her Majesty's Consul, I am bound to grant, when required, my permission in writing for the sale of English vessels at this port in conformity with the 1st Article of the Imperial Decree of 1846, a copy of which I herewith transmit.

The parties interested in the foregoing proceedings are under the impression that I was not justified under any circumstances in refusing the documents required, the withholding of which has greatly exasperated them, as well as the whole slave-trading community of this city.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

EDWARD PORTER.

(Inclosure.)—Decree relating to the Disposal of Foreign Vessels in the Ports of Brazil.

(Translation.)

Rio de Janeiro, October 24, 1846.

MAKING provisions against the inconveniences resulting from the facility wherewith foreign vessels are bought and sold in the port of Brazil.

It being worthy of my Imperial solicitude for the interests and security of property, as well of the subjects of the Empire as of those of foreign and friendly nations, to provide against the serious inconveniences resulting from the facility wherewith foreign vessels are bought and sold in the port of Brazil, without the necessary inquiry as to the legality of the sellers and of the motive of the sale, I hereby, having consulted the section of the Council of State of Foreign Affairs, ordain that henceforward the following be observed :

ART. I. No sale of a foreign vessel can be made in the ports of the Empire by the captain or commander, any other person of the crew, passengers, or any other national or foreign individual, without the knowledge and express authorization in writing of the Consul of the respective nation, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent, residing in the place.

II. If in the place where the sale is intended to be effected there be no Consul, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent, it cannot take place without authorization by despatch from the civil authority of that place.

III. The civil authority, to whom a petition for the authorization of sale be made, can only grant the same in one of the following cases: 1st. That powers of attorney, or order from the proprietor with special powers, be presented to them in such a manner authenticated as to admit no doubt: 2ndly. That the captain or commander have proved before it, in a full and conclusive manner, that the vessel he intends to sell is unnavigable.

IV. The unnavigableness can only be considered as substantiated when the following cases are proved: 1st. That there has been a wreck; 2nd. That the vessel has need of repair exceeding three-fourths of her value; 3rd. That the captain or master has not sufficient funds or credit to make the necessary repairs, even if their cost is less than those specified under No. 2.

V. The authorization from the Consul, or despatch from the civil authority to effect a sale, must be presented to the Fiscal Office, where the payment of the respective duties is to be made, and here the "visa" is placed on the authorization or despatch. Without the presentation of contract of sale, together with all the above formalities, the vessel cannot be registered as Brazilian, if the purchaser be a Brazilian, nor can she be permitted to dispatch for sailing in the name of the new purchaser, if he be a foreigner.

VI. No notary public shall make out a contract of purchase or sale of a foreign vessel without the preceding formalities being duly accomplished, on pain of being punished for disobedience, besides other punishments he may have incurred.

Antonio Francisco de Paula Hollanda Cavalcanti d'Albuquerque, &c. Minister and Secretary of State, pass the necessary orders for the observance.

By the Emperor,

ANTONIO FRANCISCO DE PAULA E HOLLANDA
CAVALCANTI DE ALBUQUERQUE.

No. 70.—Consul Porter to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. December 29.)

MY LORD,

Bahia, October 10, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of 4th July last, desiring me to represent to his Excellency the President of this province the expediency of prompt and energetic measures to put down the Slave Trade, the continuance of which is the principal obstruction to the establishment of more friendly relations between Great Britain and Brazil.

Unfortunately, Senhor Pinheiro de Vasconcellos had been removed from the presidency previous to the receipt of your Lordship's despatch. I nevertheless took an early opportunity of communicating to him your Lordship's suggestions, which he received with due consideration, but remarked, that measures to be effectual for the suppression of slave traffic must originate with the Central Government, as his best endeavours for that object had always been rendered abortive for want of due authority or co-operation.

I have been informed that the opinions of the new President are opposed to the Slave Trade, and I shall consider it my duty to confer with his Excellency on this subject in conformity with your Lordship's instructions.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

EDWARD PORTER.

No. 71.—Viscount Palmerston to Consul Porter.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 11, 1849.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 9th of September last, reporting the circumstances under which you had refused to give the written permission which is required in such cases by the law of Brazil, to enable Domingo Gaibisso, the attorney of Mr. Francisco Carreras, of Gibraltar, the owner of the British felucca Fuente Santa, to effect the sale of that vessel at Bahia; and had also declined to certify the identity of the said Gaibisso.

I have the satisfaction of informing you that the proper law adviser of the Crown, to whom I referred your despatch and its inclosures, has reported it to be his opinion, an opinion in which I entirely concur, that you were perfectly justified in the course which you pursued in this matter. You will accordingly take the opinion so expressed as a rule for your guidance in any future cases of a similar nature.

I approve of your having communicated the particulars of this case to the Governor of Gibraltar, and of the communications which you made thereupon to Her Majesty's Consuls at Rio de Janeiro, Pernambuco, and Paraiba, and to Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Maceio.

BRAZIL (MARANHAM).

CONSULAR.

No. 73.—Consul Corbett to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received April 8.)

MY LORD,

Maranhã, February 15, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that I have taken upon myself a great responsibility in embarking on board of the British barque Theresa Jane, William Wright, Master, Liverpool, one of the abducted Africans, a krooman of the name of Black Will, who was forcibly taken from on board the slave prize brigantine to Her Majesty's brig-of-war Alert in the month of January, 1846. This African, through the means of an interpreter, will be enabled to state to your Lordship the whole of the nefarious proceedings of this abduction, and that a person who is above all law is deeply implicated in the matter, and who is lately returned as one of the Deputies of this province.

I am instructed by Her Majesty's Minister at Rio Janeiro to forward all Africans who may come into my possession belonging to the slave prize to Rio de Janeiro; but your Lordship's pardon I crave for deviating from these instructions, inasmuch as I am well aware that this African would be made away with, either by some suborned persons claiming him as a runaway slave, or doing what was done some time ago with an African who was in the late African corps in a neighbouring province, by poisoning and throwing him overboard.

The original examination by myself of this African I shall have the honour to transmit to your Lordship in a few days per Ann, wishing to forward copies to the Embassy, say Legation, at Rio de Janeiro by the steamer.

I have paid the master of the Theresa Jane for passage-money, &c. and have stated to him that orders will be sent how he is to dispose of this African. The address of the Master is annexed.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

R. FALCONER CORBETT.

The address,—

No. 74.—Viscount Palmerston to Consul Corbett.

SIR,

Foreign Office, September 4, 1848.

ON the 8th of April last, I received your despatch of the 15th of February on the subject of a negro called Black Will, who was sent to England by you in the barque Theresa Jane, being one of the Africans who had been forcibly taken from on board a slave-vessel, prize to Her Majesty's ship Alert, in the port of Maranhã, in the month of January, 1846.

I have to state to you that under the circumstances reported in your despatch, I approve of your having in this instance deviated from the instruction which you received from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro, directing you to send to that capital all negroes who might come into your possession who had formed part of the cargo of the Alert's prize; and I have to acquaint you that I have caused Black Will to be sent in one of Her Majesty's ships to Sierra Leone, from which colony it appears that he will be enabled to reach his native place.

In your despatch above referred to you stated that it was your intention to transmit to me in a few days by the vessel Ann the original examination of Black Will, taken by yourself; but I have to inform you that this document has never reached my hands; and I have, therefore, to desire that you will forward it to me without delay, unless you have already done so and it has miscarried, in which case you will forward an authenticated copy of it by the first opportunity.

I am, &c.

R. F. Corbett, Esq.

PALMERSTON.

No. 75—Viscount Palmerston to Consul Corbett.

SIR,

Foreign Office, December 31, 1848.

WITH reference to the case of the brigantine, name and nation unknown, captured with 58 slaves on board by Her Majesty's ship Alert, and forced on the 2nd of January, 1846, whilst under the charge of Lieutenant Wasey and a prize crew from that vessel into the port of Maranhão, through the unseaworthy state of the prize and want of provisions and water; and also with reference to the abduction of the negroes by a party of from 30 to 40 men in the uniform of the national guard; I have to state to you that a letter has been received at this department from Her Majesty's Treasury, inclosing a memorial from the agent to the captors, praying that the proceeds of the vessel and cargo and bounty upon the tonnage and slaves may be paid to them; and also transmitting a report from the legal adviser to the Treasury upon this case, suggesting that application should be made to the Brazilian Government for the restoration to freedom of the slaves so abducted; and also that the vessel, if not wanted for Her Majesty's service, should be broken up and the materials sold in separate parts by public sale, and the proceeds, as well as those of the cargo, transmitted to Her Majesty's Government to be paid over to the captors.

With respect to the liberation of the slaves I have, in accordance with the suggestions of the Lords of the Treasury, instructed Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Rio de Janeiro to renew the efforts he had made on former occasions for that purpose; and I have also to desire that you will strongly urge the President of the province to cause these slaves to be sought out and to be delivered up to you for removal to a British colony.

With respect, however, to the suggestion as to the breaking up of the vessel and to the sale of her cargo, I perceive by a note which was addressed on the 5th of August, 1847, by the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs to Lord Howden, that the President of the Province of Maranham had with your concurrence caused the vessel to be disposed of by public auction; and that the Brazilian Government were about to instruct the President to pay over the proceeds to you. I have, therefore, to desire that if the proceeds have been already paid over to you, you will remit, without delay to Her Majesty's Government; but if the proceeds should not have been paid to you, you will apply to the President for an account of the sale and for the amount of the net proceeds thereof.

I am, &c.

R. F. Corbett, Esq.

No. 79.—Consul Corbett to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. Feb. 10, 1849.)

MY LORD,

Maranhã, December 21, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the reception of your Lordship's despatch of the 18th September, 1848, instructing me to transmit a list of British subjects who are owners of slaves, resident within the district of this Consulate.

I have the honour to inclose a return of all the owners of slaves, distinguishing the number of slaves employed in domestic affairs, and those in agricultural; this return is not so satisfactory as it ought to be, and I beg leave most respectfully to draw your Lordship's attention to a copy of my circular addressed to Her Majesty's subjects under date of 27th November, 1848, No. 2, and the original replies from 3 mercantile establishments, marked No. 3.

I have the honour also to acquaint your Lordship that ever since the year 1826 I never possessed a slave, and the one I did possess at that time was immediately emancipated by order of those with whom I am connected in England. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

British Consulate, November 27, 1848.

MR. CONSUL CORBETT is instructed by the Right Honourable Lord Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to transmit 2 lists of all the British mercantile houses established within the district of the Maranhã Consulate, and also a list of the owners of slaves, in conformity to the tabular forms annexed.

Her Majesty's Consul therefore requests that Her Majesty's subjects will furnish the Consulate with these returns.

BRAZIL (PERNAMBUCO).

CONSULAR.

No. 88.—Consul Cowper to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 19.)
 MY LORD, Pernambuco, February 19, 1848.

IN accordance with the instructions conveyed to this Consulate in the circular of the 8th of March, 1843, I have the honour to forward to your Lordship a report upon the state of Slave Trade and slavery within this province.

I believe that I can once more report that no slave has been landed in Pernambuco from Africa during the whole of 1847, for it is positively denied that even the Calumnia, which I returned on the 30th September last as having landed 117 slaves, imported any, and if she be excluded there exists no ground for suspecting any other vessel.

The reason of the cessation of Slave Trade is greatly owing to the continuance of the Praiero or Democratic party in power.

The home or coasting Slave Trade has also greatly diminished.

The promised census of the population has not appeared.

The export of the produce of slave labour during the past year was as follows: viz. 25,476 bags of cotton, weighing 1,966 tons 3½ cwt. Sugar, 49,114 tons 3½ cwt. Hides, No. 91,148. Rum, 2,198 pipes and 682 barrels. Sweetmeats, 95,370 lbs. The total value, £950,000.

No alteration whatever has taken place in the laws of the empire respecting slaves,—their general treatment is the same;—a general apprehension exists in the Province of Bahia, that the extension of Slave Trade is hastening the day when that province will fall into the hands of blacks, and the prosperity of this province is there attributed to its cessation from that traffic. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

H. AUGUSTUS COWPER.

BRAZIL (RIO DE JANEIRO).

CONSULAR.

No. 94.—Acting Consul Westwood to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. May 8.)
 MY LORD, Rio de Janeiro, February 17, 1848.

IN submitting the Annual Report on the state of the Slave Trade and slavery within the district of this Consulate during the past year,

I much regret that I cannot inform your Lordship of any diminution in this odious traffic.

Analysis of the Traffic in 1847.

From the Custom-house returns it appears that the departures from this port to Africa and arrivals from that coast, during the year, were as follows :

DEPARTURES.				Vessels.
Under the Brazilian flag	11
„ Portuguese	6
„ American	15
„ French	5
„ Hamburgh	3
			—	40
ARRIVALS.
Under the Brazilian flag	4
„ Portuguese	4
„ American	11
„ French	4
„ Swedish	1
„ Hamburgh	3
			—	27
Total	67

These returns, however, furnish no criterion of the extent of the Slave Trade between this district and Africa, as a great number of vessels that sail for that coast leave this harbour under clearances for different Brazilian ports, and others depart from the various small out-ports in this neighbourhood, while many of the vessels that land slaves along the coast report themselves on arrival here as coasters ; and such is the protection and assistance granted by all the Brazilian authorities to slave-trading transactions, that it is impossible, in a place so much frequented by shipping from all parts of the world, to be aware of all the proceedings connected with this nefarious traffic.

Since the British vessels-of-war have ceased cruizing on this coast, all the energies of the slave-dealers have been directed to frustrate the plans of Her Majesty's cruizers on the African coast, in which, to judge from the number of vessels that have landed full cargoes of slaves in this neighbourhood, they have been very successful.

This success may be mainly attributed to the great assistance and protection that slave-dealers have derived from the use of the American flag, which has so aided them in organizing their plans on the coast of Africa as to facilitate, in a great measure, the embarkation of slaves and the departure of the vessels ; and it is much to be feared that so long as the flag of The United States continues so entirely subservient to all slave-trading purposes as it is at present, the suppression of this nefarious traffic by British cruising will be greatly retarded.

The fact that the flag of The United States affords in every way the greatest protection to the Slave Trade has lately been but too clearly proved by the numerous cases that have occurred of American vessels being sold to well-known slave-dealers without changing colours; and there are now in this harbour 2 brigs, the Brazil and Don Juan, wearing American colours, while they are well known to belong to notorious slave-traders.

Besides these 2 vessels, the barque Camilla, barque Ceres, and brigs Malaga, Whig, and Joseph, have lately been sold and furnished by Mr. Parks, the American Consul, with sea-letters for African voyages.

From the reports already furnished, your Lordship must be aware of the impossibility of arriving at any correct estimate of the number of slaves landed; and although I am convinced that the importation of Africans within this district during 1847 was much above the average of past years, I have only been able to make up the following account:

At Macahé, Campos, and Cape Frio	21,000
At Rio harbour, and islands and bays up to Cape Frio	19,000
At Ibla Grande and different localities to the southward of Rio	6,000
Total	46,000

The landing of slaves along this coast is now carried on in the most undisguised manner.

The slavers generally make the land to the northward of this harbour, landing their living cargoes at all the bays, islands, and small harbours between this and Campos; but the favourite points are Macahé and Cape Frio; and I have heard that one reason for preferring Cape Macahé is, that all the authorities have a regular charge of so much per vessel, and that this charge or bribe is more moderate than at most of the other points of disembarkation, and from being fixed, renders delay or bargaining unnecessary.

From all these landing-places, or depôts, slaves are conveyed coastwise, and even brought into this port by the coasting steamers; and this employment is found to be so lucrative, that 2 or 3 of these coasters are nearly exclusively engaged in this manner; and although this practice is notorious, the Brazilian authorities take no steps to prevent it.

The present value of newly-imported negroes is much under the average rate, the cash price for a healthy slave being from 450,000 milreis to 500,000, or 50*l.* to 56*l.*; this decline in the price may be attributed to the immense number that have lately been landed, and to the scarcity which has prevailed in the money market.

As the planters are seldom able to pay ready money, slave-dealers supply them with slaves to work their estates at a much higher rate, at 1, 2, 3, and even 4 years' credit, taking as security for ultimate payment, mortgages on the estates; and in this manner the slave-traders hold the agricultural proprietary body at their mercy and under their control.

As no census has been published since the last reports were made, it is not in my power to give any further information respecting the population of this province.

By the inclosed statement of the quantity and value of the staple productions of slave-labour exported during the past year, your Lordship will perceive that there continues to be a steady and considerable increase in coffee, very little change in the quantity of sugar, and a very great decrease in the amount of rosewood exported.

I have, &c.

SIR,

Foreign Office, July 25, 1848.

I HAVE to acquaint you that Her Majesty's Government has deemed it expedient that the duties of emigration agent at Rio de Janeiro should be performed by Her Majesty's Consul. It will accordingly devolve upon you to undertake the duties in question until the return of Mr. Hesketh to his post.

Mr. Hamilton has been instructed to make over to you all the documents in his possession which have reference to this service; and I have to desire that you will take charge of them, and guide yourself in the execution of the duties of the office, by the instructions under which Mr. Hamilton has hitherto acted.

The remuneration to be allowed to you for executing the duties of emigration agent will be 5*s.* a-head for each negro dispatched by you to the West Indies; and you will, as pointed out in the instructions, include the amount of the sum accruing to you in each case in the bill which you will have to draw on the Governor of the colony to which the negro may be forwarded.

MY LORD,

IN obedience to your Lordship's instructions contained in the despatch dated September 18th last, I have the honour to transmit herewith a list of British subjects within the district of this Consulate who are owners of slaves.

I regret that this list does not contain a more full and correct statement on the required heads; but the different quarters at which the estates are situated, and the difficulty of obtaining any correct data even in this city respecting the ownership of slaves, is the cause of the inclosed return not being so full and complete as it should be.

CONSULAR.

No. 102 — Consul Morgan to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. June 16.)

MY LORD,

Rio Grande do Sul, February 15, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith copy of a despatch I addressed to Her Majesty's Envoy at Rio de Janeiro respecting the intended rising on the 4th instant of the slave population in this province.

Since then several of the principal slaves implicated have been severely flogged in the jails at Pelotas, in order to extort a confession of the names of the parties who had enlisted them, but hitherto to no purpose ; and 10 of them have died under the lash rather than confess the true object of the conspiracy, or the names of the abettors of the same.

Public tranquillity has not been disturbed, although some apprehension existed at the moment, as it is well known that secret agents from the River Plate are residing in several districts of this province.

The authorities have however tried as much as possible in public to undervalue the importance of this conspiracy ; but there can be no doubt that there is a spirit abroad amongst the slave population of this province, that sooner or later their emancipation will come through the medium of the neighbouring Republican States.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

JOHN MORGAN, JUN.

(Inclosure.)—Consul Morgan to Lord Howden.

MY LORD,

Rio Grande do Sul, February 9, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to report that at Pelotas (distant about 12 leagues from this city) the plan of a general rising of the slave population employed on the Charqueadas was discovered on the 4th instant, which on the following day was to have been put into execution, by the immediate massacre of their masters, and by an attack on the barracks of the few troops stationed in that town.

200 muskets, a like number of carbines, swords, and pistols, with a great quantity of ammunition, were found concealed in a barn, near Pelotas ; and up to yesterday upwards of 300 slaves had been seized and lodged in jail.

Others who resisted and tried to gain the Campo were attacked and destroyed.

In order that they might be recognized by one another the initiated in the conspiracy had the hair on the back of their heads shaved downwards in a straight line from ear to ear, and all those who have been found with this distinctive mark upon them have either been seized by the police, or have been whipped and tortured by their masters into a confession of their confederates.

Some of the chiefs who have mostly figured in this intended rising are free blacks of the Mina nation, unquestionably known as the most intelligent of the negro race ; and upwards of 1,500 of them are said to have been initiated and were ready to act on the first rising.

But it has also been ascertained that a master hand has been guiding and encouraging this affair for some time past, by employing the Capatazes, mostly Spaniards, of the different Charqueadas, to enlist the slaves, by promising them that they would be taken to the Banda Oriental where freedom awaited them in the ranks of General Oribe's army.

When this conspiracy was discovered, the principal person implicated, said to be a Lieutenant-Colonel in Oribe's army, absconded towards the frontier town of Bagé, and the police were actively engaged in his apprehension; but 2 others, Spaniards from the River Plate, are now in prison, and a colonel now resident at Pelotas and a native of Buenos Ayres are strongly suspected.

The informers of the existence of this conspiracy are 3 Mina slaves, who feeling great friendship for their masters, who had always treated them kindly, confessed the whole plan to them, and thus most providentially prevented the enactment of the scenes of St. Domingo in this province.

Several blacks found with their heads shaved have also been seized in this city.

I have, &c.

Lord Howden.

JOHN MORGAN, JUN.

EGYPT.

No. 103.—Consul Gilbert to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Nov. 24.)
MY LORD, Alexandria, November 7, 1848.

It has for many years been the custom for foreigners and British subjects in this country to purchase slaves and retain them in their service under the appellation of servants, though without granting them certificates of liberty; and thus in case of misconduct on their part, or caprice on that of their masters, they were frequently resold by the public auctioneer. Many of these slaves have been so severely beaten, and sometimes even maimed, by their owners, more especially by Ionians and Maltese, that they have not hesitated to throw themselves out of window with the hope of escaping, and thus risk losing life rather than endure further torture from the hands of their owners. In a few instances they have succeeded in getting to the British Consulate, and thus obtaining their freedom.

My predecessors, Mr. Consul Stoddart and Mr. Acting-Consul Chasseaud, liberated in this manner several; but latterly the cruelty practised by some British subjects resident in Alexandria and its neighbourhood became a topic of public scandal, and several slaves absconded from their owners and took refuge in the British Consulate. In consequence of which, with the sanction of Mr. Consul-General Murray, I published a decree, of which I have the honour to inclose copies in duplicate and a translation, to the effect that all British subjects must produce, within a period of 15 days, all persons of colour residing in their houses as servants, with a certificate of liberty drawn up in due form, to be registered at the British Consulate. Previous, however, to the expiration of the above-mentioned term, I issued another decree, of which I have the honour to inclose copies in duplicate, together with a translation, quoting that portion of the Act of George IV which states the penalty to which a British subject renders himself liable by purchasing, &c. slaves. The cruelties perpetrated by some British subjects on their slaves compelled me to adopt some decided measures for checking the trade in slaves, and I trust in this instance your Lordship will approve of the means I employed. At the same time I should wish to be informed if I can, in every proved case, exact the 100*l.* penalty, and how I am to deal with those persons who are unwilling or unable to pay the amount mentioned by the Act of Parliament. I have, &c.

Alexandria, October 9, 1848.

WE, Francis Hastings Gilbert, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Alexandria in Egypt and its dependencies.

Whereas there are in Alexandria some of Her Majesty's subjects and protégés, who, pretending ignorance of the prohibition against buying male or female slaves, even with the intention of procuring them their liberty, and keep in their houses persons of colour thus bought, notwithstanding they are not permitted even to receive as servants such as belong to others, and who are not free :

Whereas many such persons of colour kept in houses as servants, are not free, and sometimes are ill-treated, and even sold by their masters :

We hereby enjoin all such subjects and protégés of Her Majesty, residing in Alexandria and dependencies, who have persons, whether male or female, of colour, in their service, to cause them to appear in person for once only in the Chancery of this Consulate at any of the usual office hours, within the period of 15 days from the date hereof, in order to ascertain whether they possess their certificate of freedom drawn in due form at the Mehkemé; and in order that the Consulate itself should make it known to those who possess such certificate, that they are free, causing to be procured from the Mehkemé a certificate for those not free, at the expense of their respective masters. This indulgence is granted for the first and only time, warning those who shall contravene the preceding injunction, as also those who shall be discovered to have persons of colour in their houses, that after the expiration of the term of 15 days as above stated, they shall undergo, in all their rigour, the penalties ordered by the Statute anno 5 George IV, cap. 113, to which refers the Statute anno 6 and 7 of Her Majesty the Queen Victoria on the Slave Trade.

We order that the present decree be published in the usual manner, for the information of those whom it may concern.

Alexandria, October 21, 1848.

WE, Francis Hastings Gilbert, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Alexandria, in Egypt, and its dependencies.

In pursuance of our preceding decree of the 9th instant, and the object being to discourage Slave Trade as much as possible, it is hereby made known that from the 25th of the present month inclusive, and after, if it shall be discovered or proved that any British subject or person enjoying the British protection, keeps in his dwelling persons of colour not freed, whether of his own property or under pretence of their being the property of some other person of another nation, such persons of colour shall be caused to be liberated at the Mehkémé by means of the requisite document, which shall be procured at the expense of the contravening subject or protégé, who shall be further liable, in all their rigour, to the penalties ordered by the Statute anno 5 Geo. IV, cap. 113, which runs as follows :

"The person so offending, and their procurers, counsellors, aiders, and abettors, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of 100*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain for each and every slave so dealt or traded in, purchased, sold, bartered, or transferred, carried away, removed, imported, brought, shipped, transshipped, embarked, received, detained, or confined on board, or so contracted for as aforesaid ; the one moiety thereof to the use of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, and the other moiety to the use of any person who shall inform, sue, and prosecute for the same."

Warning is given that, from the 25th instant, to the same penalties shall be liable those who shall buy, if even with the intention of liberating from slavery, or who shall sell, persons of colour.

We order that the present decree be published in the usual manner, for the information of those whom it may concern.

(L.S.) F. H. GILBERT.

No. 104.—Viscount Palmerston to Consul Gilbert.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 22, 1849.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 7th of November last, stating that British subjects and protégés residing in Alexandria and its neighbourhood are in the habit of purchasing slaves and retaining them in their service under the appellation of servants, but without granting them certificates of liberty; and inclosing copies and translations of 2 decrees which you had issued on this subject, the one requiring all British subjects within the district of your Consulate to produce, within 15 days, all persons of colour residing in their houses as servants, with a certificate of liberty for each such person, to be registered in the British Consulate; the other, warning all British subjects that they are liable to a penalty of 100*l.* on account of each person dealt with as a slave, in contravention of the Act of the 5th Geo. IV, cap. 113.

In accordance with the opinion of the law advisers of the Crown, I have now to state to you that Her Majesty's subjects who are offenders against British law, in the manner described by you, are liable to be charged with felony, under the 10th section of the Act above mentioned, and if convicted, to be transported or imprisoned as felons; and further, that Her Majesty's Consuls in Egypt, upon obtaining sufficient evidence of the guilt of such offenders, may send them under the Order in Council of the 19th of June, 1844, to Malta, for trial under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 6 and 7 Victoriae, cap. 94.

I have accordingly to instruct you to issue a further decree, warning Her Majesty's subjects of the penalties to which they are liable for buying or selling slaves, and notifying to all foreign subjects who are enrolled at Her Majesty's Consulate for protection, that that protection will be withdrawn from them if they infringe in any way the statute of the 5th Geo. IV, as extended by the Statute of the 6th and 7th Victoriae, cap. 98. And in all future cases when it may come to your knowledge that any British subject residing within your Consulate has been implicated in the purchase or sale of a slave in contravention of the statute, you will not fail immediately to report to me the particulars of the case, in order that Her Majesty's Government may be able to judge of the expediency of sending the offender to Malta for trial.

While on this subject, I have to call your attention to Lord Aberdeen's circular of the 31st December, 1843, addressed to your predecessor, containing instructions for your guidance under the statute of the 6th and 7th Victoriae, and to which you appear hardly to have paid sufficient attention.

I am, &c.

MY LORD,

Paris, September 6, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship the copy of a note which I have received from M. Bastide respecting a complaint brought by the captain of the English vessel Ann and Emily against an officer of the French corvette l'Abeille.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

M. L'AMBASSADEUR,

Paris, le 1 Septembre, 1848.

CONFORMEMENT au désir que votre Excellence m'en a exprimé le 13 Août, 1847, mon département a entretenu le Ministère de la Marine de la plainte formée par le capitaine du navire Anglais l'Ann and Emily contre un officier de la corvette Française l'Abeille, qui, chargé de visiter ce bâtiment, en aurait emporté et gardé les papiers quelque temps à son bord.

M. le Ministre de la Marine m'a envoyé le rapport que lui a fait M. Legras, capitaine de l'Abeille, et il résulte de ce document que les faits ont été inexactement rapportés par le patron de l'Ann and Emily. Cette goëlette, expédiée de Sierra Leone, fut rencontrée par l'Abeille, le 17 Juin, 1847, à Weyda. Elle était commandée par un noir, ne sachant ni lire ni écrire, avait un équipage composé de noirs et 3 passagers blancs, qui, en réalité, étaient l'armateur, le subrécargue et le patron. La quantité d'eau et de bois de sapin qu'elle avait à son bord ayant inspiré des doutes à l'officier chargé de la visiter, il crut devoir prier le noir que l'on désignait comme capitaine, et le Brésilien, capitaine de fait, de venir tous 2 à bord de l'Abeille, en portant avec eux leurs papiers pour les faire voir au Capitaine Legras.

Celui-ci trouva que ces papiers, revêtus de 2 signatures qui paraissaient imitées, n'étaient pas satisfaisants, et il fut surpris que les autorités de Sierra Leone expédiassent des navires laissant autant à désirer sous ce rapport. Il n'arrêta cependant pas l'Ann and Emily et se contenta de donner avis de son passage aux croiseurs Anglais le Hound et Albatross.

Tel est, M. l'Ambassadeur, la substance du rapport, que le Contre-Amiral Montagnès de la Roque, commandant l'escadre Française des côtes occidentales d'Afrique, a envoyé sur cette affaire au Ministre de la Marine, en déclarant que le Commodore Hotham lui-même avait reconnu l'inexactitude des faits énoncés par le capitaine de l'Ann and Emily.

Je m'empresse de porter ces détails à la connaissance de votre Excellence, espérant qu'ils dissiperont tous les doutes que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique a pu concevoir au sujet de cette affaire.

Agréez, &c.

M. le Marquis de Normanby.

MY LORD,

I HEREWITH transmit to your Excellency, for communication to the French Government, a copy of a letter addressed by the acting Second Master of Her Majesty's steam-vessel Blazer, to Lieutenant Smith, commanding that vessel, reporting what took place on board the French brigantine Francisco Xavier, on the occasion of the visit of that vessel, on the 3rd of April last, by a boat from Her Majesty's steam-vessel Blazer, for the purpose of ascertaining her nationality.

SIR, Blazer, at sea, lat. 5° 44', long. 3° 46' E, April 3, 1848.

IN obedience to your orders, I have boarded the brigantine with French colours now parting company, and beg to state that I interrogated the master as to his nationality, which proved to be French by his manifest and papers.

The vessel Francisco Xavier is in ballast, with a large quantity of live stock on board. Having courteously asked other questions for your information, I begged to know if my proceedings in boarding him were offensive; he replied that he was perfectly satisfied with my investigation, and did not require me to state anything in his log.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, November 24, 1848.

I HEREWITH transmit to your Excellency, for your information, and in order to enable you if necessary to explain the facts of the case to M. Bastide, the accompanying copy of a letter and of its inclosures which has been received at this department from the Admiralty, reporting the circumstances under which the French schooner Ecureuil was visited in the month of November, 1847, off the west coast of Africa by Commander McMurdo of Her Majesty's ship Contest.

I have at the same time to inform you that the conduct of Commander McMurdo on the occasion in question appears to me to have been perfectly and in all respects proper.

MY LORD,

Admiralty, November 13, 1848.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith for the information of Viscount Palmerston, a copy of a letter from Commodore Sir Charles Hotham, dated the 14th August last, with its inclosures in original, respecting the boarding of the French merchant-vessel Ecureuil by Her Majesty's sloop Contest.

I am, &c.

Lord Eddisbury.

W. A. B. HAMILTON.

SIR,

Penelope, Loanda, August 14, 1848.

I REQUEST you to lay before the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty the inclosures marked in the margin, detailing an alleged infraction of the Treaty of May, 1845, by Commander McMurdo, on the occasion of his visit to the French merchant schooner Ecureuil, on the 30th November last.

Accustomed as I am to the exaggerations and misrepresentations of the masters of French merchant-vessels, I was not prepared for an accusation based on so slight a fabric.

It is clear that Commander McMurdo was justified in not allowing a suspicious vessel to force her passage; and if M. Auguste refused to heave to, and tried to lead the Contest into shoal water, I cannot see that he had any other course open than to use the means invariably employed on such occasions. Nor can M. Auguste complain of being detained by the officers of the Contest, until the arrival of the commander, for when he decided on leaving the Gaboon without a manifest of his cargo, or certificate from the chief authorities, that circumstances prevented its delivery, he should have recollected that he laid himself open to far greater inconveniences than he in reality experienced.

I have verbally examined Commander McMurdo on every charge preferred in M. Auguste's letter, and I can conscientiously assure their Lordships that I believe him to have acted with great propriety, and to have given no cause for this extraordinary accusation.

As the correspondence was addressed to me by Rear-Admiral Montagnès de la Roque, I have thought it advisable to antedate my despatch, and thus render it unnecessary for Commodore Baudin to make any communication to me.

I have, &c.

W. A. B. Hamilton, Esq.

M. LE COMMODORE, Eldorado, Rade de Gorée, le 22 Février, 1848.

J'AI l'honneur de vous adresser ci-jointe la copie du rapport que je reçois à l'instant du capitaine de la goëlette Française l'Ecureuil.

J'aime à croire, M. le Commodore, que M. le Commandant du Contest vous aura également adressé un rapport sur les faits énoncés dans celui-ci joint et parmi lesquels je ne puis que déplorer de nouveau l'emploi d'armes dont les balles n'ont fort heureusement atteint que les voiles de l'Ecureuil.

J'en appelle avec toute confiance, M. le Commodore, à votre haute impartialité, et je reste convaincu d'avance que si la visite s'est opérée, vous ne pourrez que désapprouver une aussi grande infraction à la Convention du 29 Mai, de l'exécution de laquelle nous sommes respectivement chargés dans le double but de l'abolir ainsi que la Traite des Noirs.

Veuillez, &c.

MONTAGNES DE LA ROQUE.

(Inclosure 4.)—Report of Captain Oddo.

Le 1 Décembre, 1847.

M LE COMMANDANT DU FORT D'AUMALE,

LE Capitaine Oddo, Auguste, commandant la goëlette Française l'Ecureuil, appartenant à MM. Regis, négociants à Marseille, a l'honneur de vous exposer ce qui suit.

J'ai mis sous voile du Gabon, le 26 Novembre, 1847, à bord de la susdite goëlette, en destination de Camma; mon chargement se composait de cuivrieres, fayence, eau-de-vie, armes à feu, tissus et toutes marchandises pour la traite de l'ivoire. Mon équipage se composait de 7 blancs et 2 noires libres, en tout 9 personnes.

Le 27, le 28, et jours suivants, je fis bonne route; le 30, me trouvant vers les 5 heures du soir dans le sud du Cap Lopez, j'aperçus 2 navires très loin et dans le nord-ouest; j'étais alors babord amures, c'est-à-dire je courais au large, vers les 9 heures et trente, je pris tribord, et courant à terre, mon intention étant de mouiller à la côte pour appareiller à la brise de terre.

Vers les 7 heures je fus averti par mon second qu'un navire était très près de nous de l'arrière. Je me rendis de suite sur le pont, et peu d'instants après je fus, sans aucun préambule, hélé par 3 or 4 coups de fusil et le brig Contest continuait à m'élonger par babord, en me criant à tue-tête et à plusieurs reprises, en Anglais, "What schooner is that?" Lui ayant répondu le nom, Ecureuil, l'endroit où j'allais, le navire s'éloigna de moi, et arrivé de l'avant, vira de bord et pris le large; je pensais en être quitte et je continuai ma route. Je fis route toujours dans l'intention d'aller prendre mon mouillage. Vers les 8 heures, ce dernier m'arrivait de nouveau dessus. Cette fois j'ordonnai au timonnier de loffer pour diminuer le sillage de la goëlette, et au même instant je fus assailli par une grêle de balles. "Virez de bord tout de suite," cria-t-on, "ou nous allons tirer sur vous à boulet." Je mis sur le mât tout de suite; alors le brick m'ayant passé de l'arrière, un des officiers, je crois, me dit: "Pourquoi n'avez-vous pas viré de bord? Levez vos focs, nous allons envoyer un canot à bord."

Contre la force, pas de résistance! Je virai de bord et après avoir halé bas mes focs et masqué mon petit hunier, j'attendis la disposition de ces messieurs. Enfin à 9 heures arriva un canot à bord monté par un jeune officier, un officier de troupe, et 2 matelots. L'officier de marine m'ayant interpellé d'une manière plus qu'arrogante, D'où venez-vous? Sur ma réponse, du Gabon; Où est-ce cela, le Gabon? et au même instant il voulut mettre un de ses matelots au gouvernail, ce à quoi je m'opposais formellement; alors, se précipitant dans la chambre, "Montrez-moi vos papiers." Je leur montrai mon role, mon congé, et mon acte de francisation. M'ayant demandé mon manifeste je lui observai qu'allant dans des pays où il n'y a ni autorité, ni douane, je n'en faisais pas. "Vous devez me le montrer," et en disant cela s'étant levé en colère, "faites-moi ouvrir votre cale." L'écoutille ouverte, il s'y précipita, accompagné des 2 matelots; ayant vu plusieurs caisses de fusils, pistolets, &c. "que voulez-vous faire de ces armes?" "Acheter de l'ivoire," lui répondis-je. D'un autre côté, Messieurs les matelots avaient pris un baril de couteaux à l'abordage, et se permettaient d'en mettre dans leurs bonnets; heureusement que mes matelots s'en aperçurent et les leur firent quitter; non seulement j'étais visité, retenu dans ma route, mais encore volé! Enfin, remonté sur le pont, le susdit officier à qui je demandais s'il avait fini sa vérification et si je pouvais continuer ma route, me dit, "Non, non, je ne suis pas satisfait, vous me paraissez suspect, donnez-moi vos papiers, je vais les faire visiter au commandant." M'y étant opposé, il me dit: "eh bien, attendez, je vais faire mon rapport au commandant et nous verrons." Lui ayant observé de nouveau que le temps que je perdais était précieux, il me répondit, "eh, bien, donnez-moi vos papiers, ou attendez." Sur ce il s'embarqua de nouveau, et ce ne fut qu'à 9 heures qu'un nouveau canot arriva à bord, monté d'un officier de troupe, le même qui était venu précédemment, et le commandant en personne. Ce dernier de nouveau voulut voir mes papiers, fit de nouveau ouvrir la cale et y descendit, et après une visite la plus scrupuleuse possible, remonta sur le pont et me permit de continuer ma route.

J'avais par conséquent perdu 4 heures de temps pendant lesquelles je n'avais discontinué d'aller en dérive, ce qui fut cause que je restais encore un jour pour doubler le Cap, car le lendemain je m'en trouvais au nord et ensuite 4 heures à la disposition d'un individu que je ne suppose pas marin.

J'ai l'honneur d'observer au commandant qu'avant qu'il fut nuit, j'avais remarqué le pavillon trois couleurs à ce navire, et avais arboré les miennes à l'endroit le plus visible possible. Lorsque ce navire m'eût quitté, je fis route, et j'eus l'agrément, le lendemain au jour, de trouver 4 trous de balles dans ma grand' voile et 2 dans la misaine et à quelques pieds de la ralingue de bordure. Je vous laisse juge, si dans un grand roulis ou par la mauvaise volonté d'un individu j'avais eu à regretter la perte de quelqu'un de mon équipage ou de plusieurs, je me voyais dans la nécessité de discontinuer mon voyage ou de manquer l'opération.

Ne connaissant pas les droits qu'ont ces messieurs sur nous autres navires du commerce, et n'étant pas obligé de savoir leur langue, je serais bien aise que vous fissiez part de mon rapport à M. l'Amiral, à son arrivée au Gabon, afin qu'il puisse aviser au moyen à ce que pareils abus ne se renouvellent pas tous les jours et pour ce que nous puissions naviguer avec toute sécurité possible, en étant du reste parfaitement en règle. Recevez, &c.

Le Capitaine de l'Ecureuil, Commandant pour la Maison Régis frères, négociants à Marseille,

ATE. ODDO.

Fait à bord, le 1 Décembre, 1847.

Je prie le commandant d'observer que le lendemain j'ai été de nouveau visité par le brig Anglais le Volwich. Mais celui-ci en homme plus au fait des convenances (je veux parler du commandant), après m'avoir demandé où j'allais, et quelle était la nature de mon chargement, m'a laissé continuer ma route. C'est, je pense, la seule manière que nous devons souffrir une visite.

Votre dévoué,

ATE. ODDO.

SIR, Contest, St. Paul de Loanda, June 26, 1848.

IN answer to your letter inclosing a complaint made by the master of the French schooner Ecureuil, of the Contest having fired into his vessel and detained him for several hours, I have the honour to state that at 5h. 30m. P.M. of the 30th November last I observed a suspicious vessel bearing S.E., close in with and running along the land; went in chase of stranger. At 7h. 20m. P.M. came up with chase, and hailed in French by an officer who spoke the language fluently, to "heave to," or "tack," in answer to which he said he could not, as his tiller was broken. The Contest was then in 4 fathoms water, and the evening so dark that the land, which was close to, could not be seen. The schooner continued her course, edging in shore, when I deemed it unsafe to follow her, and tacked, intending to ascertain, if possible, what she was by means of the boats, without resorting to harsh measures of any kind; but finding she did not shorten sail, and then going about 6 knots, I found it again necessary to tack and stand after her. At 7h. 30m. P.M., when we were within about 40 yards, he was again hailed in French to heave to, to which he did not make any answer. I then hailed him in English, that if he did not heave to or shorten sail, I would fire into him, to which hail no attention was paid; I then fired 6 muskets over him, upon which he then hove to at 7h. 35m. P.M.

I at once sent 2 most careful officers on board, both of whom speak the French language fluently, who did not at once clear him, as he was without a manifest of his cargo, but immediately returned to acquaint me with the circumstance, when I immediately went on board, and upon seeing his papers released him; he did not in any way express himself dissatisfied at what we had done, but, on the contrary, voluntarily opened his hatches, when I told him that we had nothing to do whatever with what there was there, and offered to mention the circumstance of my having detained him in his log, which he said was quite unnecessary, as he considered himself in fault, having taken the Contest for Her Majesty's ship Hound, to which latter vessel he had a short time before sold some wine and other things, and said he would have recognized him, and he would at once have hove to.

I do most positively assert that there was no violence or improper behaviour exercised by the officers or crew of this vessel to those of the Ecureuil.

I have, &c.

Sir Charles Hotham.

(Inclosure 6.)—Commodore Sir Charles Hotham to Rear-Admiral Montagnès de la Roque.

ADMIRAL, Penelope, St. Paul de Loanda, June 27, 1848.

IMMEDIATELY on the receipt of your letter dated February 22, 1848, I called upon the commander of the Contest, to make a minute and particular report of the circumstances which took place on his visit to the Ecureuil.

I now have the honour to transmit the statement of Commander McMurdo, by which you will perceive that he disclaims having resorted to any act of violence; that he refused to examine the hold of the Ecureuil, although requested to do so by the master; that he confined himself entirely to an identification of her nationality, and that the instant he discovered her to be French he left the vessel.

I trust that you will consider him justified in the course he pursued; he could not allow an unknown vessel to pass without violating his instructions and neglecting his duty, and that he did not resort to fire-arms until he was compelled by necessity.

CHAS. HOTHAM.

No. 113.—M. de Montherot to Viscount Palmerston.

MY LORD,

Londres, le 13 Janvier, 1849.

CONFORMEMENT aux instructions que j'ai reçues de M. le Ministre des Affaires Etrangères, j'ai l'honneur de transmettre ci-joint à votre Excellence copie d'une plainte adressée en Mai dernier à l'officier commandant le comptoir du Gabon par le capitaine de la goëlette Française l'Ecureuil et dirigée contre le brick de guerre Anglais Wanderer, qui aurait lancé un boulet par le travers de l'Ecureuil, afin d'obliger cette goëlette à mettre en panne et à recevoir la visite d'un officier qui s'est rendu à son bord pour vérifier ses papiers.

Le rôle de surveillance des croiseurs Britanniques à la côte occidentale d'Afrique se borne aujourd'hui, my Lord, en ce qui concerne les bâtiments Français, à constater l'identité de leurs pavillons dans le cas où cela est nécessaire.

Tel est, sans doute, le droit dont a entendu user le commandant du Wanderer; mais d'une part, le capitaine Français affirme que le commandant Anglais ne pouvait avoir aucun doute sérieux sur la nationalité de l'Ecureuil, ce navire, qui fait le cabotage à la côte d'Afrique, étant parfaitement connu de lui : d'un autre côté, en quoi a-t-il pu juger nécessaire de semoncer à coup de boulet un navire qui s'était empressé de hisser son pavillon et de faire route de son côté, aussitôt qu'il l'avait aperçu ?

Permettez-moi, my Lord, de faire remarquer à votre Excellence, que le commandant du Wanderer est celui-là même qui a déjà été, en 1847, l'objet d'un blâme officiel pour avoir outrepassé ses pouvoirs en visitant le navire les Deux Sœurs.

Il n'a pas semblé à mon Gouvernement que le procédé violent dont a usé cet officier pût être justifiable sous aucun point de vue, et il attend avec confiance le jugement que les autorités Britanniques porteront sur la conduite du commandant du Wanderer.

J'ai en conséquence l'honneur de vous prier, my Lord, de vouloir bien communiquer à l'Amirauté la pièce ci-jointe et d'avoir la bonté de me transmettre la réponse qui sera faite à votre Excellence.

Je saisis, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

MONTHEROT.

(Inclosure.)—Report of Captain Oddo.

J'AI mis sous voile du Gabon le 17 Avril, 1848, en destination de Camma, rivière Ste. Catherine, où j'étais envoyé par M. Scribanis, représentant de la Maison Régis frères de Marseille.

Le 19 me trouvant dans le nord du Cap Lopez, j'aperçus un navire dans le sud, courant babord amurer; j'allais par le fait droit à sa rencontre, vent arrière, sous toutes mes voiles. Vers midi ce navire me restait par le bossoir de babord. Ayant reconnu qu'il était un navire de guerre, je fis hisser mon pavillon et j'ordonnai au timonier de venir d'un quart pour passer plus près. Vers une heure, me trouvant à petite distance de lui, je pensais qu'il était inutile de m'arrêter, croyant avoir été parfaitement reconnu et pouvoir continuer ma route. Je fus bientôt désabusé, car à peine le brick commençait à me dépasser d'une encablure par la hanche de babord, que je me vis tomber un boulet à demi longueur du navire et droit par le travers, à tel point que 4 ou 5 personnes de l'équipage se précipitèrent la face contre terre. Je me vis donc obligé, après m'être d'abord dérangé de ma route, à m'arrêter de nouveau et à perdre mon temps inutilement. Je fis haler bas les focs, carguer mes voiles hautes, et mis sur le mat. Le brick prit tribord amurer et m'envoya un officier à bord. Celui-ci après avoir pris connaissance de mon rôle me quitta. J'appris de lui que ce navire était le Wanderer, Capitaine Montresor, le même qui le précédent voyage lors de mon retour au Gabon, avait envoyé sa chaloupe pour me visiter par le travers du Cap Lopez. Je dirai plus, l'officier qui venait de me visiter connaissait parfaitement ma goëlette, car dans ce précédent voyage je l'avais prévenu qu'à ma prochaine traversée l'Ecureuil serait peint en noir, et cet officier m'ayant demandé à acheter de la cire, je lui en avais donné quelques pains sans exiger de paiement. Nous nous étions donc quittés bons amis et je n'avais nullement lieu de penser qu'à mon prochain voyage j'eusse à éprouver aucune vexation de la part de ces messieurs.

Je continuai ma route pour Camma où j'arrivai le 23. J'y fis mes affaires et j'en repartis le 1 Mai. Le 2 du dit mois, j'aperçus un navire dans le sud-ouest à toute vue, je courrais alors tribord amurer, sous toutes voiles possible; avec une jolie brise d'est-sud-est; vers 10 heures du matin j'aperçus un second navire dans le nord-est qui faisait route à l'est tribord amurer. Ayant reconnu à ce navire un pavillon Français, naturellement je me dirigeai sur lui, d'autant plus qu'il avait mis sur mat et paraissait m'attendre. Je me dirigeai tant soit peu de ma route pour l'approcher plus promptement, pleinement convaincu que j'allais parler à un navire de guerre de ma nation. Mais je fus bien surpris de voir celui-ci amener le pavillon Français, éventer ses voiles en hissant un pavillon Anglais de la Reine et disparaître au moment où j'arrivais à portée de voix. Je reconnus alors le brick le Wanderer, Capitaine Montresor, le même qui après m'avoir retenu près d'une heure dans ma traversée précédente, au moyen d'un coup de boulet tiré sur moi sans aucun avertissement, et ayant mon pavillon hissé, venait encore d'user de ruse pour me retenir de nouveau.

J'ai l'honneur de prévenir M. le Commandant que mon désir est de voir mon rapport parvenir auprès de M. le Commodore commandant la station Anglaise sur les côtes d'Afrique, afin qu'il soit instruit de toutes les vexations dont je suis victime depuis mon séjour au Gabon, qui, non seulement me contrarient beaucoup, mais bien plus, me retardent et portent chaque voyage un grand préjudice aux opérations de la Maison Régis de Marseille, au service de laquelle je suis attaché.

Je le répète, la goëlette l'Ecureuil est parfaitement connue de tous les croiseurs Anglais. Le premier voyage, à St. Thomé, j'ai été visité par le brick Anglais Hound, Capitaine Wood. Un autre voyage allant à Camma, le brick Contest cribla mes voiles de balles; 2 officiers envoyés à mon bord au milieu de la nuit et le Commandant lui-même, visitèrent non seulement mes papiers, mais encore la cale, dans laquelle ils descendirent et visitèrent scrupuleusement. Je fus retenu pendant 4 heures assez près de la côte pour que je me visse forcé de mouiller et d'attendre le jour pour appareiller et continuer ma route. Le lendemain, le Woolwich [probablement Waterwich] me visita de nouveau, mais je dois le dire, à l'honneur du Capitaine, il ne me fit pas perdre une minute. Un autre voyage, étant mouillé sur rade de Camma, le brick le Kingfisher envoya son canot à bord pour me visiter, et 2 jours après celui du Wanderer vint encore pour le même objet. Il est donc certain que tous les navires Anglais en croisière sur la côte connaissant la goëlette l'Ecureuil, et si je suis retenu à chaque traversée par le bon plaisir de MM. les Commandants, je ne vois pas possibilité de continuer mes voyages.

Par ces motifs et d'après ce qui précède, je m'adresse à vous, M. le Commandant, pour que vous vouliez bien appuyer de tout votre pouvoir pour que le présent rapport parvienne aux autorités Anglaises, afin que les vexations répétées à mon égard à chaque voyage finissent.

Je suis, &c.

Le Capitaine de la goëlette Française l'Ecureuil,

ATE. ODDO.

No. 114.—Viscount Palmerston to M. de Montherot.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 24, 1849.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your letter of the 13th instant, inclosing a complaint made by the master of the French schooner Ecureuil against Commander Montresor of Her Majesty's sloop Wanderer, for having fired a shotted gun at his vessel in order to bring her to, to ascertain her nationality ; and for having been guilty of vexatious conduct towards him on his voyages between Gaboon and Camma on the west coast of Africa.

In reply, I have the honour to inform you that I have requested the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to cause an inquiry to be instituted into this matter without delay, and so soon as I shall have been acquainted with the result, I shall lose no time in communicating it to you.

PALMERSTON.

No. 115.—Admiral Cécille to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. March 13.)

MY LORD,

Londres, le 13 Février, 1849.

MALGRE le zèle scrupuleux apporté par le Gouvernement Français à l'exécution de la Convention conclue entre la France et la Grande Bretagne le 29 Mai, 1845, pour la répression de la Traite des Noirs, l'expérience des années précédentes l'a convaincu que les résultats étaient loin de répondre à ses efforts.

Les instructions jointes à cette Convention prescrivaient aux navires Français d'arrêter dans certaines circonstances comme pirates les navires négriers appartenant à des nations avec lesquelles la France n'avait pas de Traités autorisant le droit de visite, notamment les négriers Brésiliens ; mais après avoir dans les débuts de ses opérations à la côte occidentale d'Afrique, capturé un certain nombre de négriers sous prévention de piraterie, la croisière Française a dû s'arrêter dans cette voie, en présence des acquittements prononcés par le Conseil d'Etat qui dans le plus grand nombre de cas, 11 sur 14, a ordonné la restitution de ces prises et reconnu en faveur de celles-ci un droit à des indemnités. La jurisprudence Française, naguère indécise, qui avait pu permettre de penser que les croiseurs Français étaient autorisés à traiter en pirates des négriers par cela seul que ceux-ci seraient pourvus de faux papiers ou porteurs de quelques armes, a fait place à une doctrine aujourd'hui bien arrêtée, qui exige pour qu'une pareille saisie soit valable, le concours d'un armement dans la véritable acception du mot et de faux papiers de bord.

Cette jurisprudence a contraint le Gouvernement Français à modifier dans un sens analogue, en Janvier, 1847, les instructions données à ses marins, et ceux-ci ont dû en conséquence s'abstenir de saisir des navires faisant ouvertement la traite, puisque leur arrestation n'aurait pas été validée en France, et que des indemnités considérables auraient été encourues par les capteurs. Or, la Traite des Noirs se faisant presque exclusivement aujourd'hui sous pavillon Brésilien, et la France ne pouvant arrêter les navires appartenant à cette nation par cela seul qu'ils se livrent à cet odieux trafic, mon Gouvernement est d'avis, Milord, que le maintien d'une croisière Française de 26 bâtiments, telle qu'elle a été fixée par la Convention de 1845, devient désormais sans objet, et il m'a prescrit de faire valoir sans délai auprès de votre Excellence les considérations qui le portent à provoquer dès aujourd'hui un concert avec le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, dans le but de réduire à 12, le nombre des bâtiments Français chargés de réprimer la traite à la côte d'Afrique.

En effet, Milord, du moment que la croisière Française se trouve dans l'impossibilité de s'opposer efficacement à la traite faite par des navires Brésiliens, sa mission devient extrêmement restreinte, elle se borne à surveiller les navires Français, à visiter les navires appartenant à des nations avec lesquelles la France a contracté des Traités pour le droit de visite et à vérifier la nationalité de tout bâtiment suspect de piraterie.

Votre Excellence reconnaîtra sans peine que pour une tâche aussi

limitée, une station de 26 bâtimens est beaucoup trop considérable. Le nombre des navires marchands Français naviguant à la côte d'Afrique est très faible et la surveillance en serait pleinement assurée par le maintien dans ces parages d'une escadre Française réduite à 12 bâtimens. D'un autre côté, les négriers Portugais et Espagnols ayant à peu près renoncé à la Traite des Esclaves, et les Brésiliens seuls se livrant aujourd'hui à cette infâme spéculation, les chances d'usurpation du pavillon Français vont donc en se restreignant de plus en plus. En conséquence, et avec le droit de vérification simultanément exercé par les 2 croisières, avec une douzaine de navires bien répartis et bien mobilisés, la France pourrait pourvoir par elle-même à ce que ses navires de commerce restassent sous sa surveillance exclusive, sauf les cas très rares où la vérification du pavillon est jugée nécessaire par un croiseur étranger (ce que n'empêcherait pas d'ailleurs une croisière plus nombreuse).

A l'égard de l'usurpation possible du pavillon Français par des négriers Brésiliens ou autres, le droit de vérification des croiseurs Anglais compléterait suffisamment la police Française.

Mon Gouvernement a trop à cœur, Milord, de contribuer en tout ce qui dépendra de lui, à l'abolition de l'odieux Trafic des Noirs, et il en a donné une preuve trop éclatante en affranchissant spontanément tous les esclaves dans les possessions Françaises, pour que la pensée puisse venir à personne d'interpréter la mesure qu'il a en vue aujourd'hui comme un ralentissement de sa part dans cette œuvre d'humanité; mais amené à envisager comme des sacrifices inutiles les frais considérables occasionnés par une escadre de 26 bâtimens, ainsi que les pertes cruelles que les fatigues et l'influence d'un climat meurtrier font subir aux marins qui la composent, il m'a chargé de proposer à votre Excellence de modifier l'Article 1er de la Convention de 1845.

En vertu de l'Article X de la dite Convention, les 2 Puissances ont le droit, dans le cours de la 5ème année à partir de la signature de cet Acte, de se concerter pour décider s'il convient de le modifier ou l'abroger en tout ou en partie.

Bien que ce terme ne soit pas encore échu, j'ai la confiance que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne appréciera les motifs impérieux qui portent le Cabinet Français à en devancer de très peu de mois l'expiration.

J'ai en conséquence l'honneur de vous prier, Milord, de vouloir bien me faire connaître aussitôt que possible, l'opinion de l'Administration Britannique sur la réduction à 12 navires de la croisière de 26 bâtimens entretenue par la France en vertu de la Convention du 29 Mai, 1845. Je suis autorisé à conclure avec votre Excellence un arrangement portant uniquement sur l'Article 1er, à l'effet de modifier dans ce sens la dite Convention, et établissant en outre que le nombre des bâtimens Français affectés à la répression de la traite pourrait être élevé au-delà de 12 dans le cas où les circonstances l'exigeraient. Je saisis, &c.

VICE-AMIRAL CECILLE.

No. 116.—Viscount Palmerston to Admiral Cécille.

M. L'AMBASSADEUR,

Foreign Office, March 17, 1849.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of the 13th ultimo, proposing, on the part of the French Government, that for the reasons therein stated, a modification of the 1st Article of the Convention of the 29th May, 1845, for the suppression of the Slave Trade, may be agreed to by Her Majesty's Government; to the end that the number of French vessels of war employed upon the west coast of Africa, which is fixed by that Article at 26, shall be reduced to 12.

I have great pleasure in acquainting your Excellency that Her Majesty's Government are willing, for the reasons assigned by you, to consent to the arrangement which you propose, on the condition, however, which is offered in your Excellency's letter, that if it should happen that Slave Trade should be again carried on under the French flag, the French Government will send such additional cruizers to the coast of Africa as may be necessary for putting an end to such abuse.

I have to propose to your Excellency that this modification of the 1st Article of the Convention of 1845, shall be recorded in a protocol of conference to be held at this office at such time as may be agreed upon between your Excellency and myself.

I beg leave, however, to take this opportunity of noticing what appears to me to be a misapprehension on the part of your Excellency with respect to the time when, according to the Xth Article of the Convention of 1845, the High Contracting Parties are to concert together anew, and to decide according to circumstances, whether it is fitting either to put again in force the whole or part of the Conventions of 1831 and 1833, or to modify or to abrogate the whole or part of the Convention of 1845.

The Xth Article above referred to of the Convention of 1845, states that the Convention shall come into operation 3 months after the declaration mentioned in the VIIth Article shall have been made, and that the duration of the Convention is fixed at 10 years, that is to say, 10 years from the time when the Convention began to take effect and the fifth year, the time at which the High Contracting Parties are to concert together anew, will, I conceive, of course, count from the same date.

But your Excellency in adverting to the provisions of the Xth

Article, appears to consider the fifth year as dating from the signature of the Convention.

As this interpretation of the Article would make a difference of 9 months and some days : the declaration having been signed on the 6th of December, 1845, and the Convention having therefore not come into operation until the 6th of March, 1846, I have thought it right to bring this point under your Excellency's notice at once, in order to avoid any future misunderstanding in the matter.

I am, &c.

MY LORD,

Hertford House, le 20 Mars, 1849.

J'AI reçu la lettre que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'écrire le 17 dernier, par laquelle votre Excellence m'informe que conformément à la demande que j'en ai faite, le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté consent à un arrangement qui, en modifiant l'Article Premier de la Convention de 1845, réduirait à 12 le nombre des bâtiments de guerre que la France entretient à la côte occidentale d'Afrique pour la répression de la Traite des Noirs, sous la condition proposée par moi-même, d'augmenter le nombre de nos croiseurs, selon les nécessités, dans le cas où il arriverait que le Commerce des Esclaves recommencerait sous le pavillon Français.

En conséquence, votre Excellence me propose de m'entendre avec elle sur le jour où nous pourrions conférer ensemble et rédiger une note modificative de l'Article Premier de la Convention de 1845, pour être annexée à la dite Convention. Je vous prie, Milord, de m'indiquer vous-même le jour et l'heure qui vous conviendront le mieux, je serai entièrement à votre disposition.

Je reconnais avec votre Excellence, que le point de départ de la période de 5 années indiquée dans l'Article X de la Convention, est la date du 6 Mars, 1846, et que la faculté que les Parties Contractantes se sont réservée de se concerter de nouveau dans le cours de la 5^{me} année ne peut être revendiquée avant le 6 Mars, 1851.

Il me reste à vous remercier, Milord, de l'adhésion que le Gouvernement de la Reine a bien voulu donner à la proposition que j'ai eu l'honneur de lui faire au nom de mon Gouvernement.

No. 119.—Captain Hamerton to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. July 25.) (Extract.) Zanzibar, February 10, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that His Highness the Imaum has complained of the capture of several boats belonging to his subjects in the Persian Gulf by the Commodore of the Indian Naval squadron, found carrying on the Slave Trade contrary to Article III of the Treaty of 2nd October, 1845, for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

2. His Highness, when he heard first of the seizure of these boats, said they were captured without authority; that the Treaty had nothing to do with Abyssinian slaves; and that if the Treaty was intended to prevent the importation of Abyssinian slaves into his dominions, all hands were ruined; that Abyssinia was not in Africa. I have, however, now succeeded in convincing the Imaum that the boats captured were breaking the Treaty, and that Abyssinia is in Africa; and his Highness now entertains a different opinion of these matters.

3. Your Lordship will learn with pleasure that his Highness, as far as in his power lies, has issued strict orders to his officers to prevent the export of slaves from his dominions; but I plainly see the orders of the Imaum will not be very strictly enforced; for indeed his Highness's officers, as far as I have ever been able to observe, have on all occasions treated the Imaum's orders just as they thought fit, whenever such orders have in any way been at variance with their interests or inclinations. However, not one-tenth of the number of slaves usually brought from the coast of Africa have arrived at Zanzibar the last season.

4. There are several boats here from the Persian side of the Persian Gulf; and from all I can learn, they will attempt to carry away slaves even from this port. There is much talk amongst the people here relative to the refusal of the King of Persia to prohibit the importation of slaves into his ports; and there are several Persian dealers here now who are buying slaves, and who will, I certainly think, attempt to take them away clandestinely, and to do which I greatly fear they will not find any great difficulty; but they are not sufficiently expert seamen to take away any great number by stealth.

5. I have had several conversations on this subject with His Highness the Imaum, and I believe his Highness will do all he can to prevent these people taking away slaves.

No. 120.—Viscount Palmerston to Captain Hamerton.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, September 30, 1848.

I DULY received and laid before the Queen your despatch dated the 10th of February last, relating to conversations which you had had with the Imaum of Muscat upon the occasion of some seizures of boats belonging to the subjects of the Imaum, which had been made by the Commodore of the Indian naval squadron, for being found carrying on the Slave Trade contrary to Article III of the Agreement of the 2nd of October, 1845.

Her Majesty's Government are glad to learn from your despatch, that whatever momentary uneasiness the Imaum may have felt on first hearing of these seizures, his Highness was soon convinced by your explanations and reasoning, that they were a just and inevitable consequence of the breach of law which had been committed by his subjects; and Her Majesty's Government also learn with great satisfaction, that the Imaum has issued strict orders to his officers to enforce his decree prohibiting the export of slaves from his dominions, agreeably to the engagement which his Highness has entered into with Her Majesty.

You will state to the Imaum that Her Majesty's Government feel persuaded that the time is not far distant when his Highness will look back with pride and satisfaction at the step which he has taken in this great cause of humanity. Already, at the earnest solicitation of Her Majesty's Government, the honourable example of the Imaum has happily been followed in the East by the Sultan of Turkey, and by the Shah of Persia, whereby the prohibition of the African Slave Trade has now become nearly the universal law of civilized States.

CONFIDING IN THE ALMIGHTY.

Zanzibar, November 11, 1848.

To the exalted in rank, the Chief of the Great, the first in dignity amongst the nobles, the most glorious, the kindest of the kind, the Right Honourable Lord Viscount Palmerston; may his desires always and in every way be fulfilled, and as certainly as the day and night succeed each other, may his dignity and prosperity be continual, and may the Lord Almighty keep the sun of his greatness, and the new moon of his benevolence, free from the eclipse. May he always continue in favour. Amen.

Afterwards the cause of writing these words of friendship is to inquire after your state and circumstances.

Now this letter I write to you because I am in extremity, in grief, and great perplexity; yet it is not proper that I should trouble you with my own affairs (things appertaining to myself), but I see not what excuse I can make, I do not write this as a complaint, but with the intention of informing you of my distress. You have required me to abstain from carrying slaves for the Slave Trade to Yemen and Oman (on the west and east coast of Arabia), I am in obedience to the wishes of Her Majesty, and also of yourself. I have abstained from Slave Trade to the utmost extent of my power, and the great God Almighty knows that I am ready to give up my life, my dominions, and all I possess, to meet the wishes of Her Majesty. I now inform you that all the officers of Government in these countries tell me Soomalee country which is opposite to Yemen, is considered as in Africa, and that I should abstain from Slave Trade in that country. Dear Friend, you and all men know that I have no dominions in Africa except from Moka Deesha to Toonjh, which is the boundary between my dominions and those of the Portuguese; how can I prevent the Slave Trade from all Africa? Now, through the favour of God your hand is long, and reaches far, even to all people [you have power over all], and as I attend to your orders, even so will others than I; they cannot disobey, and as they are dealt with, even so will I and those belonging to me; in fact, it is not fit that I should tell you in what a state I am, you must be aware of it, and I feel that I shall be considered as deserving or more so than others, because I am your oldest friend, openly and privately. I have all confidence in your friendship, whatever you require of me, much or little, the sign is with you. I am ready. Peace be on you now and hereafter.

From the expectant slave of God's mercy,
Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

THE Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, has the honour, in obedience to the instructions he has received, to inclose to his Excellency the Count Schimmelpenninck, President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, copies of a correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office, the Colonial Department of the British Government, the Governor of British Guiana, and the Governor-General of the Netherland Possessions in the West Indies, on the subject of certain emancipated negroes, who, according to the note of General de la Sarraz, of the 17th May, 1847, were to obtain permission to emigrate from that colony.

Notwithstanding this permission, the Governor-General of Surinam has refused to the Governor of British Guiana leave to send any agent to communicate with these negroes; and as the fate of these unfortunate people is connected with the case of the Snow, so long a subject of discussion between the 2 Governments, the British Government feels confident that orders will be sent forthwith to the Governor-General of Surinam to pay due attention to any agent of the Colonial Government of British Guiana, who may proceed to Surinam to communicate with these individuals, for the purpose of ascertaining their real sentiments and desires on the subject of removal.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 12th of October last, and to previous correspondence on the subject of the export of slaves from the Dutch settlement of Curaçoa to the Island of Porto Rico, I herewith transmit to you, for your information, and for communication to Count Randwyck, an extract of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Porto Rico, reporting that the inhabitants of Curaçoa have petitioned the King of the Netherlands to remove the present restrictions upon the exportation of negroes from that island, by which no slave can be removed therefrom, unless by his own consent.

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to inclose the copy of a note which I have received from Baron Bentinck, dated May 20, 1848.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

E. C. DISBROWE.

(Inclosure.)—Baron Bentinck to Sir Edward Disbrowe.

M. LE CHEVALIER,

La Haye, le 20 Mai, 1848.

PAR votre office du 10 Avril dernier, vous avez bien voulu manifester le désir que des ordres fussent immédiatement donnés au Gouverneur-Général de Surinam, de prêter dûe attention à l'agent du Gouvernement Colonial de la Guyane Britannique, qui serait envoyé à Surinam dans le but d'entrer en relation avec certains nègres émancipés y indiqués afin de s'assurer de leurs intentions réelles par rapport à leur déplacement.

En réponse à cette demande je me permets, M. le Chevalier, de vous rappeler brièvement ce qui est arrivé sur la matière dans les dernières années.

Dans la lettre de la Légation Britannique, du 9 Septembre, 1844, il a été dit :

“ Her Majesty's Government do not, however, claim for the survivors of the Snow, the right of purchasing the freedom of their relations who are in slavery at Surinam, and Her Majesty's Government do not feel that the circumstances under which the body of the negroes serving under the Colonial Government of Surinam, and designated ‘Government Free Labourers,’ were taken possession of by the authorities of that colony, justify them in claiming as a matter of strict right from the Government of the Netherlands the unconditional freedom of all the relations of the negroes of the Snow, who were labourers in that body ; but Her Majesty's Government feel justified in drawing the special attention of the Government of the Netherlands to the case of those unfortunate persons, and I am instructed to express their confident hope that orders will be given to the Government of Surinam to grant immediate freedom to such amongst the Government free labourers as may be proved to be husband and wife, or child of any one of the survivors of the Snow. ”

Or, quelle a été la décision prise par le Gouvernement des Pays Bas sur cette demande ? Il n'a pas seulement accordé pleine liberté aux personnes sus-indiquées, mais à tous les nègres connus sous le nom d'ouvriers libres, tandis que les individus se trouvant dans les relations de famille sus-indiquées avec les nègres du Snow ont obtenu dispense d'une loi existante, afin de pouvoir, s'ils désirent, se rendre à Démérari.

Le Gouverneur de Surinam déclare avoir fait communiquer cette permission aux nègres, mais qu'aucun d'eux ne s'est adressé en faveur du départ pour Démérari.

Le Gouvernement des Pays Bas ayant dès-lors fidèlement rempli ses promesses, ne saurait admettre aujourd'hui une demande qui ne serait basée que sur une méfiance non méritée contre un fonctionnaire digne de confiance, et au caractère duquel votre note du 4 de ce mois a rendu pleine justice.

MY LORD,

IN obedience to the instructions with which your Lordship honoured me in your despatch of the 8th ultimo, on the subject of the intended removal of slaves from the Dutch Island of Curaçoa, I addressed a note on May 15 to the Netherland Government, of which, as well as of the reply, I now transmit a copy.

M. LE COMTE,

The Hague, May 15, 1848.

THE British Consul at Porto Rico has addressed a despatch to Her Majesty's Government reporting that the inhabitants of Curaçoa have petitioned the King of the Netherlands to remove the present restrictions upon the importation of negroes from that island, under which restrictions, as I understand, no slave can be removed therefrom, except by his own consent.

Having, on the 27th of September last, addressed a note to General de la Sarraz, on the subject of exportation of slaves from Curaçoa to Porto Rico, and having received a reply from his Excellency on the 8th of October following, it only remains for me to place in the hands of your Excellency the inclosed extract of the despatch dated Porto Rico, March 24, 1848, and on referring to that correspondence to appeal to the known humanity of the Netherland Government to take such measures as it may deem most fitting under existing circumstances.

No. 127.—Viscount Palmerston to Sir Edward Disbrowe.

Foreign Office, June 17, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 27th ultimo, inclosing a copy of note which you had received from Baron Bentinck in answer to one which you addressed to that Minister in accordance with the instructions contained in my despatch, dated the 31st of March last, the object of which instructions was to obtain the transmission of orders from the Netherland Government to the Governor of Surinam, directing that officer to pay due attention to any agent of the Colonial Government of British Guiana, who might be sent to Surinam for the purpose of taking measures to remove from thence to British Guiana, such of the negroes known by the denomination of "Government Free Labourers," as had formed family ties with the negroes of the Snow, and who might be desirous to avail themselves of the permission granted to them by the Netherland Government to follow their relations who had already removed to British Guiana. The Netherland Government it appears refused this request, stating, as their reason for so doing that the request is based upon an unmerited distrust of the Governor of Surinam.

The Netherland Government are aware that Her Majesty's Government have fully appreciated the liberal and ready manner in which the Netherland Government responded to the original request of Her Majesty's Government with respect to the eventual removal of the negroes of the Snow, and Her Majesty's Government cannot but be proportionately disappointed at the tenor of the answer which has been returned to their present request.

You will state to Baron Bentinck in reply to his note, that certainly the proposal that a British agent should be sent to Surinam to communicate directly with the free negroes in question, was made in consequence of a strong doubt, which may reasonably be entertained, whether those negroes had the choice fairly put and fully explained to them, but this doubt is formed upon general reasoning, and not upon any disparaging opinion of the honour of the Governor of Surinam. Her Majesty's Government regret very much and are a good deal disappointed that the Netherland Government should not have been willing to agree to an arrangement by which that doubt might easily have been removed, and you will request the Netherland Government to bear in mind that the request which they have thus negatived is that a British officer should go to a Dutch colony to which any British subject might go without any special commission, and that he should there communicate with persons who are stated by the Dutch Government to be in a condition of perfect freedom.

The application was made to the Dutch Government from motives of courtesy, though it was not thought that in strictness any permission was necessary, but the same motives which led to its being made will certainly prevent Her Majesty's Government from acting in this matter without the previous sanction of the Dutch Government.

I am, &c.

No. 131.—Sir E. Disbrowe to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Aug. 20.)

MY LORD,

The Hague, August 18, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith the copy of a note which I have received from Baron Bentinck in reply to my note of the 22nd of September last to General La Sarraz, relative to the case of Mr. Schenley.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

E. C. DISBROWE.

(Inclosure 1.)—Baron Bentinck to Sir Edward Disbrowe.

La Haye, le 10 Août, 1848.

LE Soussigné, Ministre des Affaires Etrangères ad interim, a l'honneur de répondre à la note que Sir Edward Cromwell Disbrowe, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté Britannique, a adressée le 22 Septembre dernier à M. le Lieutenant-Général de la Sarraz, relativement à l'affaire de Mr. Schenley.

Le Soussigné, &c. se permet de faire remarquer à cet égard, que lors même que les observations de Lord Palmerston par rapport à l'arrêt prononcé, fussent admissibles, nos institutions s'opposeraient à y donner la suite désirée. La cour de justice à Paramaribo a prononcé en dernière instance. La demande que cet arrêt soit cassé, et les juges obligés à faire une apologie à Mr. Schenley et dans sa personne au Gouvernement Britannique, ne peut être accordée; le Gouvernement des Pays Bas en eût-il même l'intention, ne possède pas les moyens de faire obéir à un ordre à cet effet, mais étant instruit de l'arrêt prononcé, le Gouvernement Néerlandais a employé le seul moyen en son pouvoir. D'après la communication de M. le Ministre des Affaires Etrangères du 22 Avril, 1847, le Département des Colonies s'est empressé d'envoyer à Surinam l'ordre de suspendre l'arrêt sus mentionné. Cet ordre a été dûment exécuté.

Après avoir entendu le Conseil d'Etat, le Roi, par son arrêté du 15 Octobre dernier, ci-jointe en copie, a ordonné la suspension permanente de la sentence; or, l'effet de celle-ci étant par là annulé, sans entraver le libre exercice des fonctions judiciaires, le désir de l'Angleterre est dès lors essentiellement rempli, attendu que même dans le cas que Mr. Schenley retournerait à Surinam, les suites de la sentence ne pourraient plus l'atteindre. Le Gouvernement des Pays Bas en agissant ainsi a voulu donner une preuve non équivoque du haut prix qu'il attache à la bonne harmonie avec celui de la Grande Bretagne.

Le Soussigné prend en outre la liberté d'ajouter encore quelques observations à l'égard de la dépêche de Lord Palmerston du 12 Août, 1847, que Sir Edward a bien voulu communiquer à M. le Général de la Sarraz.

Sa Seigneurie veut prouver par les expressions de la sentence, que l'accusation de Mr. Schenley contre Röperhoff était fondée. " ' The Spanish Buck ' (est-il dit en substance) est une punition avec des tiges de tamarins. Environs vingt coups avec de tels bâtons ont été appliqués au nègre, étendu sur un canon, et dès lors il a été puni avec le ' Spanish Buck,' tel que Mr. Schenley l'a rapporté."

Sa Seigneurie veut bien se faire soumettre la lettre de Mr. Schenley à Lord Aberdeen, du 8 Juillet, 1843 (printed papers, p. 305), elle remarquera que le " Spanish Buck " est tout autre chose qu'un petit nombre de coups, qui n'ont pas empêché un moment celui qui les a reçu d'accomplir son travail journalier. À l'endroit indiqué, le " Spanish Buck " est décrit ainsi: " Flogged on their naked posteriors and thighs with freshly-cut tamarind-rods, until not a vestige of whole flesh can be discovered, one mass of clotted blood presenting itself to view," &c.

Qu'il soit permis d'ajouter à cette description la particularité très remarquable, que le nom de " Spanish Buck " tire son origine de la manière particulière dont le supplicié est garotté. Les genoux fixés contre la poitrine sont retenus par les bras liés aux poignets, et arrêtés par un bâton passant dans les jointures des coudes et des genoux, ainsi garotté, le malheureux est comme plié et accroupi, de manière à ne pouvoir se mouvoir dans aucune direction. Ces procédés, qui ne sont appliqués que dans les cas d'une punition extrêmement sévère, caractérisent la peine que Mr. Schenley indique à juste titre, page 312, comme " The horrible punishment of the Spanish Buck."

Si dès-lors l'enquête judiciaire a prouvé que le nègre en question a été étendu sur un canon et a reçu un petit nombre de coups, par ordre de M. Röperhoff, il en résulte la preuve convaincante que le " Spanish Buck " ne lui a pas été appliqué, et que Mr. Schenley, dans son rapport à Lord Aberdeen, s'est écarté de la vérité.

Bien qu'il eût été à désirer que le tribunal se fût déclaré incompetent pour les mêmes motifs qui ont engagé le Roi à suspendre entièrement la sentence, il y a par contre à observer que les particularités de sa conduite, par lesquelles Mr. Schenley a donné lieu au procès, ne sont nullement de la nature de celles qui lui incombaient à Surinam, en vertu des Traités existants. Son admission y a pour but l'exercice de fonctions purement judiciaires dans les cas indiqués par le Traité, et aucunement la transmission de rapports sur l'administration intérieure de la colonie, ou la conduite des habitants quant à des objets étrangers à ces fonctions. Lord Aberdeen lui-même en accusant la réception de la série de lettres à laquelle appartient celle du 14 Août, 1843, a écrit, le 21 Décembre, 1843, à Mr. Schenley :

“ At the same time it is desirable that you should constantly bear in mind that your functions are strictly of a judicial, and not of a diplomatic character;” et plus loin, “ you will take special care to conduct your inquiries and investigations with great discretion, and that they be not of that inquisitorial nature which may give the Netherland Government just cause of complaint against you.”

Ajoute-t-on à ce qui précède la lettre de Lord Palmerston à M. Dedel, du 3 Novembre, 1840, lettre qui dans le temps a été communiquée aux autorités de Surinam, et dans laquelle il dit : “ the post of British Commissary Judge in the Mixed Court established at Surinam, under the Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands, for the suppression of the African Slave Trade, is of a judicial and not of a diplomatical character ; and Her Majesty’s Government, in assigning that post to Mr. Samo, had no intention to exempt him from the jurisdiction of the court of law of the country in which he is resident.”

Alors il n’est pas surprenant que le tribunal s’est jugé réellement compétent à prononcer son arrêt.

Le Soussigné ne saurait assez répéter la circonstance que les actions en question de Mr. Schenley dépassent entièrement le cercle de ses attributions judiciaires reconnues par le Gouvernement des Pays Bas, et il aime à croire que la présente communication et l’arrêté royal ci-inclus mettront un terme à la correspondance sur cette matière, à l’arrangement de laquelle son Gouvernement a fait tout ce que lui permet son devoir, joint à son désir de cultiver la bonne harmonie avec la Grande Bretagne.

WE, William II, by the Grace of God, King of the Netherlands, Prince of Orange, Nassau, Grand Duke of Luxembourg, &c.

On the reports of Our Minister of Colonies of 2nd August and 14th October, 1847, La. B., No. 21, and La. B., No. 364 secret, tending to approve the resolution of our Governor of Surinam of the 7th June last, No. 859, by which he has seen fit, by virtue of paragraph 12 of the second title of our decree of 14th May, 1845, No. 43, enacted by publication of 3rd February, 1846, (Government paper No. 1 of the same year,) in anticipation of our decision, for reason of political import, to suspend the execution of the sentence pronounced by the Court of Justice in said colony, on the 23rd July, 1846, in the suit of G. L. Röperhoff versus E. W. Harrington Schenley, British Judge Commissioner in the Mixed Court for the suppression of the Slave Trade in said colony ;

Having heard the Council of State (Report of 7 September, 1847, La. S. secret) ;

Taking into consideration that in the present case reasons of political import call for an indefinite continuance of the suspension in question ;

Have decreed, and do decree : that approving the aforesaid resolution of our Governor of Surinam, dated 7th June last, No. 849, the execution of the sentence before mentioned, shall by continuance remain suspended.

And our Minister of the Colonies is charged with the execution of the present, of which copies shall be transmitted to the Council of State and Minister of Justice, for their information.

No. 138.—Viscount Palmerston to Sir Edward Disbrowe.

SIR,

Foreign Office, December 5, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 10th of August last, inclosing a copy of a note addressed to you on that day by Baron Bentinck in reply to that which you addressed on the 22nd of September, 1847, to General de la Sarraz on the subject of the allegations made by Mr. Schenley against Messrs. Röperhoff and Feudenberg, inhabitants of Surinam, and which allegations formed the ground of the actions-at-law brought against Mr. Schenley in that colony.

Baron Bentinck commences by stating that the institutions of the Netherlands render it impossible for the Netherland Government, even if disposed to do so, to comply with the demands made by Her Majesty's Government on this subject, which were, that the proceedings of the law courts of Surinam against Mr. Schenley and all their effects should be wholly annulled and swept away, and that on the return of Mr. Schenley to Surinam, a suitable apology should be made to him, and through him to Her Majesty's Government. But Baron Bentinck incloses a copy of a royal decree, dated the 15th of October, 1847, ordering the permanent suspension of the sentence pronounced against Mr. Schenley ; and he states that by this decree the desires of Her Majesty's Government are essentially fulfilled, because even if Mr. Schenley should return to Surinam the sentence pronounced against him could not be put in force.

Baron Bentinck then endeavours to prove that Mr. Schenley's statement with respect to an aged negro having received the punishment of the Spanish Buck by order of Röperhoff, was untrue. He states, that Mr. Schenley described the punishment called the Spanish Buck as the " being flogged on the naked posteriors and thighs with freshly-cut tamarind rods until not a vestige of whole flesh could be discovered, one mass of clotted blood presenting itself to view ;” and Baron Bentinck adopts this description of the punishment as a true one, adding, however, that in inflicting this punishment the body of the sufferer is rendered immovable by fastening together the wrists, by placing the wrists so fastened over the knees, and by then passing a stick between the knees and the arms ; and he argues that because the negro referred to was placed over a cannon instead of being fastened in the position above described, and because he received only a comparatively small number of stripes, Mr. Schenley’s statement as to his having been punished with the Spanish Buck is untrue.

But Baron Bentinck appears to have lost sight of the fact that the sufferer in question was said to be 100 years old, and that it would probably have been impossible to place the body of so aged a man in the Spanish Buck position above described. But granting that the punishment of this aged negro was not accompanied by the full measure of cruelty which would attend a severe infliction of the Spanish Buck, it is impossible not to admit that the conduct of Röperhoff in causing so aged a person to undergo such a punishment as the court of Surinam admits that he did suffer, was barbarous and inhuman, and that the statement made by Mr. Schenley was therefore substantially correct.

Baron Bentinck then proceeds to say, that Mr. Schenley’s functions are purely judicial, and that he is not admitted into Surinam for the purpose of making reports on the interior administration of the colony or on the conduct of the inhabitants on matters not belonging to his functions ; and Baron Bentinck in corroboration of this assertion quotes a passage from a despatch addressed by the Earl of Aberdeen to Mr. Schenley on the 21st of December, 1843, in which his Lordship enjoined him “ constantly to bear in mind that his functions were strictly of a judicial and not of a diplomatic character, and to take special care to conduct his inquiries and investigations with great discretion, and that they be not of that inquisitorial nature which may give the Netherlands’ Government just cause of complaint against him.”

I presume that Baron Bentinck’s object in quoting this passage was to show that at the time that despatch was written, Her Majesty’s Government desired that Mr. Schenley should confine himself strictly within his functions as a member of the Mixed Court of Justice, and that the opinion of Her Majesty’s Government of that day differed from that of Her Majesty’s present Government as to the duties of Mr. Schenley.

But the very contrary of this is proved by the passage quoted. For though Lord Aberdeen reminded Mr. Schenley that his functions were judicial and not diplomatic, and that it was in a judicial and not in a diplomatic capacity that he was acknowledged by the Netherland authorities, a fact which Her Majesty's present Government equally admit, yet it is manifest that Lord Aberdeen by directing Mr. Schenley to make his inquiries and investigations with discretion, not only authorized but enjoined him to continue to make investigations and inquiries, and it was of course Mr. Schenley's duty to report the result of them to the Secretary of State.

Lastly, Baron Bentinck, in justification of the proceedings of the courts of law of Surinam against Mr. Schenley, quotes from a private letter which I addressed to M. Dedel on the 3rd of November, 1840, a passage in which I stated that "the post of British Commissary Judge in the Mixed Court at Surinam was of a judicial and not of a diplomatic character, and that Her Majesty's Government, in assigning that post to Mr. Samo" (then Her Majesty's Judge in the Court), "had no intention to exempt him from the jurisdiction of the courts of law in the country in which he was resident;" and Baron Bentinck observes that such being the opinion expressed by me, it is not surprising that the court of Surinam should have considered itself competent to proceed against Mr. Schenley.

But I must observe that the question to which my private letter to M. Dedel related, and the question at issue in the case of Mr. Schenley, are entirely distinct and totally different, and that the above-quoted passage has no just bearing whatever upon the question at issue in the case of Mr. Schenley.

The action brought against Mr. Samo arose out of some private pecuniary transactions in which that gentleman had been engaged in Surinam, and the question at issue was whether his official situation exempted him from being amenable to the authority of the law courts in Surinam in regard to a private debt; and in reference to that question I stated, in my letter to M. Dedel, that as Mr. Samo's appointment was not of a diplomatic character he could not claim in that respect the immunity from civil action which belongs to diplomatic agents.

But the actions against Mr. Schenley were brought on account of a publication made in London by Her Majesty's Government in papers laid before Parliament by order of the Queen, and the charge against Mr. Schenley was founded upon an official communication made by him to his own Government in the performance of his public duty. Her Majesty's Government cannot coincide with Baron Bentinck in thinking that the court at Surinam would in the slightest degree have been justified in considering the one case as a precedent for the other.

In the first place the debt contracted by Mr. Samo was contracted in Surinam, and within the jurisdiction of the courts of that colony; whereas the publication of Mr. Schenley's despatch took place in London, and therefore out of the jurisdiction of those courts. In the next place the debt of Mr. Samo was the result of a transaction engaged in by him in his personal capacity; whereas the despatch of Mr. Schenley was written in the performance of his official duty towards his own Government, and the publication of that despatch, which was the real cause of complaint on the part of the plaintiff at Surinam, was not the act of Mr. Schenley, but was an act with which he had nothing whatever to do, and was an act of the British Government, for which, if any complaint was to have been made, that complaint should have been made by the Netherland Government to that of Her Majesty, instead of private and personal malice being allowed to vent itself in an unjust prosecution against Mr. Schenley, and in the passing of a sentence against him which was alike inconsistent with the evidence, and a violation of international law.

You will, however, state to Baron Bentinck that Her Majesty's Government look to the substance more than to the form of things, and that as the steps taken and the orders given in this matter by the Netherland Government attain practically the result desired by Her Majesty's Government, you are instructed to state by an official note, that Her Majesty's Government are willing to accept that atonement for the misconduct of the Surinam courts; and that you have only further to express the confident hope of Her Majesty's Government that no functionaries, whether civil or judicial, of the Netherland Government, will again lend themselves to an endeavour to prevent an officer of the British Crown from faithfully performing the duties of his office.

I am, &c.

Sir E. C. Disbrowe, G.C.H.

No. 141.—Lieutenant-Colonel Farrant to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received July 26.)

(Extract.)

Camp, near Tehran, June 17, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that I have at last persuaded His Majesty the Shah to prohibit the importation of African slaves by sea.

On the 28th ultimo I addressed a letter to the Prime Minister, calling on his Excellency to fulfil his promise to me of bringing the subject of slavery, which had so often been discussed between us, to a satisfactory conclusion.

Some days having elapsed without my receiving any reply, on the 12th instant I addressed a second letter to his Excellency, requesting him to give me a decisive answer. The following day I received the copy of an autograph of the Shah addressed to the Prime Minister, written on the margin of my letter.

Although the Shah has not explicitly abolished the importation of African slaves into his dominions, he has virtually done so by the prohibition he has issued, forbidding their being brought by sea, as the route by land is not practicable.

Another point has also been gained, the royal order states "by sea;" this, of course, includes Mohamra. Had the wording of the firman been "by the ports in the Gulf," Mohamra, from its position, would have caused endless trouble, and would have been the great depôt of slaves from Persia. I therefore hope, my Lord, that the importation of African slaves into this country has ceased for ever.

I have the honour to inclose the Prime Minister's reply to my letter; also translations of the firmans which have been issued to the Governors of Fars and Persian Arabia.

Your Lordship's despatch of the 30th of March, which I had the honour to receive subsequent to my second letter to the Prime Minister, I have not brought to the notice of this Government; and conceiving your Lordship would desire the earliest intelligence of the success of this affair, I send off an extra messenger to Trebizond, which I trust may meet with your Lordship's approbation.

I shall dispatch a messenger to Major Hennell with a copy of the Shah's firman, and at the same time shall convey to that officer the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 31st of March.

I feel it my duty to mention to your Lordship, that the unremitting exertions of Meerza Agha, First Persian Secretary to this Mission, have greatly contributed to the successful issue of this affair.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

F. FARRANT.

*(Inclosure 1.)—Lieutenant-Colonel Farrant to Hajee Meerza Aghassee.
May 28, 1848.*

It is nearly 8 months since I first made a request of your Excellency regarding the prohibition of the importation of black slaves by the ports in the Persian Gulf. I have written and had several communications with your Excellency on this subject, and your Excellency has given me assurances, both verbally and in writing, that after the arrival of Meerza Jewad with the ratification of the Turco-Persian Treaty from Constantinople, you would bring this subject to a favourable termination. In addition to the assurances your Excellency made to me, you have often repeated the same to the gentlemen of this Mission. The promise and declaration of your Excellency is equal to a bond of security to me, and on that account it is evident the fulfilment of your Excellency's promise is the more necessary.

The time has now arrived that your Excellency should fulfil your promise or else declare the contrary, and write me your real determination on this subject, that I may bring the same to the notice of my own Government to enable them to arrange this matter with your Excellency, and take what steps they may think necessary.

Your Excellency will oblige me by sending an answer to-day.

H.E. Hajee Meerza Aghassee.

F. FARRANT.

(Translation.) June 12, 1848.

WITH regard to the abolition of the traffic in negroes (slaves) by sea, it is a long time since it was promised, and your Excellency recently informed me yourself that the discussions on this subject were nearly brought to a conclusion, and that, please God, it would be completed in a few days; but as yet it has not been finished.

If the Persian Government had appreciated my representations on this subject, the prohibition would, ere this, have been sanctioned; but as this has not been the case, I am now obliged to demand a clear and decisive answer on this subject, as to whether the Persian Government will issue an order prohibiting the importation of negroes by sea or not?

If it be the intention of the Persian Government to issue this order, I request to be made acquainted with it to-day; and if it is not their intention to do so, an immediate and explicit answer is necessary to enable me to forward it for the information of my Government, and that your Excellency, after all your promises, should no longer evade giving me a decided answer on this subject.

The British Government are very anxious to know the determination of the Persian Government, and I therefore request your Excellency will be good enough to send me a positive answer, as my Government will not consent to any further delay on my part in this matter.

YOUR EXCELLENCY THE HAJEE, June 12, 1848 (10 Rejjeb, 1264).

LET them not bring any negroes by sea; let them be brought by land. Purely for the sake of Farrant Sahib [Lieutenant-Colonel Farrant], with whom I am much pleased, I have consented to this. On this subject write to the Governors of Fars and Arabia [Persian Arabia].

[1848—49.]

Solely on account of the goodness of Farrant I have consented, otherwise some trifling discussions still exist between us and the English Government.

(Translation.) No date.

YOUR communication regarding the negroes has been received, and its contents fully understood.

With a view to the request made by you, my sincere and esteemed friend, and solely on account of the sincere friendship and good feelings I entertain towards you, I did not consider it proper to withhold or delay the fulfilment of your request and exerted my endeavours to preserve the existing friendship between the exalted Governments of Persia and England, by laying your request in detail before His Majesty the Shah (may his dominion and sovereignty be everlasting!) at a most fortunate time. An imperative order has been issued, which evinces the exceedingly great favour entertained towards you, my honoured friend, by His Majesty the Shah, which it is evident will always increase.

The importation of negroes by sea alone is forbidden, and imperative orders will be issued to the Governors of Fars and [Persian] Arabia, that hereafter strict prohibition should be observed that no negroes should be either imported or exported, unless by land.

This affair, in fulfilment of your request, my esteemed friend, has, thank God, been concluded by the countless favours of His Majesty the Shah towards you, and by my exertions. But the Persian Ministers, too, in equal proportion require, through the friendship of the Ministers of British Government, when they make a request, that it should be acceded to.

Lieut.-Colonel Farrant.

Governor of Fars.

(Translation.)

June, 1848.

To the high in rank, the pillar of nobility, Hoossein Khan, the Comptroller of State Affairs and Governor of Fars, who has been exalted and supported by the distinguished favours of His Majesty the Shah, &c. be it known, that it is a long time since a request for the abolition of the importation of negroes by sea has been made on the part of the Ministers of the British Government to the Ministers and authorities of this kingdom. But their request during this long period has not met with an answer or our consent.

But in consequence of the favour entertained by our august Sovereign towards the high in rank, the sincere well-wisher of the State, the chosen among Christian nobles, &c. Colonel Farrant, Chargé d'Affaires of the English Government, on account of the respectful conduct and manner of proceeding which he has made manifest, and purely for the regard we entertain for him, we have accepted and complied with his request. We have ordained that hereafter that high in rank shall warn all merchants and persons passing to and fro, to discontinue to bring negroes by sea alone, and that they shall not export or import negroes except by land, which is by no means forbidden.

That high in rank will be held responsible for the fulfilment of the orders contained in this communication.

THE SHAH.

June, 1848.

To the high in rank, the superior of Generals, the esteemed of the Sovereign, Meerza Nebbee Khan, chief of the Civil Law Court, and Governor of Ispahan, who has been honoured by the favour of the pure mind of the King of Kings.

Be it known, that at this time the high in rank, the noble and exalted, possessed of dignity, the pillar of the Christian nobles, the cream of the great men of Christendom, the undoubted well-wisher of the State, Colonel Farrant, Chargé d'Affaires of the exalted Government of England, who enjoys the unbounded favour of His Majesty the Shah, whose resplendent mind is desirous to gratify him, having made a friendly request on the part of the Ministers of his exalted Government to the Ministers of His Majesty the Shah, that with a view to preserve the existing friendship between the 2 exalted States, a decree should be issued from the source of magnificence, the Shah, that hereafter the importation of the Negro tribes by sea should be forbidden, and this traffic be abolished.

In consequence of this, it is ordered and ordained that, that high in rank, after perusing this firman, which is equal to a decree of fate, will feel it incumbent on him to issue positive and strict injunctions to the whole of the dealers in slaves who trade by sea, that henceforth by sea alone the importation and exportation of negroes into the Persian dominions is entirely forbidden, but not by land. Not a single individual will be permitted to bring negroes by sea without being subjected to severe punishment.

That high in rank must in this matter give peremptory orders throughout his Government, and not be remiss.

Bushire, July 15, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 19th ultimo, transmitting copies of Royal firmans addressed to the Governors of Fars and Persian Arabia, commanding them to forbid in future the importation of African slaves into Persia by sea.

2. In offering my congratulations on the successful result of your endeavours to obtain this important concession from the Persian Government, I have the honour to report for your information the receipt of a communication from his Excellency Hoossein Khan, the Governor of Fars, inclosing original orders addressed to the several chiefs of the principal places on the Persian Coast, positively prohibiting the importation of slaves into their ports. I have the honour to inclose copies and translations of the orders addressed to Sheik Nasir, the Governor of Bushire, and one to the merchants of Fars. You will observe with satisfaction that his Excellency specifically intimates in the latter part of these rukums, that the British ships of war are authorized to enforce the prohibition against the importation of slaves by sea contained in the Royal firmans.

July, 1848.

THIS high order has been issued, that the high in rank, Sheik Nasir Khan, Governor of the port of Bushire, may know that since in conformity with His Majesty's imperative firman, it has been determined and commanded that in this prosperous year, Buch Eel, and thereafter, the merchants, subjects of this high and everlasting State, shall relinquish the trade in the black slaves and slave-girls, by sea and by the ports of Fars. Any merchant desiring to prosecute the traffic in black slave girls and slaves, is free and at liberty to do so by land, from whatever quarter it may be; it is not forbidden; but by way of the sea, to embark them in vessels, they must entirely relinquish it, and not engage in this traffic. If after perusing this order any one of the merchants or others bring slaves and slave-girls by sea, he will render himself liable to punishment. That high in rank must advise and warn all the merchants and tradespeople residing at that port, that in consideration of the concord between the two exalted States, the vessels of the British have been permitted by the Ministers of this conquering State to prevent the propagation of this trade by sea. Assuredly that high in rank will not in any way deviate from the course now laid down.

Lisbon, April 28, 1848.

I HAVE the honour of inclosing to your Lordship the copy of a decree which appeared in the "Diario" of the 25th instant, providing for the appointment of a commission instructed to propose a plan for the best means of extinguishing slavery.

In speaking to me upon the subject, M. Gomes de Castro begged me to believe that the Government were perfectly sincere in their wish to put an end both to slave-trading and slave-holding.

With respect to the object of the commission lately appointed, the Minister said that the Government were convinced that any abrupt measure taken against slave-holding would be likely to be followed by the loss of the African colonies; that any experiments to be made in the gradual manumission of slaves would therefore be commenced in the East Indies, and that the results of the attempts there made would be the basis of extended endeavours of the same kind in Africa.

I have called the attention of M. Gomes de Castro to some deliberations and plans for the extinction of slavery, which, as I learn from a member of the Duke de Palmella's administration, had been prepared by order of his Excellency.

THE Slave Trade being already prohibited by law and Treaties in all the Portuguese possessions, and it being also in accordance with the true spirit of justice and equity on which all good policy rests, that an end should be put to negro slavery still tolerated and permitted in those possessions; the public weal requiring however that so important an alteration in the social state of those countries should be made with such prudence and forethought that fortunes may not be suddenly destroyed, nor the grant of liberty serve as an occasion for the slaves to abuse that benefit, which though entirely conformable to the principles of humanity, cannot but entail a serious sacrifice on the State as well as on the slave-owners; I am pleased to appoint a committee composed of the following members, the Councillors and Honorary Ministers of State, João de Sousa Pinto de Magalhães, and Ildefonso Leopoldo Bayard, the Councillor Antonio Ramalho de Sá, Judge of the Tribunal of Goa, the Councillor João da Costa Carvalho, Captain in the Navy, the Merchant of Lisbon, Faustino da Gama, the Lieutenant in the Navy, José Joaquim de Andrade Pinto, the Bachelor Carlos Zeferino Pinto Coelho de Castro, the first of whom shall act as president and the last as secretary, which committee, taking as a basis the principles of equity and justice, and keeping in view the laws and practice established in the Portuguese possessions, and also the lessons of experience offered by those regions where slavery has been abolished and other considerations which ought to be attended to, shall propose to me the most efficacious and proper practical means of carrying into effect the emancipation of the slaves existing in the Portuguese ultramarine territories, and shall prepare the necessary projects of law and regulations for carrying out that object.

No. 154.—Sir H. Seymour to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 25.)

MY LORD,

Lisbon, May 18, 1848.

IN obedience to the instructions conveyed to me in your Lordship's despatch of the 31st March, I addressed to M. Gomes de Castro the note of which I have the honour to inclose a copy, requesting that her most faithful Majesty might refuse compliance with the desire of the Governor-General of Angola to modify the execution of the law requiring that condemned slave-vessels should be broken up.

The reply of M. Gomes de Castro, of which also I beg to transmit a copy and translation, appearing to me to be drawn up under the impression that the application I had made was a mere repetition of that presented by Lord Howard de Walden, in the month of August, 1846, I have thought it right to call his Excellency's attention to the probability that the representations of the Governor-General of Angola had been occasioned by the receipt of orders transmitted on the 1st of September last year. At the same time I have suggested that a favourable opportunity now offered itself for instructing the new Governor-General of Angola, who is shortly to leave this capital for the seat of his Government, to use his endeavours to attain the object thus desired as well by the Government of her most faithful Majesty as by that of Great Britain.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

(Inclosure 1.)—Sir H. Seymour to Senhor Gomez de Castro.

M. LE MINISTRE,

Lisbon, April 25, 1848.

HER Majesty's Government have been informed that the Governor-General of Angola has represented to the Portuguese Government the difficulty of carrying into execution the Decree of 18th September, 1846, for breaking up and selling, in different lots, slave-vessels condemned by the Portuguese Prize Court at Loanda; and that his Excellency has proposed that that decree should be so far modified as to allow of such vessels being sold entire; the purchaser covenanting to break them up within 3 months from the date of the sale; and the Prize Court being invested with full powers to enforce this obligation.

In consequence of this information, I have received instructions from Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to urge her most faithful Majesty's Government to refuse compliance with this application of the Governor-General of Angola, and to recommend that if these slavers cannot be broken up they should be burnt.

Her Majesty's Government are apprehensive that if the recommendation of the Government is complied with, no such condemned vessels will ever be broken up by the purchasers, and that they will probably all go back to the Slave Trade.

I avail, &c.

Senhor Gomes de Castro.

(Translation.) Foreign Office, Lisbon, May 13, 1848.

In reply to the note which you addressed to me on the 25th April last, in which you refer to the reports of the Governor-General of Angola, on the difficulty of carrying into execution the Decree of the 10th September, 1846, which ordered vessels, condemned by the Tribunal of Prizes established at Loanda, to be broken up and sold; I have the honour to state to you that already, on the 6th September of last year, my predecessor communicated to you the orders which on the 1st of that month had been issued by the Marine Department, at the request of this office, to the said tribunal, to give entire execution to that decree, the demand made by your predecessor in his note of the 25th August, 1846, being thus acquiesced in. In the meantime, I this day communicate to the Minister of Marine your above-mentioned note, in order that his Excellency may renew the orders already sent to the said tribunal to sell the vessels condemned by it after having been broken up, with the addition of the suggestion made by his Excellency Viscount Palmerston, that when vessels cannot be thus sold, they shall in such case be burned.

M. LE MINISTRE, Lisbon, May 17, 1848.

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's note of the 13th instant, acquainting me that you have called upon the Minister of Marine to repeat the orders previously sent to the Governor of Angola for breaking up condemned slavers, with the additional suggestion of burning them, should they prove unsaleable.

In expressing my acknowledgments to your Excellency for this compliance with the desire of Her Majesty's Government I am anxious to call your attention to the probability that the representations of the Governor-General of Angola, alluded to in my note of the 25th April last, were occasioned by the receipt of the instructions transmitted on the 1st of September last year, and therefore gave occasion to Her Majesty's Commissioners at Loanda to urge this point upon the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

I would, therefore, suggest that advantage should be taken of this opportunity, when, as I am informed, a new Governor-General is about to proceed to Loanda to instruct his Excellency to give full effect to the Decree of 10th September, 1846, with the further alternative suggested by Viscount Palmerston, notwithstanding any difficulties which may be raised as to the expense of breaking up the vessels, or the impossibility of finding purchasers for them.

I have to instruct you to communicate this correspondence to the Portuguese Government, and to urge them to send out orders to the Governor-General to take the necessary steps to insure the speedy destruction of these factories at Mazula, which place is designated by that officer himself as the focus of the Slave Trade, as well as to secure the full and complete freedom of such negroes as may be found confined in the factories.

I have to instruct you to express to Senhor Gomes de Castro the thanks of Her Majesty's Government, for the issue of the orders referred to; and at the same time to suggest to him that, if it should be represented that the process of breaking up is troublesome and expensive, it may be answered, that a small quantity of gunpowder, properly applied, would effectually break up any slave-vessel.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 8th instant respecting the Commission appointed by her most faithful Majesty to inquire into the best means for putting an end to Slavery in the Portuguese possessions.

I have in reply to instruct you to take an early opportunity of expressing to Senhor Gomes de Castro the earnest hope of Her Majesty's Government, that any law which may be proposed on this subject may embrace the abolition of the condition of slavery in all the colonial possessions of Portugal. You will remind his Excellency that none of the pretences upon which the continuance of slavery is excused on the Continent of America and in the West Indian Islands apply to the colonial possessions of Portugal. For in the Portuguese colonies there is no deficiency of labourers, and those very races which are brought by force and fraud to America as being peculiarly suited to labour in a hot climate, are indigenous in the colonies of Portugal. There can, therefore, really be no more palliation for the existence of slavery in the colonies of Portugal than there could be for its existence in Portugal itself; and while, on the one hand, the Portuguese Government would perform a most honourable act by wiping off entirely from the national character the stain of a criminal practice which so many civilized and Christian countries have given up, on the other hand, such a moral purification would not be attended with any sacrifice of what is commonly called national interest.

The Portuguese Government may be sure that they would find the advantage of such a measure in the improvement which it would effect in the general character of the officers and other subjects of the Queen of Portugal in her colonial possessions; for universal experience proves that the existence of the condition of slavery in any country tends to degrade and corrupt the master class, quite as much as it afflicts and debases the slave.

M. LE MINISTRE,

Lisbon, September 28, 1848.

IT is with much satisfaction that Her Majesty's Government have learned the improvements which have been ordered in the Court of the Juiz de Direito at Loanda, with respect to the trial of the masters and crews of vessels condemned for slaving.

While, however, Her Majesty's Government anticipate great advantage from the changes already prescribed, they conceive that the object in view would be further promoted by the suggestions which it is now my duty to submit to your Excellency's earnest and I trust favourable consideration.

It is the opinion of Her Majesty's Government that it would tend greatly to the suppression of the Slave Trade if severe punishment were inflicted on persons found engaged in that traffic: they are further of opinion that the situation of the Portuguese colonies on the west coast of Africa, within the limits of which it is but too apparent that notwithstanding the activity of the Portuguese squadron and the good faith of the Governor-General of Angola, the Slave Trade is still carried on to a great extent, gives to the Government of her most faithful Majesty peculiar facility for inflicting a heavy blow on the Slave Trade of Brazil, by providing for the speedy and certain administration of justice against all foreigners engaged in that illicit pursuit within the territorial jurisdiction of the Portuguese Crown.

I come now to the 2 points which I am directed to bring under your Excellency's especial attention, both of them arising out of the VIth Article of the Decree of the 14th September, 1844.

The first relates to the construction which has hitherto been placed upon the concluding part of the Article in question, providing that in the event of a vessel being condemned and declared a good prize by the tribunal (the Prize Court) which the decree creates, a certified copy of its condemnatory sentence shall be sent to the Juiz de Direito, together with the prisoners, those, that is, who are found on board, and that such certified copy shall serve as a bill of indictment against them.

In giving effect to this provision the Prize Court have been content to take it in its strictest and most literal sense, and have confined themselves to transmitting the bare sentence.

The consequence has been, that the sentence being directed mainly against the vessels, and rarely making mention of those on board, when the trial of the latter comes on before the Juiz de Direito, nothing appears against them.

If, instead of the sentence, the Prize Court were directed to transmit the whole of the proceedings to the Juiz de Direito, either the original "autos" or a certified copy of the same, the several depositions therein contained would in most cases afford abundant matter by which the guilt of criminal parties might be established, they being of course left the full power of defending themselves in the same way and with the same latitude as if the prosecution originated in the court before which they are personally arraigned.

A preferable, because an infinitely more efficient modification of the existing legislation would, however, be to intrust the trial of the persons as well as of the property of the slave-traffickers to one and the same tribunal, that is, to the Prize Court.

It may here be observed, that as the condemnations in question would not extend to those passed by the Mixed Commission, no objection could be raised to the proposed alteration upon the grounds of decisions being exposed to the bias of foreign influence.

The second point refers to the mode of dealing with persons found on board of detained vessels, whether pending or subsequent to the adjudication of the vessel or their own trial before the Juiz de Direito.

orders, in putting an end to such barbarous traffic, has caused the greatest satisfaction to Her Majesty's Government.

SIR,

Foreign Office, October 9, 1848.

I HAVE to refer you to the note dated the 11th of February, 1847, and addressed by M. de Portugal e Castro to Mr. Southern, stating it to be the desire of the Portuguese Government that the prisoners from Portuguese slave-vessels condemned by the Mixed Commission at the Cape of Good Hope should be sent to Loanda for trial: and I now transmit to you the accompanying copy of a despatch and of its inclosure from Her Majesty's Commissioners at the Cape of Good Hope, representing the difficulty which would exist in sending such criminals to Loando, and suggesting that they should be sent to Mozambique for trial.

I have to instruct you to communicate the inclosed papers to Senhor Gomes de Castro, and you will express to him the hope of Her Majesty's Government, that the Government of her most faithful Majesty will not hesitate to accede to a proposal which will facilitate the execution of so important a stipulation of the Treaty of 1842 as that contained in Article XII of that compact, and that they will issue the requisite instructions to their Commissioners at the Cape of Good Hope upon this point.

No. 180.—Sir H. Seymour to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Oct. 16.)

MY LORD,

Lisbon, October 7, 1848.

I HAD the honour of receiving by the last packet your Lordship's despatch of the 14th ultimo, together with its 3 inclosures.

In obedience to your Lordship's orders, and after a conversation which I held this morning with M. Gomes de Castro, I have addressed his Excellency the note of which I beg to inclose a copy. In this I have offered, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, that the negroes taken on board the Fortuna, and any others found in vessels captured by Portuguese cruizers and condemned either by the Mixed Commission or by the Portuguese municipal tribunals, should be delivered to British authorities for the purpose of being conveyed to a British colony.

It is not in my power to state to your Lordship whether the offer will be accepted by the Portuguese Government; M. Gomes de Castro having declined giving any decided opinion upon the subject until he should have made himself acquainted with the papers relating to the negroes found on board the Fortuna.

I may however observe that the Ministry appear generally well disposed to meet the views of Her Majesty's Government as to measures connected with the repression of the Slave Trade, and this being so I have communicated the draft of the proposed Article confidentially to M. Gomes de Castro, begging him to consider it at his leisure.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

G. H. SEYMOUR.

(Inclosure.)—Sir H. Seymour to Senhor Gomes de Castro.

M. LE MINISTRE,

Lisbon, October 7, 1848.

HER Majesty's Commissioner at Loanda has reported to Her Majesty's Government the manner in which 20 emancipated negroes, from the Portuguese launch Fortuna, which was condemned by the Mixed Commission on the 27th of March last, had been provisionally disposed of by the Board of Superintendence of Liberated Africans.

Your Excellency will not fail to perceive that it was found impracticable in this case strictly to fulfil the stipulations of Annex C to the Treaty of July 3, 1842. The XIIth Article of that Annex requires that the persons taking charge of emancipated negroes should pay a stipulated sum to the Board of Superintendence; but no persons having been found willing to take charge of the negroes of the Fortuna on that condition, they were provisionally apprenticed, subject to the approbation of the Portuguese and British Governments, without any sum of money having been actually paid or promised to be paid to that Board.

Her Majesty's Government, under the circumstances of this case, have approved of the conduct of Her Majesty's Commissioner in his capacity of British Member of the Board of Superintendence, in entering into the provisional arrangement on behalf of these negroes which is above referred to; although, strictly speaking, the Board of Superintendence had no power to dispense with any of the stipulations in favour of apprenticed negroes, laid down in Annex C. It is unnecessary for me to point out to your Excellency that by acceding to that provisional arrangement, Her Majesty's Commissioner has relieved the Government of Angola from the obligation which would have attached to it under Article XXI of Annex C, of providing for the negroes in question, if they were not apprenticed or enlisted according to the terms of that Annex.

Having thus called your Excellency's attention to the provisional arrangement which has been entered upon by Her Majesty's Commissioners at Loanda, with respect to these 20 emancipated negroes, I have now, in pursuance of orders, to suggest to your Excellency the expediency of measures being immediately adopted by the British and Portuguese Governments, by which the negroes of the Fortuna, and any others who may in future be emancipated by the Mixed Commission or by the Portuguese Prize Court, may be removed to a British colony. In conformity with the instructions which I have received from Viscount Palmerston, I beg to state to your Excellency that Her Majesty's Government will be willing to take charge of, and to send to a British colony, the negroes of the Fortuna as well as any others who may be carried into Loanda in slave-vessels captured by Portuguese cruizers, whether condemned by the Mixed Commission or by the Portuguese municipal tribunals; long experience having taught Her Majesty's Government that the freedom of emancipated slaves can nowhere be effectually secured except in countries or colonies where the condition of slavery does not exist.

Sir,

Foreign Office, October 17, 1848.

I HEREWITH transmit to you a copy and translation of a form of certificate of emancipation of negroes declared free by the Mixed Commission at Loanda, which has been drawn up by the British and Portuguese Commissioners at that place, and has been given to each of the negroes of the launch Fortuna, which was captured with 20 slaves on board by the Portuguese schooner of war Nimfa, and was condemned by the Mixed Commission on the 27th of March last.

I have to acquaint you that Her Majesty's Commissioners have stated that if the form in question should receive the approval of the British and of the Portuguese Governments, it is the intention of the Mixed Commission that it shall be adopted in any future basis which may occur.

I have accordingly to instruct you to communicate the form in question to Senhor Gomes de Castro, to state to him that it appears to Her Majesty's Government to be drawn up with great care and to be very well adapted for its purpose, and you will request him, if he sees no objection thereto, to signify the acquiescence of his Government in its adoption.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 9th instant.

A copy of the inclosure to your Lordship's despatch has, in compliance with your orders, been communicated to M. Gomes de Castro, to whom at the same time I addressed the note of which I beg to

M. LE MINISTRE,

Lisbon, October 25, 1848.

YOUR Excellency will find, by reference to a note addressed by Don Manuel de Portugal to Mr. Southern on the 11th February, 1847, that the Government of her most faithful Majesty have expressed a wish that prisoners from Portuguese slave-vessels condemned by the Mixed Commission at the Cape of Good Hope should be sent for trial to Loanda.

That note, after communication with the Cape of Good Hope, having been again under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, I am instructed to communicate to your Excellency the copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Commissioners at the Cape, representing the difficulty which would exist in sending such prisoners to Loanda, and suggesting that their trial should take place at Mozambique.

I am at the same time directed to express to your Excellency the hope of Her Majesty's Government, that the Government of her most faithful Majesty will not hesitate to accede to a proposal which will facilitate the execution of so important a stipulation of the Treaty of 1842 as that contained in the XIIth Article of that compact, and that they will in consequence cause the requisite order to be dispatched to their Commissioner at the Cape of Good Hope.

Your Excellency will perceive from the inclosed despatch that the suggestion respecting the conveyance of prisoners to Mozambique, although adopted by the English Commissioners and by Her Majesty's Government, was made by the Portuguese Commissioner, and that it was founded upon considerations of the difficulty and expense attendant upon the conveyance of prisoners to Angola.

It is my further duty to state to your Excellency that as this form appears to Her Majesty's Government to be drawn up with great care and to be very well adapted to its purpose, Her Majesty's Government on their part approve of the intention of the Mixed Commission, that it shall be adopted in any future cases which may occur, should the proposal be equally sanctioned by the Government of her most faithful Majesty.

SIR, Penelope, St. Helena, November 1, 1848.

WITH reference to your despatch dated 17th July, 1848, covering a letter from Her Majesty's Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to the Minister at Lisbon, suggesting that the British squadron on the coast of Africa would cheerfully co-operate in the destruction of barracoons or slave factories at Ambriz; I have the honour to transmit the copy of a letter which I addressed to the officer commanding the Portuguese squadron on the West Coast, tendering the services of Her Majesty's cruizers for the same object, and his reply.

Their Lordships will observe that M. Cordeiro declines the assistance of our vessels, and informs me that he has made an arrangement for the entire destruction of the barracoons at Ambriz and entertains no doubt of complete success.

I have, &c.

The Secretary to the Admiralty.

CHAS. HOTHAM.

(Inclosure 2.)—Commodore Sir C. Hotham to Captain Cordeiro.

SIR, Penelope, St. Paul de Loanda, October 9, 1848.

IN the conversation which I had the honour of holding on board the Oito de Julho yesterday afternoon, you were pleased to inform me that the instructions you had received from the Minister of Marine at Lisbon directed you to cause to be at once destroyed any barracoons which the British cruizers may officially acquaint you as existing for objects of Slave Trading, whenever the persons charged with this service, and who must always be Portuguese, may find in such barracoons, slaves, or even any goods which may be proved for the purpose of the traffic; and you were also pleased to intimate your readiness to fulfil the letter of the instructions whenever such a notification should be made.

I have now the honour of acquainting you that several barracoons, employed for the purpose of the Slave Trade, exist to the south of this city. I will particularly mention Cape St. Bras, to the south of Coanza, and Punto Longo. There are also to the north large establishments at Ambriz and Mazula.

It would afford me peculiar satisfaction to have it in my power to acquaint my Government that their destruction had been effected, in accordance with the wish of the 2 Governments; and yesterday I received with great pleasure your assurance that such was your intention.

Our respective instructions appear to prohibit the co-operation of the British naval forces; but it is my duty to place them entirely at your disposal, and to express our readiness to act in any way you may desire.

I transmit the copy of my orders relative to this service, and avail myself of this opportunity to assure you that it affords me great satisfaction to co-operate with any officer who appears to have the suppression of the Slave Trade so much at heart.

I have, &c.

(Translation.)

Loanda, October 10, 1848.

MOST ILLUSTRIOUS AND EXCELLENT SIR,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a despatch which your Excellency forwarded to me, under date October 9th, as well as copies of 4 notes which had been exchanged between the Governments of Her Britannic Majesty and of her most faithful Majesty my august Sovereign, relative to the burning of the barracoons in which the wicked contrabandistas concerned in the infamous slave traffic place their unfortunate victims as well as the prohibited articles with which they ruthlessly torture the unhappy human race.

In fulfilment of my duty, I am to signify to your Excellency that I was already acquainted with their contents, and that they are entirely in accordance with the order of the Government of my august Sovereign because it is there explicitly settled by agreement of the Governments of the 2 nations, of the oldest alliance, in virtue of which I have the honour to inform your Excellency that the destruction of the barracoons on Portuguese territory can only be effected by the subjects of the said august Sovereign. And notwithstanding that I have the best-grounded hopes in the success in the destruction of the barracoons, it would have given me the greatest satisfaction that these my most sanguine designs should have been happily conducted under the auspices of your Excellency, but the positive orders which I have already transmitted, are in this one thing diametrically opposed.

I avail, &c.

Sir C. Hotham.

Loanda, corvette Oito de Julho, October 13, 1848.

1st. You will to-day, the 18th of the present month, profit by the first opportunity and sail from the port of Loanda in the brig under your command, and in your quality as cruizer examine all the most noted places on the coast, included between Ambriz in the Dandy, Mazula, and Mazula Grande, and Mazula Pequeno, using the most zeal and diligence in your search, and landing, in the quietest way possible, if you should discover barracoons containing proofs of their being used in the infamous slave traffic, conformably with the Decree of December 10, 1836, which I subjoin, and having ascertained that there is proof of their participation, you will proceed as the Government of her most faithful Majesty has thought proper to direct in the despatches of May 22 and July 1, 1847, a copy of which is also transmitted. And as soon as this important service may be concluded, you will return to the port of Loanda and inform me of the manner in which you have executed this important commission, being a superior officer in whom, according to the recommendation of Her Majesty, I deposit my entire confidence.

I enjoin upon you to obtain the most satisfactory results possible in the service you are to execute.

I expect from your intelligence and sailor-like abilities, of which you have given on all occasions the fullest proof, that this important service may be so concluded as to enable me to report it favourably to the Government of her most faithful Majesty.

In this commission it is also your duty to observe the faithful execution of the Treaty of July 3, 1842, which expressly determined the abolition of the Slave Trade in the colonies belonging to the Portuguese Crown, with which documents you are furnished, as well as the other resolutions of our Government in that particular; it is also important, that you should recollect and fulfil the punctual execution of the despatch dated May 29, 1846, the true copy of which is also attached, remembering that you are responsible for the detention of vessels on this coast, whose nationality is not English, and who may be acting in contravention of the Treaty of July 3, 1842, whenever you may not be able to prove before the competent tribunal of prizes, in the proper and legal manner, that the vessel was detained within the line of boundary, which is a distance of 3 miles from the shore.

You will begin your operations at Ambriz, landing at night, so that you may be able to prevent retreat into the interior. I equally call your attention to any small boats, such as canoes, launches, &c. who might be able to warn the slave-dealers of Ambriz and the Dandy. I besides remind you that the greater part of these small craft are to be found within the 3 miles.

Captain F. J. Guimaraes.

M. F. DA SILVA CORDEIRO.

No. 190.—Viscount Palmerston to Sir H. Seymour.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 16, 1849.

IN the month of December 1847, I received from Viscount Moncorvo a note, of which I inclose a copy, proposing on the part of the Portuguese Government, on the ground of economy, and for other reasons therein stated, that the Mixed Commissions established in Jamaica and in the Cape Verd Islands under the Treaty of 1842, for the suppression of the Slave Trade, should be abolished, and requesting the assent of Her Majesty's Government to that proposal.

In the answer which I returned to Viscount Moncorvo, and of which also I inclose a copy, I expressed the willingness of Her Majesty's Government to abolish the Mixed Commissions in Jamaica and the Cape Verds, if the Portuguese Government would consent to the establishment of a Mixed Commission at Sierra Leone, and with this view I prepared a draft of an Additional Convention which I was prepared to send to you for the approval of the Portuguese Government, but which I first sent to Viscount Moncorvo for any observations which he might be pleased to make to me thereupon.

Having, however, received no further communication upon this subject from Viscount Moncorvo, I have lately reconsidered the question, and supposing it likely that the Government of her most faithful Majesty may be unwilling to agree to the establishment of a Mixed Commission at Sierra Leone on account of the expense which it would entail, whereby economy to be effected by abolishing the Commissions in Jamaica and the Cape Verds would be somewhat counteracted, Her Majesty's Government have now resolved to agree to the abolition of the above-mentioned Commissions, without insisting upon the establishment of a Commission at Sierra Leone, on the clear understanding, however, that vessels which would have been tried either in Jamaica or in the Cape Verds shall be sent for adjudication, if seaworthy, to Loanda or to Cape Town, and that any slaves found on board of such vessels shall at once be landed either in one of the British West India Islands, or at Sierra Leone, whichever may be deemed by the captors nearest or most convenient for that purpose.

When Her Majesty's Government suggested that there should be a Mixed Commission at Sierra Leone instead of those in Jamaica and the Cape Verds, it was thought that an Additional Convention to the Treaty of 1842 would be necessary to carry that proposal into effect, because by the VIth Article of that Treaty it is stipulated that of the Commissions which should be established under it, one-half should reside in British possessions and one-half in Portuguese, and the proposal then made would have been at variance with that stipulation. But as by the present proposal that stipulation of the Treaty of 1842 will be in no way interfered with, the form of a protocol will be a sufficient record of such an arrangement.

I accordingly inclose a draft of protocol which you will submit to the Portuguese Government for their approval, and which you are authorized to sign at once if it should be agreed to. The provision with respect to the landing of slaves in the British West India Islands or at Sierra Leone, instead of conveying them to Loanda is in fact nothing more than what is already provided for by the stipulations of the Treaty of 1842, but I have nevertheless thought it right to record it specifically in the present protocol.

You will concert with the Portuguese Government as to the precise period at which it may be convenient that the functions of the Commissioners at Boa Vista and at Kingston should respectively cease, and you will inform me of the result. I am, &c.

Sir H. Seymour.

PALMERSTON.

(Inclosure.)—Protocol of a conference held at on the 1849, between the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain and Portugal.

WHEREAS by the VIth Article of the Treaty concluded on the 3rd day of July, 1842, between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and Her Majesty the Queen of Portugal and the Algarves, for the suppression of the Slave Trade, it was stipulated that, in order to bring to adjudication with as little delay and inconvenience as possible, the vessels which might be detained according to the tenor of the IIInd Article of the same Treaty, there should be established as soon as might be practicable, 2 or more Mixed Commissions, formed of an equal number of individuals of the 2 nations, named for that purpose by their respective Sovereigns, and that of those Commissions, one-half should reside in possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, and the other half within the territories of her most faithful Majesty, and that the 2 Governments at the period of exchanging the ratifications of the said Treaty should declare, each for its own dominions, in what places the Commissions should respectively reside; and that each of the 2 High Contracting Parties reserved to itself the right of changing at its pleasure, the place of residence of the Commissions held within its own dominions, provided that 2 at least of the said Commissions should always be held either on the coast of Africa or in one of the islands off that coast, and that these Commissions should judge the causes submitted to them, according to the provisions of the aforesaid Treaty, and which are considered as forming an integral part thereof: And whereas in accordance with the above-mentioned stipulations Mixed Commissions were established in Her Britannic Majesty's possessions at Cape Town, at the Cape of Good Hope, and at Kingston in the Island of Jamaica, and in her most faithful Majesty's possessions at St. Paul de Loanda on the west coast of Africa, and at Boa Vista, one of the Cape Verd Islands: And whereas the High Contracting Parties now deem it unnecessary and inexpedient to continue the 2 Mixed Commissions established at Kingston and at Boa Vista, and have agreed to abolish them accordingly; the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain and of Portugal have met to record this decision in the present Protocol, it being understood that vessels which would have been tried at either of the 2 above-named places, shall now be sent for adjudication, if seaworthy, to Loanda or to Cape Town, and that any slaves found on board of such vessels shall at once be landed either in one of the British West India possessions, or at Sierra Leone, whichever may be deemed by the captors nearest or most convenient for that purpose.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 16, 1849.

BY my despatch of the 12th of July last I informed you that Major Teixeira, late Governor of the Portuguese possession of Quillimane, on the east coast of Africa, had absconded from that place, carrying with him 500 slaves to Rio de Janeiro; and in your despatch of the 25th of July you stated that Major Teixeira had arrived at Lisbon, and that measures were in progress for bringing him to trial.

I now transmit to you, for your information, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Rio de Janeiro, stating that Major Teixeira did actually land a cargo of slaves on the coast of Brazil; and I have to instruct you to inquire and to report to me what steps have been taken to bring this person to punishment.

Her Majesty's Government sincerely hope that so flagrant a case of slave-trading and so glaring an infraction both of the laws of Portugal and of the Treaties with this country, will not be allowed to escape without adequate punishment.

I am, &c.

Sir H. Seymour.

PALMERSTON.

No. 192.—Viscount Palmerston to Sir H. Seymour.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 25, 1849.

I HEREWITH transmit to you copies and translations of 2 decrees issued by the Portuguese Government on the 29th of February and the 2nd of March, 1848, respectively, the one ordering Portuguese cruizers to abstain from visiting, searching, and capturing on any pretext, in time of peace, beyond the territorial waters of Portugal, that is to say, beyond 3 miles from the coasts of the Portuguese possessions, vessels of foreign nations between which and Portugal there do not exist Treaties granting a mutual right of search, even although the chase of such vessels should have commenced within the 3 miles limit. The other ordering that all such captures shall be declared illegal, and that all vessels which may have been adjudicated, or which may be under adjudication in consequence of such captures, shall be forthwith restored; and directing that no vessels, whether Portuguese or foreign, found within the territorial waters of Portugal, shall be seized or condemned merely on account of being found, under whatever pretext, out of their true course, which rule is also to apply to Portuguese vessels on the high seas.

I have now to state to you, that to the first of these decrees Her Majesty's Government see no objection, and more especially as it is not made applicable to cases in which a mutual right of search is stipulated for by existing Treaties.

With respect to the second decree, Her Majesty's Government think that if taken in its strict and literal meaning, that decree also is not open to objection.

The direction therein contained, that Portuguese vessels on the high seas shall not be seized or condemned merely on account of being found out of their course, affords no just ground of complaint to foreign Governments; but it is to be observed that that direction would have been more strictly in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty of July 3, 1842, if it had been confined to cases in which there is no ground for reasonable suspicion that the vessel so out of her course is engaged in the Slave Trade. The deviation of a vessel from her proper course may sometimes afford very strong corroborative proof that she was actually engaged in the Slave Trade. For instance, the Treaty of 1842 permits Portuguese subjects to be accompanied by their household slaves in voyages from the Portuguese possessions on the coast of Africa to the islands of Cape Verde, Princes', and St. Thomas'. It is obvious that the circumstance of a vessel with such slaves on board being found steering direct for Cuba or Brazil, or any other place where there is a market for slaves, would furnish a strong presumption that she was engaged in an unlawful transaction, and was consequently liable to seizure and condemnation under the provisions of the Treaty.

I have to instruct you to make a communication to the above effect to Viscount de Castro.

I am, &c.

Sir H. Seymour.

It having become a question whether cruizers having commenced a chase, in Portuguese ports or waters, of foreign vessels supposed to be there infringing the laws of the country, can in one continuous pursuit carry on such chase, visit, and capture such vessels, beyond the recognized limits (liecha de respeito) of the said ports and waters, in the event of the suspicions which gave rise to that act proving well founded; and the law officer of the Crown having been consulted on this subject, and having thereon given his opinion of the 9th instant, as well as the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, as appears from the despatch from that department, dated also the 22nd instant; the Queen orders a communication to be made to the Major-General of the Navy, for his information, as for its due effect, through the Ministry of Marine, that neither by any special law, nor by the principles of maritime international right, can Portuguese men-of-war pursue, visit, and capture, in time of peace, beyond the territorial waters, the ships of any foreign nation which may have infringed the laws of their kingdoms, even though the chase should have commenced within those waters and been continuously kept up beyond them, so long as no right of search and capture on the high seas shall exist by express Treaty.

IN addition to the portaria addressed through this department on the 29th of February last to the Major-General of the Navy, informing him that, in the absence of any express Treaty, it was not allowed to give chase to, visit, and capture, beyond the recognized limit (liecha de respeito), any foreign vessels whose proceedings within the ports and waters of Portugal may have subjected them to strong suspicion of their being engaged in infringing the laws of the country, even though such chase should have commenced within the said ports and waters; the Queen orders that it be intimated to the said Major-General, for his information and for the necessary purposes, that not only are captures made under such circumstances to be discontinued, but that they are to be declared illegal by the Prize Court; and that all vessels which may have been adjudicated, or are now under adjudication, in consequence of such captures, are to be forthwith given up, it being equally understood that no vessels met with in the territorial waters of the Portuguese dominions can in any manner be taken or condemned merely on account of being found, under whatever pretext, out of their true course, whether such vessels be national or foreign, nor can national vessels, met with on the high seas; because to justify the capture and condemnation of all such, it is indispensable either that negroes actually destined for the Slave Trade be found on board, or those articles which, according to the list annexed to the Decree of the 10th of December, 1836, render such vessels subject to the provisions thereof. And the said Major-General will understand that similar orders are sent by a portaria of this day's date to the Governor-General of the province of Angola and to the President of the Prize Court of Loanda.

HAVING, as I informed you on the 9th instant, brought to the knowledge of the Marine Department your note of the 5th of said month, respecting the orders issued by Her Majesty's Government to the Portuguese cruizers to abstain from visiting, searching, and capturing any foreign vessel when once they are out of the waters of the Portuguese territory belonging to a nation with whom a Treaty of reciprocal right of search does not exist; I have the honour to inform you that the same department has communicated to me on the 15th instant, that those orders were issued in conformity with the opinion given by the Counsellor Attorney-General, that Portuguese vessels of war are not authorized to chase, visit, and capture, in time of peace, out of the territorial waters, any foreign vessels that may have infringed the laws of these kingdoms, even if the chase began in the said waters and should be continued without intermission beyond them, except an express Treaty exists authorizing the right of visiting and capturing on the high seas.

With regard, however, to the cessation of the capture of foreign or native vessels on no other grounds than those of being found out of their true course, orders were also issued, not only in harmony with the opinions of the Attorney-General, but because that measure contributed powerfully to the avoidance of just claims for the capture of vessels made on the grounds of being suspected of carrying on the traffic of slaves, when in reality no other reason existed for these suspicions but that of having met said vessels out of their true course, which alone could not justify its capture, neither from the Decree of December 10, 1836, or from the Treaty of 1842.

Having thus answered your said note, allow me to avail, &c.

I HEREBY transmit to you an extract from a report dated Simon's Bay, December 1, 1848, from Vice-Admiral Dacres, late Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's ships and vessels on the Cape of Good Hope station, to the Secretary to the Admiralty, upon the state of the African Slave Trade within the limits of his command.

You will communicate this paper to the Portuguese Government, and you will express the great pleasure which Her Majesty's Government feel in being thus able to convey to the knowledge of the Portuguese Government the strong testimony which has been borne by a distinguished officer in Her Majesty's naval service to the honourable and disinterested conduct of the Governor of Mozambique and of the Governor of Quillimane, in the performance of their official duties in execution of the engagements into which their Government has entered with the Government of this country for the suppression of the Slave Trade; and you will remark that the testimony thus borne by Admiral Dacres is the more honourable to the Portuguese officers concerned, because his report was written solely for the information of his own Government, and without any notion that his statement would be communicated to the Government of Portugal.

I am, &c.

Sir H. Seymour.

PALMERSTON.

(Inclosure.)—Vice-Admiral Dacres to the Secretary to the Admiralty.
(Extract.) President, Simon's Bay, December 1, 1848.

THE causes which may be believed to have led to the decline of Slave Trade on the east coast of Africa are as follows :

First, the integrity of the high Portuguese authorities lately employed at the principal Governments on the coast. I have on more than one occasion brought to their Lordships' notice the very laudable example which appears to be set to the different Portuguese functionaries on the coast of Africa by Governor-General do Valle of Mozambique and Governor Campos of Quillimane, both of whom appear to be moved by the most sincere desire to discountenance Slave Trade from the Portuguese territories in every possible manner, and who really deserve the thanks and best wishes of every well-wisher to the cause.

The praise which is justly due to Captain Do Valle and Major Campos is great, and it is to be hoped that they will persevere in their present upright course, which cannot fail to be the main instrument in suppressing Slave Trade from this quarter.

In my letter to their Lordships of the 6th July, 1846, I reported that the Governor-General of Mozambique had by directions from his Government, withdrawn a permission which he had issued to Her Majesty's cruisers to enter such ports, &c. in the territories of her most faithful Majesty where there were not any competent authorities (Portuguese), and to seize vessels found therein engaged in Slave Trade. And in my letters of the 28th December, 1846, and 11th June, 1847, I earnestly represented to their Lordships the evils of such a measure, and the probability of its adding fresh stimulus to the Slave Trade. It has been therefore with the greatest pleasure that I have been furnished by Rear-Admiral Reynolds with a copy of the protocol of conference held on the 12th August, 1847, between the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain and Portugal, by which the prohibition to our cruisers to enter the ports, &c. in question has been removed, and I am convinced that such will be of the greatest benefit in suppressing the Slave Trade from the east coast of Africa.

The Secretary to the Admiralty.

ON the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 16th January, I addressed a note to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, inquiring what steps had been taken to bring Major Teixeira to justice, for the flagrant act of slave-trading, of which he had been guilty.

The note of Viscount de Castro, of which I beg to inclose a copy and translation, will acquaint your Lordship with the endeavours made to bring this officer to trial. They have hitherto been ineffectual, as he has succeeded in escaping by concealment the execution of the warrant issued for his appearance.

I beg also to transmit a copy of my acknowledgment of Viscount de Castro's note.

March 7, 1849.

THE inquiry which you made of me in the note which you were pleased to address to me on the 24th January last, with respect to the steps taken by Her Majesty's Government against Major Custodio José Antonio Teixeira, late Governor of Quillimane, was very satisfactory to Her Majesty's Government, since it gave them an opportunity of showing the notice they had taken of the culpable behaviour of the Major.

I have then the honour to acquaint you, that as soon as Her Majesty's Government were made aware that that officer was conducting himself improperly in the duties of the office which had been entrusted to him by Her Majesty, they determined that he should be dismissed from it, which in fact was carried into execution by the Decree of the 8th March, 1848.

Soon after, when it was known that he was in this capital, the requisite orders were, on the 29th July of the same year, issued to the Major-General of the fleet, in order that he might be at once detained in custody; but this could not be done, because he had concealed himself.

A requisition was sent from the Marine Department to the War Department, to institute the proper correctional proceedings against Major Teixeira, and on the 12th December last he was pronounced a deserter, and is at this moment classified as such.

According to advices from the Governor-General of Mozambique, I am informed that by one of the first ships which may arrive in this port from that colony, Her Majesty's Government should receive the record of the proceedings instituted against Major Teixeira for the crime of deserting the post entrusted to him, and for the abuse of the authority conferred on him by that post.

This is the present state of the affair in question, the warrant against him being still in full force, in order to be executed as soon as the place of his concealment is discovered.

No. 199.—Sir H. Seymour to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Mar. 20.)

MY LORD,

Lisbon, March 12, 1849.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy and translation of the answer returned by Viscount de Castro to the note which I addressed to him on the 25th January, with a copy of the protocol prepared to be signed for the reduction of the Mixed Commissions of Jamaica and Boa Vista.

The object of M. de Castro's reply, which was made clearer to me in consultation than it is in the inclosed note, is to state that the Portuguese Government are not disposed to become parties to the protocol in its present shape, and would only accept it if provision be made for that entire reciprocity respecting the disposal of captured slaves, which he assumes to be the characteristic of all stipulations relating to the suppression of the Slave Trade.

As it appears to me that the character ascribed by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Slave Trade stipulation is not entirely supported in the protocol as communicated to him; and as, on the other hand, I cannot but feel that Her Majesty's Government are at liberty to fix the conditions upon which alone they are prepared to consent to the suppression of the 2 Mixed Commissions, desired by the Portuguese Government, I do not propose returning any answer beyond that of a simple acknowledgment to the inclosed note until I have been honoured by your Lordship's orders.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

G. H. SEYMOUR.

(Inclosure.)—Viscount de Castro to Sir H. Seymour.

(Translation.)

Foreign Office, Lisbon, March 9, 1849.

I SAW with satisfaction that in the project of protocol proposed by Her Britannic Majesty's Government, which I had the honour to receive together with your note of the 25th January last, the desires of Her Majesty's Government are complied with, that there may be the 2 Mixed Commissions, one in Loanda, the other at the Cape of Good Hope, for vessels detained as suspected of, or as charged with, the crime of slave-trading, to be sentenced there.

It is declared in the said protocol, that when such vessels are sent to those places for that object, "the slaves found on board shall be landed at once either in one of the British West India colonies or at Sierra Leone, whichever the captor may deem nearest or most convenient for that purpose."

You say in your note, that "this provision of sending those slaves to the said British colonies instead of to Loanda is in fact nothing more than what was provided for in the stipulations of the Treaty of 1842." Allow me to observe to you, that neither in the said Treaty nor in the instructions and regulations annexed, do I meet with any such disposition. On the contrary, in Article IV of the instructions to the cruizers, it is very expressly forbidden to remove from the vessel seized, any part of the crew, of the passengers, of the cargo, or of the slaves, till the vessel be delivered up to one of the Mixed Commissions. An exception is only made in cases where this would become necessary for saving their lives, or for any other humane consideration, or for the safety of the persons charged with the conduct of the vessel after its seizure. This exception then authorizes in the above-mentioned cases only, the transfer of slaves from one vessel to another, but in no wise under any other circumstances, and makes no mention of landing them in the British colonies before the adjudication of the prizes. On the contrary, according to Article VI, section 2, of the Annex B, and Article II of Annex C, it is only after the prizes are condemned, that the slaves should be given up to the Government of the captor.

The Protocol therefore deviates in this point from the Treaty.

Her Majesty's Government in the meanwhile have no objection to agree to this new measure of disposing of the slaves before the adjudication; the reciprocity, however, established in the Treaty of 1842, to which this Protocol tends to give a greater development, requires that this disposition may be common to both Governments, by stipulating that Portuguese cruizers, when they send their prizes for adjudication by the Mixed Commissions, may also, at the same time, land the slaves taken by them in some part of our transmarine provinces, if they consider them to be nearer, or more convenient for that purpose.

This declaration becomes the more necessary, as from the wording of the last part of the Protocol, if it were signed in that form, it might be understood that not only the British cruizers would be obliged to land the slaves in the said British colonies, but that this duty would also fall on the Portuguese cruizers who would be bound to land the slaves taken by them in those colonies, which would not only be against the dispositions of the Treaty, but against the decorous reciprocity which should exist in such stipulations.

For this object then, if agreeable to you, the last paragraph of the protocol might be drawn up in this manner, preserving in the original duplicates the usual alternative :

“ And that any slaves found on board of such vessels by the commanders of Her Britannic Majesty’s cruizers, shall at once be landed, either in one of the British West India possessions or at Sierra Leone; and that any slaves found on board of such vessels by the commanders of her most faithful Majesty’s cruizers, shall at once be landed either in one of the Islands of St. Thomé and Principe, or of Cape Verds, whichever may be deemed by each of the said English or Portuguese commanders nearest or most convenient for landing the slaves he may have found.”

It must be observed that at the end of the 4th page of the project of Protocol, it is said, “ And that these Commissions should judge the causes submitted to them according to the provisions of the aforesaid Treaty, and which are considered as forming an integral part thereof.”

It appears plain that there are here some words left out, as the provisions of the Treaty do not form a part, but the whole of it, and it is the annexes which form part of the Treaty, inasmuch as they are separated from it. It appears then that the sense would be complete, by adding after the words “ Treaty and,” these words “ of its annexes,” making this period as follows, “ and that these Commissions should judge the causes submitted to them according to the provisions of the aforesaid Treaty and of its annexes, which are considered as forming an integral part thereof.”

The Protocol might end in the following manner, with the above-mentioned alternative in the original duplicates :

If these alterations meet your approbation, as I flatter myself they will, I will have no difficulty in coming to an understanding with you on the time it may be convenient that the functions of the Commissioners at the Island of Boa Vista and in Kingston, should cease, the abolition of which is the more reasonable, as it is a fact that during a period of 6 years since the Treaty, they have been completely inactive, not having had a single case to judge.

I renew, &c.

Sir H. Seymour.

No. 201.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received August 3.)

MY LORD,

Turin, July 22, 1848.

IN obedience to your Lordship's instructions, I addressed a note to the Marquis Pareto, copy of which I have the honour herewith to forward to your Lordship, urging the Government of His Sardinian Majesty to declare persons convicted of carrying on a trade in Slaves, to be guilty of piracy.

I have now the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship copy of the reply which I have received from the Marquis Pareto upon this subject, by which you will see that the Sardinian Government decline to accede to the proposal which I had been instructed to make them on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

Turin, May 19, 1848.

The Undersigned, &c. has the honour to communicate herewith to his Excellency the Marquis Pareto, &c. copy of a letter and of its inclosure addressed by Mr. Ward, Secretary to the Board of Admiralty, to the Right Hon. E. J. Stanley, one of Her Britannic Majesty's Under-Secretaries of State for Foreign Affairs, relative to the increased number of vessels sailing under the protection of the Sardinian flag and engaged in the Slave Trade on the west coast of Africa.

In calling the attention of the Marquis Pareto and of the Government of His Sardinian Majesty to this fact, the Undersigned has been directed by Viscount Palmerston, &c. to observe, that in England Slave Trade is treated as piracy, and that the punishment inflicted upon British subjects found to be engaged in that trade is transportation to a penal settlement for life; and the Undersigned has likewise been instructed to represent to the Sardinian Government, that the Government of Her Britannic Majesty are doubtful if the punishment of the galleys imposed upon Sardinian subjects convicted of violating the XIVth Article of the Penal Law of January 18, 1827, is sufficiently severe, unless that punishment be inflicted for life.

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty are convinced that the Cabinet of Turin is conscientiously desirous not only to act in the true spirit of the Treaty of August 8, 1834, but to contribute zealously towards the suppression of a traffic declared by the laws of Sardinia to be illegal, and which is at the same time so revolting to the feelings of humanity. It is, therefore, in furtherance of the objects of that Treaty, and in support of those principles of humanity which the Sardinian Government have always advocated, that the Undersigned, in compliance with the instructions he has received from Viscount Palmerston, has now the honour to suggest, for the consideration of the Government of His Sardinian Majesty, the propriety of making the law of Sardinia in respect to the traffic in slaves equally stringent with the law of England, and of declaring Slave Trade to be piracy.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government have evinced their horror for this trade, and their sincere desire to contribute towards its effectual suppression, by declaring it to be an act of piracy, and applying to its commission the penalty which the law of England awards to such a crime; and the Undersigned cannot doubt that the Government of His Sardinian Majesty will show a similar abhorrence of this revolting traffic, by declaring Slave Trade to be piracy in Sardinia, and by subjecting the perpetrators of such an offence to the punishment which they will so justly deserve and to which the Sardinian Government will condemn them for such a crime.

The Undersigned, &c.

Marquis Pareto.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

Turin, le 16 Juillet, 1848.

A LA réception de la note que Mr. Abercromby, &c. lui a fait l'honneur de lui adresser sous la date du 19 Mai dernier, pour lui exposer l'opportunité d'augmenter les peines portées par le Code Pénal Maritime des États du Roi contre la Traite des Noirs, eu égard au nombre toujours croissant des bâtiments naviguant sous pavillon Sarde qui se livreraient à cet odieux trafic sur les côtes occidentales d'Afrique, le Soussigné, &c. a sans perte de temps porté cette communication à la connaissance du Ministre de la Guerre et de la Marine.

Ce n'est qu'aujourd'hui seulement que le Soussigné reçoit la réponse qu'il attendait à cet égard et dans laquelle il voit avec plaisir que le Commandant-Général intérimaire de la Marine, ainsi que l'Avocat-Général Fiscal, après s'être procuré tous les renseignements nécessaires et avoir mûrement examiné la chose, ont dû reconnaître que non seulement rien ne pouvait faire supposer un accroissement d'activité dans la Traite des Noirs par les bâtiments de commerce Sardes, mais que tout au contraire portait à croire que, depuis la promulgation des lettres patentes du 13 Janvier, 1827, sur cette matière, qui infligent aux coupables la peine de 5 ans de galère, extensible à 15 ans, et une amende de 1000 francs jusqu'à 24,000, un trafic aussi inhumain avait pour ainsi dire entièrement cessé d'être exercé sous le pavillon Sarde. A l'appui de cette assertion, les 2 autorités précitées font remarquer que quatre cas seulement de mise en accusation se sont présentés depuis 1827, pour les délits de cette nature, et que chaque fois on a reconnu que les soupçons n'étaient pas fondés, savoir : le Sansone et la Sommariva, capturés par des croiseurs Anglais, et la Marie Anne et Notre Dame des Grâces, par des croiseurs Français.

Quant au fait du brick la Polacca, cité dans le rapport du Commodore commandant la Penelope, ce ne serait tout au plus qu'un fait isolé et insuffisant à prouver le développement que la marine marchande des Etats du Roi est accusée d'avoir donné depuis quelque temps au commerce des esclaves ; car, comment supposer en effet que si un aussi grand nombre de navires Sardes se livraient, comme on le dit, à ce commerce sur les côtes d'Afrique, tous eussent constamment échappé à la vigilance des croiseurs destinés à surveiller ces parages.

L'empressement que le Gouvernement du Roi a mis à adhérer en 1834 à la Convention stipulée avec l'Angleterre et la France pour réprimer la Traite des Noirs, ne peut laisser aucune espèce de doute sur son intention bien positive de ne rien négliger de ce qui dépend de lui pour empêcher et faire disparaître complètement un trafic aussi odieux et si peu en rapport avec les progrès de la civilisation actuelle et les lois de l'humanité ; aussi le Soussigné a-t-il l'entière confiance que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique se plaira à le reconnaître. Mais, quelque soit le désir du Gouvernement Sarde d'arriver à un pareil résultat, il ne saurait cependant, ainsi que le fait observer M. l'Avocat Général de la Marine, adopter dans ce but les mesures proposées dans la note de Mr. Abercromby, c'est-à-dire, d'assimiler la Traite des Noirs à la piraterie, en appliquant à ce délit les peines portées contre ce dernier crime, qui dans les Etats du Roi est puni de mort. D'abord les faits très rares et même douteux qui se sont présentés du trafic des esclaves depuis 1827, par la marine Sarde prouvent que les peines établies à cette époque contre un semblable commerce sont suffisantes ; il serait par conséquent inutile de les rendre plus sévères. Ensuite l'application des peines exagérées à un délit, déclaré tel par une loi positive et non par la loi naturelle, et qui, il n'y a pas longtemps encore, était non seulement toléré mais favorisé par les Gouvernements, serait repoussée par la conscience publique en Italie, comme en France, où les peines sont moins rigoureuses que dans les pays du Nord. En effet on voit que les lois en France, rendues à diverses époques, toujours plus sévères au sujet de la Traite, n'excèdent cependant pas 20 ans de galères, et se rapprochent ainsi beaucoup de celles adoptées en Piémont.

En faisant cette réponse à la note précitée de Mr. Abercromby, le Soussigné espère qu'elle satisfera pleinement le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique sur les raisons qui ne permettent pas à celui de Sa Majesté de changer sa législation sur le point en question. Dans cette confiance, le Soussigné saisit, &c.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 27th of April last, in which you state that the Captain-General of Cuba had expressed a decided determination to prevent the Slave Trade from being carried on.

No. 214.—Consul-General Crawford to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received August 21.)

Havana, July 22, 1848.

SOME 11 years ago the American ship Jupiter, employed in the service of The United States to convey the Governor and a number of free blacks to Liberia, their free settlement on the coast of Africa, was wrecked, and the crew saved found their way to one of the slave factories at Gallinas.

The master and the crew, with the exception of the steward, a negro, who is a citizen of The United States, a native of Philadelphia, took their passages from the coast on board a French trader; but the steward was induced to remain at the factory, upon promises made to him of a free passage to Havana, and letters which would facilitate his return home from thence.

It appears, however, that very soon afterwards this man, the negro steward, was put on board the slaver Flor de Mar, and on his arrival in Cuba he was sold along with the rest of the unfortunate victims, and has remained in slavery until very recently that his case was made known to the American Government.

General Campbell, The United States Consul, having received orders to obtain the liberation of this man, discovered that he was a slave upon the estate of Don Gaspar Hernandez, near to Matanzas, by whom he was purchased upon the arrival of the Flor de Mar, from the celebrated slaver Don Pedro Martinez, and having applied to the Captain-General, the negro was taken off Hernandez's estate, placed in deposit, and fully identified.

The American Consul, instructed by his Government to claim compensation in money, had the support of the Captain-General in the compromise which he effected with Hernandez and Martinez, ultimately obtaining 150 dollars per annum for all the time the steward was held in slavery, with interest yearly thereon, as it accumulated during the 11 years; and besides, the sum of 450 dollars as damages, and for the expenses of sending the liberated man to The United States in charge of an officer of the Consulate.

As the proceedings in the compromise were wholly extra-judicial, there is no legal evidence whatever in the case. The penal law of Spain was not in existence 11 years ago, so that the parties guilty of buying and selling the negro steward are not punishable; but your Lordship will observe that they have been obliged to pay a considerable sum in damages and compensation, to obtain which, General Campbell informs me he had the countenance and support of the Captain-General, although the compromise was not formally effected before his Excellency.

*No. 219.—Viscount Palmerston to Consul-General Crawford.

SIR,

Foreign Office, September 18, 1848.

I HAVE to desire that you will transmit to me, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a list of all British subjects within the district of your Consulate, who are owners of slaves, distinguishing those who have domestic slaves and those who have slaves employed in agriculture or in mining.

I am, &c.

J. T. Crawford, Esq.

PALMERSTON.

No. 220.—Viscount Palmerston to Consul-General Crawford.

SIR,

Foreign Office, September 25, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 5th ultimo, stating that Juan Manuel Besamilla, one of the mates of the slave-vessel Columbia, which landed 150 slaves at Cabañas in the month of July last, had given important information to the authorities of Cuba relative to that vessel, as well as to the Toro, another slave-vessel shortly expected at Cabañas, and to a brigantine which was being equipped for Slave Trade at the same place. You recommend that the pardon of Besamilla should be solicited from the Queen of Spain, as the Captain-General has not power to grant it; and you suggest the expediency of authority being given to the Captain-General to hold out hopes of pardon to approvers who may denounce their slave-trading accomplices.

I conceive that there can be little doubt that the approver Besamilla will be pardoned by the Queen of Spain, if recommended for grace by the Captain-General; or that the discretionary authority which you recommend that the Captain-General should be invested with, would be granted to him if he should represent the expediency of the measure; and I have accordingly to instruct you to make a suggestion accordingly to his Excellency.

I am, &c.

J. T. Crawford, Esq.

SIR,

Foreign Office, October 14, 1848.

I HEREWITH transmit to you a copy of a despatch and of its inclosure which I have received from Her Majesty's Commissary Judge at the Havana, on the subject of a negress who had presented herself to him, stating that she was held as a slave, although belonging to the class of emancipados.

You will perceive from this despatch, that Mr. Kennedy, feeling satisfied that she was an emancipada, and had come over in the slaver Ricomar, condemned at the Havana in March 1836, made a representation of her case to the Captain-General.

The Captain-General having stated in reply to that representation, that there had been a full investigation into the case of the said negress, and that it had been indisputably proved that she was not an emancipada, and did not belong to the slaver Ricomar, as stated by Mr. Kennedy, I have to instruct you to request the Captain-General to give you a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of the investigation by which this result was arrived at. I am, &c.

SIR,

Foreign Office, October 15, 1848.

I HEREWITH transmit to you a copy of a despatch which I have received from Her Majesty's Commissary Judge at the Havana, inclosing a copy of a communication which he had addressed to the Captain-General of Cuba, respecting an emancipado named Julian Carabali, whose term of service had recently expired, and who had been delivered up at the Government-House and subsequently re-assigned for a further term of servitude. I transmit also a copy of the reply made by direction of the Captain-General to that communication, in which he contents himself with referring to the letter addressed to Mr. Kennedy on the 13th of August, a copy of which is inclosed in my despatch to you of this day's date, and which denies the truth of a representation of the same nature made to the Captain-General by Mr. Kennedy, relative to an emancipada from the slaver Ricomar.

I have to instruct you to state to the Captain-General, that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that this answer is not satisfactory; and that if the negro in question really is an emancipado, as appears to be the case, he ought to be given up according to the arrangement made in regard to persons of that class.

No. 227.—Consul-General Crawford to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received October 26.)

MY LORD,

Havana, September 16, 1848.

I HAVE been endeavouring, but I regret to say without success, to obtain information as to the state of the proceedings at the Royal Audiencia, in the affair of the slaver at Cabañas. As yet the sentence has not been promulgated.

I have however learnt from an authentic source, that upon the declaration of the approver, Juan Manuel de Besamillas, whose case I did myself the honour of bringing under your Lordship's notice in my despatch of the 5th ultimo, the mate proper of the slaver (said Besamillas having been supernumerary) was arrested, and is prisoner in the public gaol.

Besamillas and the mate were conducted, about the 25th ultimo, to Cabañas, where their declarations were revised; and the slaver was raised and kept afloat for some 10 days, after which she was sunk by the authorities at another part of the bay in deep water; but whether she was rendered useless previous to her being so sunk, Besamillas, from whom I had the information, does not know. Juan Pigat, the master, has escaped. He embarked from Regla on board the Crescent City, American steamer, and departed for New York at the same time with M. Zulueta, 18th ultimo, as I have done myself the honour of reporting to your Lordship in my despatch of the 9th instant; and so I am led to infer that he is under that protection.

Whether the felucca was rendered useless by the authorities or not, I consider that it has been with a view to avoid the sensation which would have been caused had she been brought here a prize, that whatever has been done to the Columbia was executed at such an out of the way place as Cabañas, and there surely is great room for complaint against this act of the Audiencia since the exhibition of a miserable little vessel of only 29 tons in this harbour could hardly have failed to produce a great moral effect, when it became known to the public that she had been confiscated for slave-trading, and that, besides her own crew engaged in this infamous traffic, no less than 155 miserable human beings had been crammed into such a cock-boat, and had endured the horrors of the middle passage for upwards of 40 days.

The poor man Besamillas is, I understand, amongst the commonest felon convicts in what is called the "Galera" at the prison, whilst the other prisoner, the mate of the slaver, is better treated, and is in what is called the "Sala libre."

I hope that your Lordship will not think it improper that I should place the approver under your Lordship's consideration, in the belief that his pardon would have a most beneficial effect, and induce others to come forward and denounce acts of Slave Trade, from doing which they are deterred by the fear of punishment ; as there is no clause in the Penal Law of Spain holding out encouragement to such as, from any cause whatsoever, might denounce their accomplices.

I have, &c.

No. 230.—Consul-General Crawford to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received December 22.)

MY LORD,

Havana, November 26, 1848.

I RESPECTFULLY beg your Lordship's reference to the correspondence relative to the man Don Juan Manuel Besamillas, who was on board the slaver Columbia, which landed 150 Bozal negroes at Cabañas in July last, and in obedience to the instruction which I had the honour of receiving from your Lordship, the receipt of which I acknowledged in my despatch dated the 2nd instant, I have now the honour of laying before your Lordship copy of a correspondence which I have had with his Excellency the Captain-General, who desired that I would communicate to him your Lordship's instructions in writing ; and your Lordship will doubtless observe the objections which have been raised by his Excellency to solicit grace for the prisoner Besamillas, as well as the difficulty he expresses as to soliciting or moving the Spanish Government for a special extension of his prerogative, or an alteration of the Penal Law, giving power to pardon and to hold out the hope of pardon to approvers in cases of the transgression of that law, whose denuncements of their accomplices might lead to their detection and punishment.

I considered it my duty to reply to his Excellency with some details of Don Juan Manuel Besamillas's case, and in order to place in its proper light the effect of the addition suggested to be made to the Penal Law of the 4th March, 1845, conferring power for his Excellency to pardon approvers whose denuncements of their accomplices in crime should lead to their apprehension and conviction, which appeared to have been imperfectly understood by him.

Not having been favoured with an answer to my last communication, I this morning waited upon his Excellency and ascertained from him verbally, that the matter will be transmitted to Madrid, in common with the other affairs of this Government, at the same time giving me to understand that he did not feel himself warranted specially to adopt the initiative as to the points I had suggested to his Excellency under your Lordship's instruction, for the reasons which he had given in his note of the 13th instant.

Besamillas is still in prison, and no sentence has as yet been pronounced in the trial by the Royal Audiencia.

I consider that, defective as the Penal Law most certainly is, its having been brought into operation by the denouncement of his accomplices made by Besamillas has had a most salutary effect, and will deter many from engaging in the Slave Trade for the future; and how much more would the danger of denouncement weigh with those engaged in that nefarious traffic, were informers sure of pardon, whose evidence led to the conviction and punishment of their accomplices, and if that inducement was held out to approvers by announcement of the Spanish Government conferring special authority to that effect upon the Governors, Captains-General of this island and of Puerto Rico.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

JOS. T. CRAWFORD.

(Inclosure.)—Consul-General Crawford to the Captain-General.

Havana, November 10, 1848.

HAVING reported to Her Majesty's Government the arrival of the slave-vessel Columbia, which landed a cargo of negroes from Africa in July last, at Cabañas, and the capture of 130 of those unfortunate creatures by the Lieutenant-Governor of Mariel; I took occasion to notice to my Government the circumstance of Don Juan Manuel Besamillas having presented himself to your Excellency denouncing the master and crew of the said slaver, stating at the same time that the whole case had been delivered over by your Excellency to the Royal Audiencia Pretorial, as the tribunal designated by the Penal Law passed at Madrid the 4th day of March, 1845, competent to take cognizance of such offences.

At the time the said Besamillas delivered himself up, your Excellency informed me that under the law just referred to, there is no power, discretionary or otherwise, reserved to your Excellency by which pardon could be granted to persons who, like him, were induced to become approvers, and so lead to the apprehension and punishment of their accomplices in slave-trading.

This I considered it my duty also to represent and to state, that the said Don Juan Manuel Besamillas had consequently been sent to prison, that he was taking his trial before the Royal Audiencia where he would most probably be convicted upon his own confession and be sentenced to the extreme penalty of the law, without any power of commuting or remitting the punishment to which he must necessarily be condemned. And I pointed out to Her Majesty's Government how much good would be likely to result from an alteration of the Penal Law in question, by a clause giving power to your Excellency to pardon in such cases as that of Besamillas, or that your Excellency's prerogative should be extended in a special manner, so that pardon should be granted, and the hope of pardon should be held out to those who, concerned themselves in slave-trading, should come forward and denounce to your Excellency their guilty accomplices so as to lead to their apprehension and punishment.

I have now the honour of acquainting your Excellency that I am instructed by Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Viscount Palmerston, to the effect that his Lordship conceives that there can be little doubt that the approver Don Juan Manuel Besamillas will be pardoned by the Queen of Spain, if recommended for grace by your Excellency; and also, that the discretionary authority which your Excellency should be invested with, would be granted, should your Excellency be pleased to represent the expediency of such a measure.

In obedience to these instructions, I beg leave to solicit your Excellency's recommendation of the said Don Juan Besamillas for grace to Her Majesty the Queen of Spain, and that your Excellency would be pleased also to represent the expediency of your Excellency being invested with discretionary power to pardon, and to hold out hopes of pardon in future to those who may turn approvers, as an inducement for their denouncing to your Excellency their guilty accomplices in slave-trading.

No. 231.—Consul-General Crawford to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received January 26, 1849.)

MY LORD,

Havana, December 11, 1848.

IN obedience to the instructions conveyed in your Lordship's despatch of the 14th of October, the receipt of which and of its inclosures I have now the honour to acknowledge, I addressed the Captain-General, requesting his Excellency to furnish me with a copy of the minutes of the proceedings upon the case of the negress alluded to in Mr. Kennedy's letter of the 20th of July, which formed inclosure No. 1 in Her Majesty's Commissary Judge's despatch to your Lordship of the 14th of August last.

I beg leave to lay before your Lordship a copy of the correspondence, according to which it appears that the result of the investigation which took place was against the pretention of the negress in question to her free papers. On the contrary, it goes to show that she was not on board the Ricomar, and not even belonging to the class of emancipados. She was held to be a slave in all the papers of sale corresponding to the various owners through whose hands she had passed in that condition, but that nevertheless she was referred to the proper officer, the Procurador-General or Syndic, whose duty it is to prefer the claims of slaves and all persons who allege claims to freedom, in case she persisted in asserting that she was an emancipada and as such entitled to her free papers.

I have communicated this result to Her Majesty's Commissioner, Mr. Kennedy.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

Havana, December 5, 1848.

HER Majesty's Government having under consideration the correspondence with your Excellency relative to a negress of the class of emancipados, which was transmitted by Her Majesty's Judge, Mr. Kennedy, to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Viscount Palmerston has instructed me to request that your Excellency will be pleased to furnish me with a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of the investigation of this case, which is referred to in your Excellency's letter to Mr. Kennedy of the 13th of August last.

I have, &c.

(Inclosure 2.)—The Captain-General to Consul-General Crawford.

(Translation.)

Havana, December 9, 1848.

OWING to the circumstance of there not being any Representative of Her Britannic Majesty at present in Madrid, I could have no objection to send to your Honour a copy of the proceedings which, according to your communication of the 5th instant, the Minister for Foreign Affairs has instructed you to ask for if the investigation had been in writing, which I ordered to be gone into in consequence of the letter of the British Commissary Judge of the 20th of July, relative to a negress which he stated was of the class of emancipados and was held as a slave; but for the same reason I shall state to your Honour that the answer which was given by my order to the said Commissary Judge was founded upon the following data proved in this Government office:—1st. None of the negresses brought by the brig Ricomar obtained the name of Teresa. 2nd. She which appears with the African name of Abale, which is, as she says, she was called in her own country, is the individual called Rufina, at this day existing in this capital. 3rd. All the free papers ("cartas de libertad") having been looked over, as well of those who have died as of those who are alive, and having examined the negress Teresa, her corporeal marks do not agree with those which are stamped in the letters of freedom. 4th. None of the negresses of the brig Ricomar died in the barracoon before or after their filiation, consequently it is not possible either to suppose that this one died at that time. 5th. It appears from the search which was instituted in the protocols of the public scriveners, that the negress Teresa has had many owners, and has always been sold and bought as that slave. 6th. It is deduced from the inquiries made, that the negress was in an understanding with other negresses belonging to the said vessel, so that they should declare as she did, but separately examined there was discrepancy, and the confabulation was noticed.

With these proceedings the referred-to writing of Mr. Kennedy was answered, and the negress was informed that if she insisted in that she was not really a slave she should apply before the Syndic Procurador-General to state and make valid her rights, since he is (as your Honour must be aware) the natural and legal defender of the rights of slaves according to the protecting laws which rule slavery within the Spanish possessions. His duties constitute an honourable charge always performed with the greatest zeal, and whose representations before all the tribunals are privileged and gratuitously attended to.

God preserve, &c.

No. 232.—Consul-General Crawford to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received January 26, 1849.)

MY LORD,

Havana, December 15, 1848.

I HAVE the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 15th of October, instructing me to state to the Captain-General that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the answer which was given to Mr. Kennedy, Her Majesty's Commissary Judge, upon his representation of the case of the emancipado Julian Carabali is not satisfactory, and that if the negro in question really is an emancipado, as appears to be the case, he ought to be given up, according to the arrangement made in regard to persons of that class.

In obedience thereto, I wrote to the Captain-General on the 6th instant, and on the 11th I received an answer from his Excellency evading the question, and which I did not consider satisfactory by any means.

I therefore again addressed him, and I took occasion to embody in my letter your Lordship's full and conclusive instruction upon the subject of the emancipados and the right of Her Majesty's Government to interfere respecting them, and to obtain their freedom as founded upon Treaties and subsequent arrangements.

I have now the honour of laying this correspondence before your Lordship, and I would very respectfully submit to your Lordship's notice the Colonel Secretary's reply to my second letter, wherein he says, by direction of his Excellency the Governor Captain-General, that his Excellency would be excused the annoyance of further writings upon this subject, and distinctly states that my efforts are useless in a matter the alteration of which must emanate from the Court.

I should suppose that this reply, which is not couched in very courteous terms, is, however, quite conclusive as to this Government's acting under the instructions from Spain, denying our right of interference on behalf of that unfortunate class the emancipados whose freedom is to be at the arbitrary will of these authorities.

The Captain-General states, that the rule is the VIIth Article of the Regulations for the Mixed Commissions annexed to the Treaty of 1817, and he makes no allusion to subsequent arrangements, according to which all the emancipados were to be freed on or before the 1st of January, 1846, although the circumstances under which Her Majesty's Government were induced to consent to that arrangement are brought under his Excellency's notice in my letter, so that if we are to take his statement as being correct, it seems that no instructions were given by the Spanish Government to the Captain-General of Cuba for the fulfilment of the conditions of the arrangement entered into at the suggestion of General Don Geronimo Valdes for the freedom of all the emancipados who continue to suffer the miseries of slavery, from which they must be rescued by our interference.

No. 233.—Consul-General Crawford to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received January 26, 1849.)

MY LORD,

Havana, December 22, 1848.

I HAVE the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 13th of October and its inclosures.

I have endeavoured by every means possible to ascertain what has been done with the negroes which were landed at Cabañas from the slaver Columbia, and seized by the Lieutenant-Governor of Mariel; I have also endeavoured to learn facts which might confirm Mr. Kennedy's information, stated to your Lordship in his letter of the 3rd of August last; but I have not been able to discover anything which could be construed to authenticate the rumour upon which Her Majesty's Commissioner founded his report relative to the ownership of that expedition.

Certain it is that the emancipados in question were assigned to M. Parejo and to M. Julian Zulueta; but I cannot state either of those parties to have been concerned in the slave expedition out of which these Bozales were captured; so that I have no case upon which to found the representation which I should otherwise have addressed to the Captain-General, in obedience to your Lordship's instruction.

As regards the prosecution of those who were the owners of the Columbia and her cargo, I have already reported to your Lordship the slow progress made by the Royal Audiencia, and I have now the honour to report that the matter appears to be allowed to lie over.

I have never been able to learn that the authorities, who most certainly connived at the landing of the cargo of the Columbia at Cabañas, have been punished. No sentence has as yet been promulgated by the tribunal. The Judge Carbonell, to whom it fell in turn at the Audiencia, has lately become incapacitated, from an attack of apoplexy or paralysis; and I have looked into the Penal Law, but cannot find a clause which is applicable to the prisoners. The 1st Article, and also the IInd, has reference to the crews, &c. of vessels on board of which there were negroes from Africa at the time of capture; and the IIIrd and IVth applying to the punishment of those found on board of vessels destined to be employed in Slave Trade, and whether captured at sea, or already at anchor, or steering for the coast of Africa. In none of those cases do I find Don Juan Manuel Besamillas, who gave himself up, nor the chief mate of the Columbia (who was arrested upon the former's denouncement), both of whom are still in confinement; so that my impression is, that they will by and by be put at liberty, their imprisonment during a protracted trial being their only punishment; so defective is the Penal Law in its construction, and, as a penal enactment, it has to be interpreted strictly.

(Received March 7, 1849.)

MY LORD,

Havana, December 31, 1848.

IN obedience to the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch dated the 18th of September last, I have now the honour of inclosing herewith a list of the British subjects who are owners of slaves, stating in what way their slaves are employed.

But I think it necessary to acquaint your Lordship that there may be others elsewhere in the island who are slave-owners, not within my knowledge, and also that several British subjects who have married foreigners hold slaves in their wives' names, as well as that some British subjects are owners of slaves jointly with Spaniards and other foreigners, their partners. So also it may be that some British subjects in reality are the owners of slaves standing in the names of Spaniards and others who have lent themselves to figure as the owners.

Your Lordship will readily perceive that it would be very difficult to fix the ownership of slaves upon parties whose minds have been made up to evade the provisions of the recent Act of Parliament. If referred to themselves, they could hardly be expected to tell the truth.

Nor has it been possible for me to get lists from the remote places, having no Consular Agents at any of the outports; and there are many British subjects on the island that I have never heard of.

I have, &c.

(Inclosure.)—List of British subjects resident at Havana and elsewhere, in the Island of Cuba, who are slave-owners, and stating how they are employed, in agriculture or otherwise.

HAVANA.—Attridge and Orr, as cabinet-makers; Samuel Lindsay, carpenters; David Warren, artisans; Robert Morrison, house servants; John Macnab, iron and brass-founders; Hadwen McGregor and Co., house servants; John Bevington, house servants; Charles D. Tolmé, house servants; Henry Datton, house servants; William Stewart, house servants, hired out; Edward Finlay, house servants, hired out; heirs of S. Tennant, house servants, hired out; James Lawton, hired out, and as servants and labourers; William Jowitt, carpenters; Alexander Mein, house servant; Urtelegui Robertson and Co., house servant.

Note.—There may be others I do not know of; and some of these above mentioned hold the slaves in partnership with Spanish partners, others in their wives' names, who are Spaniards or other foreigners.

MATANZAS.—Willam Sims, masons and house servant; James Scott, masons and house servant; Hugh Carrigan, carpenters and house servant; Henry Elkins, moulders and house servant; James Coulson, moulders and house servant; William Adams, sugar refiners, house servant; Martin Burns, labourers, house servant.

CARDENAS.—Thomas Lovat, house servants; William Kent, masons; Robert Kent, masons; Thomas Kent, masons; Thomas Owens, agriculture; Theodore Phinney, agriculture; Mary Ann Powers, agriculture; William Fowler, masons; Thomas Seller, house servants.

From other places in the island I have no returns; but there are doubtless some British subjects slave-owners at all places of note. Near Sibara are Wood, Paterson, and Chapman, who are all slave-owners.

MY LORD,

Havana, December 31, 1848.

I HAVE had the honour of bringing the case of the negro boy Carlos, under the notice of your Lordship upon various occasions, and in my despatch of the 3rd of September last year I recapitulated to your Lordship the progress which I had been able to make in tracing the lad's parents; I respectfully beg leave to refer to that communication.

Since the date above mentioned, indeed ever since the year 1843, I have been in correspondence with the Governors of Jamaica, under whose directions every search has been made to discover Carlos's mother; at last it was hoped that a certain Priscilla Brownrigg might be the boy's parent, she having lost a child, stolen from her about the same time that Charles states he was kidnapped.

Priscilla herself was of the opinion that he might turn out to be her long lost son who was taken away from Montego Bay, and the necessary passport having been obtained, she was sent here by Sir Charles Grey in the packet of this month; but I regret to state to your Lordship, that upon their being brought before the Judge, Priscilla at once said that Carlos was not her son, and he as immediately declared that Priscilla was not his mother.

I am, therefore, very apprehensive that our endeavours have been fruitless, and that for want of identifying his person, we cannot obtain the poor fellow's freedom, to which I am quite satisfied he is fully entitled, by his looks, his language, and his demeanour. Priscilla is suffering from the great disappointment she has met with, as she came over fully expecting to find her lost child. She will return to Jamaica by the next packet.

CONSULAR.

No. 243.—Consul Forbes to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Nov. 8.)
 MY LORD, Santiago de Cuba, October 1, 1848.

REFERRING to my despatch which I had the honour of addressing to your Lordship under date the 4th ultimo, I now beg leave to acquaint you that since then I have had 2 interviews with his Excellency the Governor of this place respecting the judicial inquiry now pending relative to the restoration to freedom of the negress Betsy and her 2 sons, when I took an opportunity of expressing my disappointment at the delay which had occurred in the decision of this case, and that I was at a loss to understand what his Excellency could require of the Act 46 George III, cap. 52, in order to decide the matter of their freedom, since their manumission was before him, and they had been identified by Mademoiselle Lefevre.

I likewise called his Excellency's attention to the important fact that this is not a common-law question, admitting of litigation with the parties pretending to the ownership of these much-injured subjects of Her Majesty, but one of equity, and one which I earnestly submitted his Excellency was called upon to decide without further delay, in order to prevent greater suffering and inconvenience to the poor woman and her sons.

His Excellency informed me that the Act of George III cited by me, in virtue of which no slave could leave the island of Jamaica at the epoch when Isabel and her sons took their departure from thence, without becoming forfeited to the British Crown, is a document the production of which is absolutely necessary for the solution of this affair, inasmuch as the record of manumission presented by me cannot favour Isabel in the meantime, because she is not identified as being the same person on whom this act of grace was conferred. It only designates one Frances Nelson of Jamaica, through whose instrumentality her freedom was obtained by Mr. George Mackenzie, for which individual he had caused search to be made, but that he could not be discovered, nor could any person be found who could give any information of him.

Of the fact of Isabel and her sons being the identical individuals who accompanied the family of Lefevre from Jamaica to this place he admits that there is no question of doubt, but this does not prove that she is the person to whom the letter of manumission refers; much less when Rosa Lefevre, the only survivor of the said family, has manifested in her declaration that she, as well as her parents, always held Isabel and her sons as slaves of Christian Claver; and besides, while they were living with her parents, previous to the sale of them, effected by Miguel Linares, Isabel had made no reclamation for her liberty, and she had only heard her say that she was free.

I may state, for your Lordship's information, that his Excellency the Governor has assured me that on the production of the aforesaid Act he will forthwith place Betsy or Isabel, and her sons, at my disposal.

I have the honour of transmitting to your Lordship, herewith inclosed, a copy and translation of a despatch addressed to me by his Excellency the Governor relative to this case, under date the 25th, and a copy of my reply, dated the 27th ultimo.

SIR,

Foreign Office, November 23, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatches of the 17th of June, the 4th of September, and of the 1st ultimo, on the subject of the negress Betsy, a native of Jamaica, held in slavery at Santiago de Cuba, and her 2 sons.

With reference to the assurance given to you by Governor MacCrohon, that these people will be placed at your disposal upon the production of an authenticated copy of the Act 46 George III, cap. 52, and in case you should not have succeeded in obtaining such document from the Governor of Jamaica, I herewith transmit 2 copies of that Act.

These copies were printed at the time of the passing of the Act by the King's printer, and in a British Court of Justice would be admitted as authenticated copies.

No. 245.—Consul Forbes to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Dec. 4.)

MY LORD,

Santiago de Cuba, November 4, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, for your Lordship's information, copies of a correspondence which has taken place between his Excellency the Governor of this place and me, relative to the judicial inquiry instituted at my instance in his Excellency's tribunal for the liberation of the negress Betsy and her 2 sons.

I think it is probable that the dictamen of the assessor in this case is drawn, raising difficulties as to the plea of the woman and her offspring having been manumitted by Mr. George Mackenzie, and criminally sold and held in slavery in this place, purposely to close the door to after claims, which if their freedom is obtained in virtue of provisions of the Act of Parliament 5 George IV, cap. 113, under the idea that it would serve the purpose of the different parties against whom recourse would be had for indemnity.

There may be great difficulty in identifying the negress Betsy and her sons; but as it is desirable to obtain their freedom without further delay, and as the production of the Act of Parliament referred to is now the condition, I have obtained an authentic copy thereof from his Excellency the Governor of Jamaica, and have transmitted the same to the Governor of this place, in conformity with the decree of his tribunal; craving that Betsy and her sons might forthwith be placed at my disposal in conformity with the provisions thereof.

Their freedom once obtained, the circumstances of their manumission in Jamaica can be more leisurely gone into, and the parties who are responsible, in the event of Betsy being legally identified as the same negress emancipated by Mr. George Mackenzie, will not, I apprehend, be released of their liability by the woman's taking advantage of the Act referred to, as the most expeditious means of accomplishing the liberation of herself and children.

No. 247.—Consul Forbes to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. March 14.)

MY LORD,

Santiago de Cuba, February 2, 1849.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Lordship's despatch dated the 23rd of November last, acknowledging the receipt of my despatches on the subject of the negress Betsy, a native of Jamaica, held in slavery in this place, and her 2 sons, and transmitting to me 2 copies of the Act 46 Geo. III, cap. 52, the production of an authenticated copy of which being the condition stipulated by Governor MacCrohon for placing these people at my disposal.

One of these copies I have transmitted to Consul-General Crawford, for the use of his office, he having requested of me a manuscript copy thereof, certified in due form by myself and the Governor of this place, and the other copy I have deposited in the archives of this Consulate.

I now have the honour of transmitting to your Lordship, herewith enclosed, a copy and translation of a despatch received by me from his Excellency Governor MacCrohon, dated the 26th ultimo, relative to Betsy's case, as well as a copy of my reply, dated the 1st instant.

It may not prove superfluous to acquaint your Lordship that I am informed by the Fiscal in this case, that the "espediente" or process has been transmitted back by the superior tribunal to the court below, with instructions to follow up the "sumaria" or proceedings instituted against the parties criminally implicated in the sale of Betsy and her sons; from which it may be inferred that this superior tribunal has taken a different view of the case from that entertained by the inferior court, inasmuch as it would appear that that tribunal seems to hold that Betsy and her sons should be restored to freedom, in virtue of the record of their manumission, and not be given up as forfeited to the British Crown under the provisions of the Act 46 Geo. III, cap. 52. This opinion will, I apprehend, tend so far to explain the purport of his Excellency's present despatch.

In conclusion I may inform your Lordship that the negro Jozé is now working as a carpenter on his own account, and is earning from 25 to 30 dollars monthly; Louis is following up his trade as a mason; and Betsy, the mother, I presume keeps house for them.

I have, &c.

SPAIN (PORTO RICO).

CONSULAR.

No. 248.—Consul Lindegren to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 24.)
 MY LORD, San Juan, Porto Rico, March 22, 1848.

SINCE I had the honour of addressing your Lordship on the 18th ultimo, I have received a letter from Vice Admiral Sir Francis Austen, in answer to my communication to him relative to the recent movements in the Slave Trade, in which he tells me that he has placed my letter in the hands of the senior naval officer at Barbadoes, with instructions to him to cruize off this island when his other numerous duties will allow of it, and that he hoped soon to be able to appropriate a vessel entirely for that service.

No vessel with slaves has as yet arrived here, and the owner of one which sailed some months ago for the coast of Africa is under much anxiety from her not being returned; so very likely she has been captured.

I am informed that the inhabitants of Curaçoa have petitioned the King of Holland to allow the exportation of slaves without the present restrictions, it not being permitted at present to send them out of the island, unless with the consent of the slaves themselves, as they have more than they want, and the prices being low, they expect by exporting them to sell them to much more advantage. It is probable that the King of Holland may not give his consent to it; but I take the liberty of mentioning it to your Lordship, as I have every reason to believe my information to be correct, and if it was allowed, they would without doubt depend upon selling a great many to the planters of this island.

A person has just been shipping about 80 slaves from hence for the Havana, in a vessel called the Paquete de Puerto Rico, for which he has obtained a licence from the Government here. A few of them were part of those brought from Curaçoa which had not been sold, and the rest belonged to this island. As, however, they are removed from one Spanish colony to another, I did not consider that it was a case in which I could interfere.

I have. &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

No. 256.—Consul Lindegren to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 8, 1849.)

MY LORD,

San Juan, Porto Rico, December 4, 1848.

I HAD the honour on the 30th of October last to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch dated the 18th of September, desiring me to send your Lordship a list of all British subjects within the district of this Consulate, who are holders of slaves, distinguishing those who have domestic slaves and those who are employed in agriculture or mining; and I now beg leave to inclose the required list, made out agreeably to your Lordship's directions; but as there are a few mechanics, such as coopers, among the slaves held by British subjects, I have included the owners of them with those holding domestic slaves, and nearly all those who have slaves employed in agriculture have also domestic slaves. There are several British subjects over the large extent of this island who are managers or overseers of estates or mechanics, but I have no means of ascertaining their number or their names, except where there are British Vice-Consuls, or from chance communication with them, and I do not believe that any of them are owners of slaves except those whose names are inserted in the accompanying list, and of these there are not more than 3 or 4 who have any number of slaves.

There are several persons here with English names and speaking English perfectly, who are natives of the Danish Island of St. Croix, so that it is difficult to distinguish them from British subjects, but they are principally managers or overseers of estates.

If I should be able to ascertain the names of any other British subjects holding slaves in this island, I shall not fail to communicate them to your Lordship, and I beg to add that they are not working any mines at present, and therefore no slaves are employed in them.

I have, &c.

TRIPOLI.

No. 258.—Consul-General Crowe to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. April 8.)

MY LORD,

Tripoli, February 28, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that, according to a statement received from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Mourzouk, the number of slaves arrived there from Soudan and Bornou during the last year was 1281, two-thirds of whom were females. About 160 men had died on the way, the small-pox having broken out among them soon after they had left Bornou.

From Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Bengazi I learn that during the same period about 1,300 slaves, the greater part of whom were young girls, had been brought there from Waday. Many perished on the road, exhausted by the fatigue and suffering of so long a journey.

The whole number shipped at this port and Bengazi for the Levant within the year has been nearly 2,000. I have, &c.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Lordship's despatch of the 31st December last, relative to the 11 negresses liberated by the Ionian Government, who returned here some months since.

In obedience to the instructions therein contained, I shall continue to protect them against any attempt to reclaim them as slaves, but shall give them to understand that they must maintain themselves by their own exertions, and must not look to the British Government for support.

No. 262.—Consul-General Crowe to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. May 1.)

MY LORD,

Tripoli, March 30, 1848.

AMONGST the deplorable results of the ill-fated expedition up the Niger in 1841, I fear must now be reckoned one that was least of all apprehended. The avowed object of that expedition, as I have understood, was to proceed upwards as far as Rabbah, and to induce those chiefs of Central Africa from whose dominions the Slave Trade is principally supplied with its victims, to consent to the abandonment and absolute prohibition of the inhuman commerce.

Whatever readiness these chiefs may have professed to enter into the engagements proposed to them, it is certain they never observed them. The supply of human victims from their States has suffered neither interruption nor diminution. And now it will be seen by the statements contained in Vice-Consul Gagliuffi's letter of the 22nd February last, a copy and translation of which are inclosed, that the practicability of ascending the Niger in vessels of considerable burthen, having been demonstrated both by the Government Expedition of 1841, and the previous mercantile adventure of 1836, daring speculations have hastened to take advantage of the knowledge thus acquired, and have sent vessels to Rabbah for the purpose of bringing the slaves purchased there down the river. This event has tripled the ordinary price of the slave, having raised it from 20,000 cowries (10 dollars), to 60,000, or 30 dollars, and will proportionately stimulate and give increased activity to the detested traffic.

Rabbah, which it was hoped might be made the centre of African civilization, from whence the light of morality and religion would be diffused throughout this benighted continent, is plunged deeper in guilt, and is becoming the principal mart of slavery; so that the expedition which terminated so fatally may be said to have served as pilot and beacon to the slave-ships, which being manned with crews inured to the climate, and sailing at the healthy season, will, in all probability, perform their voyages with safety and success.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

G. W. CROWE.

SIR, (Translation.) Mourzouk, February 22, 1848.

A DEALER lately arrived from Soudan, informs me, that having gone in the beginning of last summer to a town of Jacoba, towards the south, he there heard that at Rabbah there were 2 vessels shipping slaves, and that in consequence the price had risen up to 60,000 cowries each. Adult males were alone in request; neither boys nor females were received. My informant stated, that hitherto the ordinary price of such slaves was under 20,000 cowries each.

Having asked him whether the persons who bought these slaves were whites, he replied, that according to the description given to him, they were of brown complexion; and pointing out a person who was present as being of the colour he meant, I conclude they are mulattoes.

Such is the information which I have been able to collect from him.

G. W. Crowe, Esq.

G. B. GAGLIUFFI.

No. 266.—Consul-General Crowe to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. Nov. 24.)

MY LORD, Tripoli, October 23, 1848.

It is my painful duty to lay before your Lordship copies of a correspondence and of an inquiry relative to the embarkation of some slaves at Bengazi, in which it appears that a British subject was implicated.

Some time ago Mr. Nani and his brother, Maltese merchants residing at Bengazi, purchased a schooner called Tre Fratelli. Of this vessel they are still the reputed owners, and have the entire direction and management. It sails under the Ottoman flag, and is considered both here and at Bengazi, as Nani's schooner, by which name it is commonly called.

The Acting Vice-Consul, Dr. Casolani, in a despatch of which I inclose a copy, states, that it having been reported to him that some slaves had been shipped on board this vessel, he addressed a note to Messrs. Nani, demanding that they should be immediately disembarked.

Upon the receipt of this order, it appears that Mr. Alexander Nani called upon the Acting Vice-Consul, and admitted that some slaves had been shipped on board the Tre Fratelli, mentioning the freight agreed upon; admitting also that he and his brother were the consignees of the vessel, but denying that they were the owners.

Dr. Casolani represented to him that even if he could prove that he was not owner of the vessel, still a grave responsibility attached to him, as being the consignee, and as having procured these slaves as part of the cargo, and deriving profit from the freight.

Mr. Nani asked time to reflect and consult his friends, and returning an hour afterwards, declared he would have the slaves landed immediately.

Soon after this he called again upon Dr. Casolani, and stated that the disembarkation had been effected; but upon being told that this could not be true, as the dragoman of the Consulate had been stationed on the Mole for the express purpose of seeing that the slaves were landed, with orders to report the fact immediately. Mr. Nani then said that they had been transshipped on board an Ottoman bombard at anchor in the harbour.

This statement was also disproved by the testimony of 3 persons whom Dr. Casolani had ordered to watch the movements of the vessel, as she left the port; and yet, in reply to Dr. Casolani's note, Mr. Nani affirms that he had had the slaves disembarked.

Dr. Casolani intimated to him in answer, that he should not consider the slaves as having been disembarked from the Tre Fratelli, unless the dragoman of the Consulate saw them landed on the Mole.

Of this intimation Mr. Nani took no notice; and being thereupon summoned before the Acting Vice-Consul, he declared that he was no longer consignee of the vessel, and that for further information respecting the slaves, Dr. Casolani might address himself to the Governor, or to the owners of the slaves.

Upon the receipt of this report I immediately sent instructions to Colonel Herman, then on his way to Bengazi, to institute a strict inquiry into the subject, and to take the evidence of all such persons as could furnish information relating to the case.

I have the honour to transmit herewith a copy of his despatch, and of the proceedings of the court of inquiry annexed, which appear to establish clearly the fact of the shipment of the slaves on board the Tre Fratelli, and of their having left the port in that vessel.

Mr. Nani's own admission shows that he was cognizant of the fact of shipment, that at the time he had the direction of the vessel and the power to order the disembarkation. Even if it had been true that he had ordered their transshipment on board another vessel, where they were detained, he would be equally guilty of a violation of the statute.

It can scarcely be presumed that he was ignorant of the law upon the subject, or of the incessant and anxious endeavours of Her Majesty's Government to suppress this odious traffic, since his brother, with whom he had resided for about 7 years, was always appointed by Mr. Wood to act for him as Vice-Consul during his frequent absences from Bengasi.

This being a case of which I am not competent to take judicial cognizance, since the minimum of the penalties attached by the statute to the offence is much greater than those which the Act giving Consuls criminal jurisdiction empowers me to impose, I do myself the honour, in conformity with the instructions contained in the circular of the 31st December, 1843, to submit the matter to your Lordship's consideration.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

G. W. CROWE.

No. 267.—Viscount Palmerston to Consul-General Crowe.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 22, 1849.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 23rd of October last, and its inclosures, reporting that some slaves had been shipped at Bengazi for conveyance to Canea, on board the schooner Tre Fratelli, of which the British subjects Messrs. Cæsar Nani and Co, merchants of Bengazi, are said to be either the owners or consignees.

I referred that despatch and its inclosures to the law advisers of the Crown, for their opinion as to what steps could be taken in order to bring Messrs. Nani to justice ; and I have now to acquaint you that they have reported it to be their opinion that it is competent to you, under the Order in Council of the 19th of June, 1844, to cause those persons to be arrested and to send them to Malta for trial, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 6 and 7 Victoria, cap. 94, for the felony of which they have been guilty under the statute 5 George IV, cap. 113, section 10, as extended by the statute 6 and 7 Victoria, cap. 98.

From your despatch, and from the papers which accompany it, there appears to be strong presumptive evidence of the guilt of Messrs. Nani ; and I have accordingly to inform you that I have requested the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to desire the Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's ships in the Mediterranean, to put himself into communication with the Governor of Malta, relative to sending a ship of war to Bengazi for the purpose of carrying the accused parties and the witnesses to Malta for trial ; and that I have moved the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department to issue the necessary instructions to the Governor of Malta on this subject.

I have therefore to instruct you, on the receipt of this despatch, to cause the Messrs. Nani to be immediately arrested, and to be retained in safe custody until the arrival of the ship of war.

You will transmit to the Governor of Malta such depositions taken on oath as you may be able to obtain, tending to prove the truth of the charge against Messrs. Nani; and you will also send to Malta any witnesses who may be able to depose before the court as to the facts of the case.

It appears to me to be among other things desirable, that the original correspondence between Dr. Casolani and Messrs. Nani, with the signatures of the latter duly certified, should be sent to Malta; and that the dragoman who watched the proceedings should be sent to Malta to make his deposition in person.

I rely on your zeal and diligence for collecting proper and sufficient proof of the criminality of Messrs. Nani; and I have to desire that you will take all the necessary steps in this important matter with circumspection and dispatch.

D'APRES les informations qu'on vient de nous donner, quelques autorités de Tripoli se livrent au trafic des esclaves.

On n'a pas besoin de dire à votre Excellence que le métier du trafic des esclaves n'est pas une chose louable, et que cela étant, il n'est pas convenable, il n'est pas digne des autorités de la Sublime Porte de l'exercer.

WITH reference to Lord Cowley's despatch of the 3rd of February last, in which his Lordship announced to me that he had received an assurance from Aali Effendi, that measures should be taken by the Porte to prevent Mahomed Sheriff Said, the Governor of Tripoli, from carrying on the Slave Trade; I herewith transmit to your Excellency a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at that town, reporting that although the Ottoman Government have issued orders to prohibit officers in the service of the Porte within the Regency of Tripoli, from engaging in Slave Trade, the Governor of that place still continues extensive speculations in that barbarous traffic, under the pretence that the orders referred to apply only to persons holding office directly under the Turkish Government.

I have to instruct your Excellency to communicate the substance of the inclosed despatch to the Turkish Government, and to urge them to take effectual steps for preventing any person holding, whether directly or indirectly, any official situation under the Turkish Government, from being concerned in this disgraceful traffic.

JE vous ai écrit il y a peu de temps pour vous dire de défendre le commerce des esclaves auquel quelques employés publics se croient d'ordinaire à Tripoli. J'avais donc lieu de croire que vous prendriez des mesures pour y remédier.

On dit cependant que quelques uns de ces employés font encore ce commerce. Or je n'ai pas besoin de vous répéter que ce commerce est par sa nature une mauvaise chose, et qu'il ne convient en aucune manière aux employés publics de s'y livrer.

Votre Excellence doit donc donner des ordres rigoureux à cet égard à ceux qu'il faut, et prendre sans aucun délai les mesures nécessaires pour faire cesser cet état de choses de manière à ce qu'il

THE Undersigned, &c. has the honour to inform Mr. Bancroft, that he has received a despatch from Mr. Westwood, Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Rio de Janeiro, containing his annual report upon the Slave Trade in Brazil, in which report Mr. Westwood states, amongst other facts relating to the trade, that the Brazilian slave-dealers derive great protection and assistance in their criminal undertakings from the employment of the flag of The United States for slave-trading purposes.

The Undersigned begs leave to transmit to Mr. Bancroft an extract of Mr. Westwood's despatch to which he refers, and has the honour to request that Mr. Bancroft will have the goodness to bring the statement contained in it to the notice of the United States' Government.

I HEREWITH transmit to you copies of 2 despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Rio de Janeiro, reporting that American vessels are extensively employed in the importation of slaves into Brazil.

I have to instruct you to show these papers to Mr. Buchanan, and to request the serious attention of The United States' Government to this subject. You will say, that The United States have declared Slave Trade to be piracy, and have decreed capital punishment to any citizen of The United States who may engage in it, and that they will surely not permit their laws to be openly violated, merely because the slaves bought and sold are to be landed in Brazil instead of The United States. You will also say, that by the Treaty of Washington The United States' Government engaged to join with that of Great Britain in all becoming representations and remonstrances with any and all Powers within whose dominions slave-markets are allowed to exist, and to urge upon all such Powers the propriety and duty of closing such markets effectually, at once, and for ever; but The United States' Government must surely feel that any remonstrances which, in execution of that engagement, it might make to the Government of Brazil, could have but little weight while citizens and vessels of The United States are known to be engaged at Rio de Janeiro and at Bahia in carrying on that very traffic which The United States' Government would be urging the Government of Brazil to compel its Brazilian subjects to abandon.

(Inclosure.)—Rear-Admiral Dacres to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

President, Simon's Bay, December 1, 1848.

THE practice of employing American vessels on voyages to the coast of Africa, when, on the necessary arrangements being completed they are turned into slave-vessels, has been frequently brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government by Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro, &c. This practice, it is believed, has been general with all the vessels which have lately resorted to the east coast of Africa on slaving voyages. The vessels arrive thereon with American colours, under which they remain until the slave cargo is prepared, and other arrangements for receiving the same completed; a simulated register accounts for the future crew as passengers, and when all is ready, the American colours are hauled down, the former captain and crew probably repair on board some other vessel (an accomplice in the transaction), and the slave-ship starts with her cargo either under Brazilian colours, or with none at all. Sometimes it is found convenient to change the colours before the completion of the final arrangements, and hence the capture of the Constante, Improviso, and Phaon, all of which were of American build, but under Brazilian colours. It is also customary for a vessel to be dispatched to the Coast, the captain of which is a kind of agent, furnished with a certain amount to purchase and arrange slave cargoes for vessels afterwards to arrive on the Coast; this vessel will remain many months and even years thus employed, until the funds are exhausted, when she winds up by receiving a cargo of slaves herself. From information obtained, there was but little doubt but that the Amelia, Constante, and Lucy Penniman, were vessels of this description; both the Amelia and Lucy Penniman were known to have been on the Coast a long time; all 3 were capacious vessels and capable of holding a large number of slaves.

The capture, therefore, of the 2 former, and the interruption to the latter vessel were very satisfactory, and no doubt prevented the expatriation of nearly 2,000 slaves, besides disheartening the slave-dealers to a great extent. The Phaon was a new American clipper, and reputed to be a very fast sailer; a slave cargo was in waiting for her, it is believed, at Luabo, and hence her capture was very fortunate. I have, I trust, exhibited in a satisfactory manner to their Lordships, that though the captures of slave-vessels have not been so numerous during the period of my command, those which have been made, and, I might add, but for the protection given to them by the American flag, might further have been made, have been very effective; and I have no doubt greatly assisted in the decline of the Slave Trade from the east coast of Africa.

The Secretary to the Admiralty.

UNITED STATES (NORFOLK).

CONSULAR.

No. 288.—Consul Waring to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 17.)

MY LORD,

Norfolk, April 28, 1848.

WITH reference to your Lordship's circular despatch dated November 11, 1846, referring to the circular despatch issued from the Foreign Office under date of May 8, 1841, and therein transmitting a copy of a memorial from the General Anti-Slavery Convention; I now beg to state to your Lordship I have strictly adhered to the instructions therein given, but lately I have been unable to engage free servants to attend my establishment, having advertised in the newspapers without receiving a single applicant, either male or female, and the laws of this State forbid free coloured people from any other part of The United States to reside here, under any circumstances whatsoever, and white domestics cannot be induced to come from the Northern States to hire themselves in a slave-holding State; these circumstances compel me to call on your Lordship for instructions in this case.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

FRANCIS WARING.

No. 289.—Viscount Palmerston to Consul Waring.

SIR,

Foreign Office, May 26, 1848.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 28th ultimo, in which, with reference to my circular despatch of the 8th of May, 1841, by which Her Majesty's functionaries in countries where slavery exists were prohibited from holding or hiring slaves, you state that you find it impossible to engage free servants, and request instructions on the subject.

I have, in reply, to express to you my regret that I am unable to assist you in this matter, for Her Majesty's Government cannot consent under any circumstances to relax the injunction contained in my circular above mentioned.

I am, &c.

F. Waring, Esq.

PALMERSTON.

VENEZUELA.

No. 290.—Mr. Wilson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received April 5.)
 MY LORD, Caracas, February 23, 1848.

It is stated in the report that has been presented to Congress by the Minister for the Home Department, that at an expense of $4,948,37 = 791*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*, and in virtue of the provisions of the Venezuelan Law of Manumission, 46 slaves were liberated in the course of the year 1847; and furthermore, that freedom was voluntarily granted by their masters to 5 others.

During the same year, 1847, 608 manumisos (or children of both sexes, of female slaves, born after June 1841) were bound as apprentices, practically as slaves, until they attain the age of 25.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B. BELFORD HINTON WILSON.

No. 291.—Mr. Wilson to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 21.)
 (Extract.) Caracas, May 4, 1848.

It is gratifying to have it in my power to state to your Lordship that while the Venezuelan nation is engaged in a struggle for civil liberty, the interests of the more suffering portion of humanity have not been forgotten, and that by the promulgation on the 28th ultimo of a law to that effect, the last vestige of the foreign Slave Trade of Venezuela has been effaced.

Henceforward the importation of slaves into the territory of the Republic in any manner in which it may be effected, even under the plea of their being domestic servants, as heretofore has been allowed by law upon conditions which I have frequently explained, is entirely prohibited; and slaves introduced in contravention of this prohibition become ipso facto free.

Considering the political influence exercised by the slave-owners, and their tenacity upon all matters connected with the National Institution of Domestic Slavery, the present improvement of the law may be hailed with satisfaction; while much credit is due to General Jozé Tadeo Monagos and M. Rafael Acevedo, for the honest and manly part they have taken in the accomplishment of this philanthropic purpose.

Herewith I beg to inclose to your Lordship a copy and translation of M. Acevedo's note to me, announcing this measure, together with a copy of my reply, and, finally, a copy and translation of the legislative provision by which it has been effectuated.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B. BELFORD HINTON WILSON.

No. 292.—Viscount Palmerston to Mr. Wilson.

Foreign Office, July 10, 1848.

I HAVE received and laid before the Queen your despatch dated the 4th of May last, conveying on the part of M. Acevedo the gratifying intelligence that the Government of Venezuela has passed a law by which the importation of slaves into that country is now entirely prohibited; and any slave upon touching the Venezuelan soil becomes ipso facto free.

You will state to M. Acevedo that Her Majesty's Government have received the announcement of this philanthropic measure with very sincere pleasure. They hail it not only as a proof of the good faith of the Venezuelan Government in the fulfilment of their promises to Her Majesty's Government, but also as a gratifying test of the enlightened policy which animates the Republic of Venezuela, and which, by engaging the warm sympathies of the British nation, cannot but contribute to draw still closer the bonds of friendship and good will which already happily exist between the 2 countries.

I am, &c.

B. H. Wilson, Esq.

PALMERSTON.

No. 293.—Acting Consul-General Riddel to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received August 5.)

MY LORD,

Caracas, June 28, 1848.

HEREWITH I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship a printed copy in duplicate, together with a translation, of an amended Law of Manumission, which obtained the sanction of the Venezuelan Executive on the 28th of April last.

By this law, most of the provisions of the one previously existing, which have been explained on several occasions by Mr. Belford Hinton Wilson, continue in force, with the exception of the material alteration contained in Article IX, in pursuance of which slaves can now no longer be introduced within the territory of the republic under any pretext whatever, though even in the character of domestic servants, as was formerly permitted under certain regulations; and by the same Article it is declared that slaves who may be imported in violation of this prohibition become by the fact itself free.

A copy and translation of the above-mentioned Article has already been forwarded under cover of Mr. Belford Wilson's despatch of May 4; but it has occurred to me that your Lordship might possibly be desirous to possess a translation of the entire law; more particularly since it appears from the records of this office, that no translation of the law for which the existing one has been substituted was ever transmitted to the Foreign Office.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

J. RIDDEL.

(Inclosure.)—Venezuelan Law of Manumission.—Caracas, April 28,
(Translation.) 1848.

THE Senate and Chamber of Representatives of the Republic of Venezuela, assembled in Congress.

DECREE.

ART. I. The effects of the provision of the 1st Article of the Law of the 21st of July, 1821, by which the offspring of female slaves are declared to be free from the day of their birth, and which also enacts that their names, as such, shall be inscribed in the civic registers and parish books, continues in force.

II. The owners of female slaves are under the express obligation of educating, clothing, and maintaining the children such slaves may have had since the promulgation of the Law of the 21st of July, 1821, or that they may hereafter give birth to; but those who have been born subsequent to that date, and prior to the day of the publication of the Law of the 2nd of October, 1830, shall in return reimburse the owners of their mothers for the expenses incurred in training them, by means of the labour and services they shall render to such owners until they have attained the age of 18 years, or until the age of 21 as respects those who have been born subsequent to the publication of the said Law of the 2nd of October, 1830.

III. The grandfathers and grandmothers, or the brothers and sisters, if free, can withdraw the child or youth from the possession of the mother's owner; and this act places him or her in the enjoyment of every civil right.

IV. No other person can remove the child or youth from the hands of the owner of the mother before the age specified, unless it be proved, by means of the State Attorney and before the civil authority, that the mother's owner does not fulfil the duties of patron or guardian imposed upon him by this law, or that he has acted with cruelty.

V. When, in any of the cases referred to in the 2 preceding Articles, the child or youth should depart from the care of the patron or guardian, the party who takes him or her away, or the person to whose house he or she shall go, shall pay to the owner, in consideration of the aliment and education, half of his or her value according to the tariff, supposing such child to be a slave.

VI. When the child, having attained the age of 18 or 21 years, shall no longer be under the control of the owner of its mother, it will be the duty of the owner to make a report to the board established by the XVIth Article, respecting the conduct and behaviour of such children, with a view of their being apprenticed to some useful trade or profession.

VII. No slave shall be sold out of the province in which he or she may reside, thus separating the child from its parents; but this prohibition shall only continue in force until the children shall have arrived at the age of puberty.

VIII. The sale of slaves beyond the territory of Venezuela, or their extraction from thence for the purpose of sale, is prohibited. Whosoever violates this provision shall pay a fine of 300 dollars for every slave, the amount of which shall be applied to the manumission fund.

IX. The introduction of slaves within the territory of Venezuela, under whatever pretext it may be attempted, even in the character of domestic servants, is prohibited. Slaves imported in defiance of this prohibition immediately become by the act itself free.

X. A fund for the annual manumission of slaves is hereby created, composed, 1st, of 2 per cent. upon the total value of the property of those who die leaving collateral heirs; 2ndly, of 10 per cent. on the total value of the property of those who die leaving heirs alien or not of kin; 3rdly, of the liquidated property of those who die intestate, leaving no heirs who can by law inherit, and in which case the Fisc would by right take possession; 4thly, of charitable donations and pious bequests received from the benefactors of this estimable institution, whose names shall be published in its annual reports.

CLAUSE 1. The investigation into the value of the property pertaining to the manumission fund, arising out of collateral inheritances or testamentary bequests to heirs alien or not of kin, shall be made by means of judicial arbitration between the heir or heirs and 3 commissioners of confidence named by the manager of the manumission fund before the civil authority of the parish. Should they not be able to agree with respect to the value, the Judge shall strike an average between the prices fixed by the 2 parties; and should they still be unable to come to an understanding, the formation of a judicial inventory or valuation shall be proceeded with.

2. The natural ascendants or descendants shall not be considered as alien heirs, whether they succeed to the property by will or as heirs-at-law.

3. When it happens that the deceased has granted freedom to one or more slaves, if their value is equal to the manumission tax in amount, nothing on that account shall be recovered from the heir or executor; but if their value should not be equal, the balance shall be demanded.

4. The amount of the impost that may be due to the manumission fund, owing to the death of any citizen, shall be paid in that canton where the bulk of the property of the deceased may exist, although there may happen to be other effects in a distinct canton.

XI. The number of slaves to be annually emancipated in Venezuela shall be equivalent to the maximum that during a like period may have been manumitted in virtue of anterior provisions respecting emancipation.

XII. This number of slaves which has amounted to 20, shall be divided every 4 years amongst all the provinces, in proportion to the quota held by each of the entire number of slaves existing in the whole State.

XIII. If the total amount of the funds referred to in Article X does not during the year yield a sum sufficient for the emancipation of the appointed number, the deficiency shall be supplied from the public treasury, in virtue of an order from the Government, who shall divide the amount amongst the provincial treasuries, in proportion to the number of slaves that each province may have to liberate in the year, and to the deficiency of the fund destined to that object.

XIV. In the capital of each province, a Superior Board of Manumission shall be established, composed of the Governor of the province, of the Vicar, or, in his absence, of the senior Curate of the capital or parish, and of a Member of the Provincial Assembly.

XV. It is the duty of the Provincial Board, 1st. To meet once in every month; 2nd. To arrange with the Inferior Boards of cantons, and to require them to perform their duties; 3rd. To receive from them, and, when necessary, to solicit the accounts of the funds collected in each canton; to examine, correct, approve, and pass them to the Government in the last month of the year; 4th. To distribute to the respective cantons the suppletory quota that may be received from the Treasury according to Article XIII; 5th. To draw up every 4 years a statement of the number of slaves in each province, collecting and revising the separate lists formed by the cantonal boards; and 6th. To make reports to the Provincial Assemblies of all that may have been done or have occurred respecting the subject of manumission, to be accompanied with their corresponding statements and data, in order that those corporations may, during their annual sessions, efficiently exercise the attributes conferred upon them by the constitution, of watching over the observance of this law.

XVI. In the chief town of each canton there shall be an Inferior Board of Manumission, which shall assemble once in every month, composed of the principal civil magistrate of the place, the visiting ecclesiastical vicar, if there should be one, or in his absence, of the curate, a resident, and a treasurer of responsibility, who shall be nominated by the Governor of the province.

XVII. It is the duty of the Cantonal Boards of Manumission: 1st. To elect a Commissioner in each parish, who may institute inquiries and supply information respecting those that die, leaving property in any of the three cases alluded to in Article X; 2nd. To recover, with promptness and accuracy, the impost for the manumission of slaves in any of those three cases; 3rd. To cause to be paid to the treasurer the amount collected, together with a proper account and statement; 4th. To send in to the provincial Board of Manumission on the last month of the year, an account of these funds; 5th. To emancipate the number of slaves corresponding to the canton, in pursuance of the order that may be forwarded to it by the Provincial Board of Manumission, and with the sum which in default of the necessary amount, may be remitted to it by the same board; 6th. To prepare every 4 years, with the assistance of the parochial commissioners, a list of the number of slaves in the canton, availing itself for that purpose of the civil and ecclesiastical census of the parish; 7th. To co-operate with the Government, and by means of the Provincial Board of Manumission, in furtherance of the useful employment and occupation of the emancipated in conformity with Article VI.

Only Clause. The treasurer of the manumission fund of the canton shall receive for collection and custody 5 per cent. on all sums recovered by him from the estates of parties deceased, according to Article X.

XVIII. The registrar, magistrate, or justice of the peace who may intervene in the matter of wills and of the property of persons dying intestate comprised in Article X, shall give notice to the parochial commissioner and to the principal civil authority of the canton, stating also the name of the testator or deceased and the day on which the testament has been made or on which the person has died intestate. The curate will report to the local justice the names of the individuals who may die within his parish.

Only Clause. The omission to give this notification will subject the registrar, magistrate, or justice of the peace, to a fine, equal to the amount of the impost due upon the property, or to a fine of 100 dollars in the case of intestate property.

XIX. The manumission throughout the provinces shall take place at Christmas, by which time the accounts of the funds of this institution ought to have been made up, or the sums to be supplied to the Boards of Manumission from the respective treasuries have been solicited from and their payment ordered by the Government to the said Boards of Manumission, so that they may be enabled to fulfil their duties in conformity with Article XV.

XX. The selection of slaves to be liberated shall be made in each canton by its respective board, the preference to be given, 1st, To the most advanced in years; 2nd, To the most honest and industrious; 3rd, To those belonging to the testator or to the property of the person having died intestate, so far as the value of one or more slaves may equal the amount of duty due from the estate to the manumission fund.

Only Clause. Should there be no slaves in a canton in which funds have been collected, they shall be applied to their object by the Provincial Board for the emancipation of slaves of another canton in the same province. The funds collected in a province in which there are no slaves to emancipate shall be appropriated by the Government for a like purpose in another province.

XXI. The Government shall publish every year, 1st, The names of the slaves liberated in each province; 2nd, The total amount of the manumission fund collected in the previous year; and 3rd, The supplement granted out of the state treasuries.

XXII. The contribution and adjudication referred to in Article X shall be abolished by the fact itself of the extinction of slavery throughout the territory of the State; and no authority shall apply to any other purpose the smallest portion of the fund.

XXIII. The Law of the 21st of July, 1821, the Decree of the 28th of June, 1827, and the Law of the 2nd of October, 1830, are entirely abolished.

Given in Caracas on the 21st of April, 1848, the 19th year of the Law and the 38th of Independence.

No. 295.—Viscount Palmerston to Acting Consul-General Riddell.

SIR,

Foreign Office, January 16, 1849.

I HAVE to refer you to Mr. Belford Wilson's despatch of the 16th of June, 1847, on the subject of a reward offered by Mr. McWhirter, a British subject residing in Venezuela, for the apprehension of 4 runaway labourers, said to have been of free condition, and to have been introduced by Mr. McWhirter, in the year 1846, from Curaçoa into Venezuela, to labour on his estate.

In that despatch, Mr. Belford Wilson called my attention to the fact that British subjects are the owners or hirers of a large number of slaves in Venezuela, and likewise that British subjects have a direct or indirect interest as owners, joint owners, or mortgagees in several of the principal plantations in that country which are wholly or in part worked by slaves.

I referred that despatch and its inclosures to the proper Law Adviser of the Crown, for his opinion, whether Mr. McWhirter and those other British subjects alluded to by Mr. Wilson are or are not acting in conformity with British law; and in accordance with the opinion of Her Majesty's Advocate-General, in which opinion I entirely concur, I have to state to you, for your information, that assuming the statement of Mr. McWhirter to be correct, it does not appear that his conduct has been such as to render him liable to be prosecuted and convicted of a breach of British law.

With respect to the other British subjects alluded to by Mr. Wilson, I have to observe, that without more precise information it is not practicable to form an opinion on the subject.

The statute of the 5th Geo. IV, cap. 113, to amend and consolidate the laws relative to the Slave Trade, is, by the later Act 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 98, made applicable to all British subjects, wherever residing; prima facie, therefore, these British subjects, although resident in Venezuela, have been guilty of transgression of British law. It is, however, by the 6th section of the last-mentioned statute provided and enacted, "that nothing in the said Act contained shall be taken to subject to any forfeiture, punishment, or penalty, any person for transferring or receiving any share in any joint-stock company established before the passing of this Act, in respect of any slave or slaves in the possession of such company before such time, or for selling any slave or slaves which were lawfully in his possession at the time of the passing this Act, or which such person shall or may have become possessed of or entitled unto bond fide prior to such sale by inheritance, devise, bequest, marriage, or otherwise by operation of law."

Whether the British subjects in question can bring themselves within these exceptions, does not appear from the information with which I have been furnished by Mr. Belford Wilson on this subject; and I have to desire you to send me such information on these points as you may be able to procure.

I am, &c.

SECTION VIII.—Of the Parliament.

XXXVIII. The United Parliament of Austria is to consist of 2 houses, an Upper and a Lower House, and will be summoned to meet by the Emperor in the spring of every year.

XXXIX. The Parliament assembles at Vienna, but may be summoned by the Emperor to meet at any other place.

XL. The Upper House is composed of Members who are chosen from the Provincial Diets of the respective Crown domains.

XLI. The number of Deputies for the Upper House is to consist of half that which the Constitution shall allot to the Lower House. The distribution of this number will be regulated so that each Crown domain shall send 2 Members of its Diet as Members of Parliament, and that the surplus shall be distributed proportionally among all the Crown domains.

XLII. The 2 Members of the Provincial Diets sent to Parliament must be in full enjoyment of their municipal and political rights, Austrian citizens of more than 5 years' standing, and 40 years old at least.

The other Members of the Upper House are to be elected by the Provincial Diets, but only from amongst those citizens of the State who possess the above-mentioned qualifications, and pay at least 500 florins in direct taxes within the empire.

In the Crown domains, where the number of such citizens who pay 500 florins direct taxes does not reach the proportion of 1 in 6000, it will be filled up from the class which next follows in the taxation.

XLIII. The Lower House will be formed by the direct popular choice.

Every Austrian citizen is a voter, who is of age, in the full enjoyment of his municipal and political rights, and who either pays the yearly contribution in direct taxes which is fixed by the Electoral Law, or who, without the payment of such taxes, possesses by his position in a commune of the Austrian dominions the right of voting.

XLIV. The elections for the Lower House take place in districts and towns, to be determined on by the Electoral Law.

This law will also fix the numbers of the members according to population.

This number will be so regulated that for every 100,000 inhabitants there shall be at least 1 Deputy. The yearly contribution mentioned in the preceding section will be fixed by the Electoral Law in each of the Crown domains, with a due consideration of peculiar circumstances, and on the following principle, viz., that for the country and for towns whose population does not exceed 10,000 persons, this contribution be not less than 10 florins c. m.; and for towns whose population exceeds 10,000, not less than 5 florins c.m.; but in no case may the sum be fixed at a higher rate than 20 florins c. m.

XLV. Every Austrian citizen, in order to be eligible to the Lower House must be 30 years old, and have been acknowledged to have been in the full enjoyment of his municipal and political rights for at least 5 years.

XLVI. All votes at the elections for the Upper and Lower Houses must be oral and public.

XLVII. Members who occupy a public office cannot be refused leave of absence.

XLVIII. If any Member of Parliament accepts a paid appointment of the State, a new election must take place.

XLIX. The Members of the Upper House are elected for a period of 10, and the Members of the Lower House for a period of 5 successive years. At the expiration of their writs they are re-eligible.

L. The Members of the Upper House receive no remuneration; those of the Lower House will receive for each session a certain stipend.

LI. No one can be at the same time a Member of the Upper and Lower House.

LII. Each Member on taking his seat must take the oath to the Emperor and to the Constitution.

LIII. The Members are not to receive instructions, and can only exercise their personal right of voting.

LIV. Each House of Parliament has the right to examine and decide on the legality of the election of its Members.

LV. Each House has the right of electing its President and Vice-Presidents for the duration of the session.

LVI. Neither House can come to any resolution unless the number of Members required by the Constitution be present.

LVII. Secret voting, except in the case where elections are to be made, cannot take place in either House.

LVIII. A resolution can only be passed by an absolute majority ; where there is an equal number of votes the motion is lost.

LIX. The sittings of the Parliament are public ; but each House has the right, on the motion of the President or of at least 10 of its Members, to hold secret sittings.

LX. Only Members of Parliament can present petitions in the Houses to which they belong.

LXI. Deputations to the Parliament are not to be admitted into the House.

LXII. No Member of Parliament may be either held to account or be judicially prosecuted out of the House, for any expressions used during the sittings.

LXIII. No Member of Parliament, so long as it is assembled, can, unless taken in the act, be either arrested or prosecuted without the consent of the House to which he belongs.

LXIV. Each House must regulate the order of its business on the principles laid down in its constitution. The relations in matters of business between the Upper and Lower Houses are to be regulated by themselves.

LXV. The right to propose laws belongs to the Emperor, as well as to each House.

LXVI. The unanimity of the Emperor and of both Houses of Parliament is necessary for every law. Motions about laws which have been rejected by the Emperor or either of the Houses cannot be brought on again during the same session.

LXVII. The Parliament has a right to take part in the making of laws on those affairs which in the Constitution of the empire are described as affairs of the empire.

LXVIII. The Deputies from all the Crown dominions take a part in legislative measures respecting the affairs of the empire. This common participation also takes place when measures are passed respecting municipal rights, penal rights, the constitution of tribunals, and judicial proceedings.

But in Hungary, Transylvania, Croatia, and Slavonia, as well as the Croatian coast and Fiume, so far as peculiar laws and ordinances differing from those of the rest of the Crown dominions, may exist with regard to this branch of the legislature, the Provincial Diets maintain their competence.

It will nevertheless be the task of the Provincial Diets in these Crown dominions to submit to a revision of the Legislature in these branches, in order as soon as possible to arrive at a desirable similarity of legislation in all parts of the empire. Until this is accomplished the Deputies from those Crown dominions in which a different system of legislation in the above branches exists, are to abstain from participation in the Parliamentary proceedings respecting the same.

LXIX. The Emperor prorogues and closes the Parliament, and can at any period order the dissolution of the whole Parliament or of either House.

Should the Parliament be prorogued, or but 1 of the Houses dissolved, the sittings in both are immediately suspended.

The calling together of the Parliament must in the event of its having been dissolved take place within 3 months from the time of its dissolution.

SECTION IX.—Of the Provincial Constitution and of the Provincial Diets.

LXX. The Crown dominions mentioned in § I are to be represented by Provincial Diets for the administration of those affairs which the Constitution or laws of the empire declare to be provincial affairs (XXXV).

LXXI. The Constitution of the Kingdom of Hungary is to a great extent maintained, but those regulations which are not in harmony with this Constitution are done away with, and equal justice will be done to all nationalities as regards their native languages and all the relations of public and domestic life. For this purpose institutions will be formed, and a special statute will regulate these relations.

LXXII. The Palatinate of Servia is guaranteed such arrangements as will tend to the maintenance of the freedom of their church and of their nationality. These arrangements will be founded upon ancient charters and Imperial manifestos of the present day.

The union of the Palatinate with another of the Crown dominions will, after that the Deputies from thence have been consulted, be determined by an express ordinance.

LXXIII. In the Kingdoms of Croatia and Slavonia, including the coast, the town of Fiume and its dependencies, their own peculiar institutions, as far as is consistent with the union of these countries by this Constitution with the whole empire are maintained, and their full independence of the Kingdom of Hungary assured.

Deputies from Dalmatia and the National Assembly of these kingdoms will discuss the plan and conditions for their union, and submit the result of their deliberations to the Emperor for his sanction.

LXXIV. The internal administration and constitution of the Principality of Transylvania will be fixed by a special statute; on the principle, however, of its entire independence of Hungary, and of equal justice being done to all races inhabiting the country and in harmony with this Constitution.

The privileges of the Saxon nation are assured to them and maintained by this Constitution.

LXXV. The Military Frontier establishment which exists for the preservation of the integrity of the empire, maintained as it is in its military organisation, and continue to form an integral part of the standing army under the orders of the Executive. A special statute will confer upon the inhabitants of the Military Frontier the same advantages with respect to their property as are bestowed upon the inhabitants of the other Crown dominions.

LXXVI. A special statute will determine the Constitution of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom and the relations of this Crown dominion to the rest of the empire.

LXXVII. All the rest of the Crown dominions will receive their own peculiar Constitutions.

The former establishment of the "States" is no longer in operation.

LXXVIII. The composition of the Provincial Diets is to be made with due consideration for all the interests of the province. The Members of these Diets are to be chosen by a direct election.

LXXIX. The authority necessary for the jurisdiction of the provincial electoral district will be exercised either by the Provincial Diet itself, or by a Provincial Committee chosen by the Diet.

LXXX. Every Provincial Diet has a right to take a part in the legislation for provincial affairs and in proposing laws, as well as to watch over the carrying out of the laws.

The unanimity of the Emperor and of the Provincial Diet is necessary for every provincial law.

LXXXI. Alterations in the Provincial Constitutions may be moved in the Provincial Diets (in the first that are summoned together) in the ordinary course of legislation. In the succeeding Diets, in order to pass any such alteration, at least three-fourths of all the Members must be present, and at least two-thirds of the Members present must vote for it.

LXXXII. The more particular details respecting the formation and the jurisdiction of the Provincial Diets and of the Provincial Committees may be laid down by the Provincial Constitutions and electoral laws of the several Crown dominions.

LXXXIII. All the Constitutions of the several Crown dominions which compose the empire, are to come into operation in the course of the year 1849, and must be laid before the first General Austrian Parliament which shall be called together after they have come into operation.

SECTION X.—Of the Executive Power.

LXXXIV. The Executive Power throughout the empire and in all the Crown dominions is one and indivisible. It is exclusively in the hands of the Emperor, who carries it into execution through his responsible Ministers and their subordinates.

LXXXV. If any part of the Executive Power is placed in the hands of any body or individual, this can only be done provisionally; and the Crown has always the right of making other arrangements for the exercise of the said part of the Executive Power.

LXXXVI. The Executive Power must see that the laws are carried into execution and upheld, and also that the ordinances of the Provincial Diets and Committees be carried out within their several jurisdictions.

LXXXVII. When the Parliament or the Provincial Diet is not sitting, and it may be necessary to take urgent measures, which have not been provided for by the laws, and which it might be a source of danger to the empire or the province to delay, then the Emperor has the right to take the necessary steps on the responsibility of the Ministers and with Provisional Legislative Power; but at the same time he is bound to lay before the Parliament or Provincial Diet respectively the grounds for his conduct and the result.

LXXXVIII. The Ministers have to conduct the administration of the empire and the several Crown dominions, to issue the necessary ordinances, and to see to the maintenance of the laws of the empire and the provinces.

LXXXIX. The Ministers have the power on their own responsibility, of suspending or prohibiting the execution of measures which would be injurious to the laws and the public welfare in those affairs, which have been left to the independent management of the Communes or of the Provincial Diets.

XC. The Ministers have the right to appear in Parliament and at all times to address the House. They may also for particular discussions send Deputies in their stead. They can only vote in Parliament when they are Members.

XCI. With respect to the responsibility of Ministers to judicial proceedings against them, and their punishment in case of condemnation, a special statute will be passed.

XCII. For the several Crown dominions the Emperor appoints Viceroys, who are appointed and in duty bound as the organs of the Executive Power, to see to the maintenance of the laws of the empire and of the province, and to administer the internal affairs of the country within their jurisdiction.

XCIII. The Viceroys have the right either to appear either in person or by proxy in the Provincial Diets, and at all times to address the Assembly. They can only vote in the Diets when they are Members.

XCIV. The Viceroys are in their administration responsible for the due observation and maintenance of the law of the empire and of the province concerned.

XCV. The Executive Power can charge the Viceroys or the authorities of the several Crown dominions with the care of affairs of the empire also, or may have these (affairs of the empire) administered by other agents in any part of the empire.

SECTION XI.—Of the Privy Council.

XCVI. By the side of the Crown and of the Executive Power a Privy Council is placed, whose office will be to give advice upon all affairs upon which it shall be consulted by the Executive.

XCVII. The Members of the Privy Council are appointed by the Emperor; in appointing them, the interests of the different parts of the empire must as far as possible be consulted.

XCVIII. A special statute will regulate the formation and jurisdiction of the Privy Council.

SECTION XII.—Of the Judicial Power.

XCIX. The judicial power is exercised independently by the tribunals.

C. All judicial authority emanates from the empire. There are to be no hereditary tribunals for the future.

CI. No judge appointed by the State may, after his definitive appointment, be either temporarily removed or dismissed from his post, unless it is by judicial sentence, nor is he to be transferred against his will to another post, or placed on the retired list.

This last regulation, however, is not applicable to cases in which persons are placed on the retired list according to law, on account of incapability of performing their duty, nor to cases where changes in the authorities composing the tribunal become necessary from alterations being made in the constitution of that tribunal.

CII. The judicial and administrative power are to be separated, and made independent of one another. In cases of disputes as to competency between the administrative and judicial authorities, the law will appoint persons with power to decide the question.

CIII. Judicial proceedings are to be, generally speaking, oral and public. The exceptions as regards publicity will be fixed by law, in the interest of order and morality.

In criminal cases the system of public prosecution is to be adopted. In all cases of serious crime, which the law shall specify, as well as in political offences and offences of the press, sworn juries are to give the verdict.

CIV. The carrying out of the aforesaid general principles, according to which all judicial proceedings will be henceforth conducted, their introduction into the various provinces, with a due regard to circumstances, is reserved and will be determined by special imperial and provincial laws. (LXVIII.)

CV. All laws referring to the position of Members of the Imperial House in the eye of the law remain in force.

SECTION XIII.—Of the Imperial Tribunal.

CVI. A superior Imperial Court is to be established, whose office it will be to intervene in the following cases :

1. As a Court of Arbitration, in cases of dispute between the empire and the several provinces of the Crown, or in disputes between the several provinces among themselves, whenever the case does not come within the jurisdiction of the ordinary judicial authorities.

2. As the last Court of Appeal, in cases of violation of political rights.

3. As the chief Court of Inquiry.

a. In cases where Ministers or Viceroy's are accused ;

b. In conspiracies or attempts against the Monarch or the Regent, and in cases of high treason.

CVII. The seat of the Imperial Tribunal is Vienna ; and a special statute will determine in what manner the judges shall be chosen (keeping in view the interests of the provinces of the Crown,) of what number they shall consist, and what the proceedings of the court shall be.

SECTION XIV.—Of the Revenue.

CVIII. All taxes and imposts for Imperial or Provincial objects will be determined by laws.

CIX. All the receipts and expenditure of the empire must be yearly made public in an estimate. Should this estimate be exceeded, it must be submitted to a subsequent investigation before the Parliament.

CX. The State Debt is guaranteed by the empire.

CXI. The General Account of the Revenue of the Empire every year, together with a general statement of the State Debt, is to be laid before the Parliament every year by the Finance Department.

CXII. The regulations of the Finance Department will be fixed by law.

SECTION XV.—Of the Armed Force.

CXIII. The object of the armed force is to defend the empire against external enemies, to maintain order, and to ensure the execution of the laws.

CXIV. In the interior of the empire the armed force can only interfere upon the demand of the civil authorities, and in those cases only which are defined by law.

CXV. The armed force is in its nature subordinate. No part of it can deliberate.

CXVI. The extent and nature of the duties of an Austrian subject to bear arms, whether by land or by sea, will be determined by a law.

CXVII. The army is under military jurisdiction and military laws.

The regulations for the discipline of the army and navy continue in full force.

CXVIII. The oath of the army to the Constitution will be included in the oath of fidelity to the colours.

CXIX. The establishment of an armed force consisting of citizens will be regulated by law.

SECTION XVI.—General Regulations.

CXX. Until the necessary Organic Laws shall be passed by the Imperial Legislature in conformity with the Constitution, the requisite arrangements for carrying them into effect by means of ordinances will be made.

CXXI. Existing laws remain in force until new ones are passed.

CXXII. The authorities remain in the exercise of their present functions until the new Organic Laws relating to them are made.

CXXIII. Alterations in this Imperial Constitution may be proposed in the ordinary manner in the first session of the Legislative bodies. In subsequent sessions to effect such changes it is requisite that at least three-fourths of the Members of each House should be present, and that at least two-thirds of those present should agree to the alteration.

Given this 4th day of March, 1849, at our Imperial residence of Olmütz.

*CORRESPONDENCE between Great Britain and The United States, respecting the American Blockade of the West Coast of Mexico.—December, 1846.

Mr. Buchanan to Mr. Pakenham.

SIR, Department of State, Washington, December 29, 1846.

THE most satisfactory answer which I can give to your note of the 14th instant, communicating to me a copy of a despatch from Lord Palmerston to yourself in relation to Commodore Stockton's notification of blockade, is to furnish you a copy of an order issued by the Navy Department on the 24th instant, to the commanding officer of The United States' naval forces in the Pacific Ocean.

Whilst the general language employed by Commodore Stockton may be liable to misconstruction, it is as yet sufficiently apparent from the whole proclamation that he did not intend to establish a paper blockade. This would have been equally unwarranted by his instructions and by the principles which The United States have maintained in regard to blockades ever since we became an independent nation.

Whilst I transmit you a copy of the whole order from the Navy Department, for the satisfaction of Lord Palmerston, I desire that no part of it may be made public, except that which specifies what this Government recognizes, and will enforce, as a lawful blockade under the law of nations.

I avail, &c.

R. Pakenham.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Mason to the Commanding Officers of The United States' Navy in the Pacific Ocean.

SIR, Navy Department, December 24, 1846.

WITH his letter to the Department of the 28th August last, Commodore Stockton transmitted a copy of a paper which he had made public, giving notice of his intention to subject to a vigorous blockade, "all the forts, harbours, bays, outlets, and inlets on the west coast of Mexico, south of San Diego," to be absolute, except against armed vessels of neutrals. In giving "to all neutral merchant vessels found in any of the bays and harbours on said coast, on the arrival of the blockading force, 20 days to leave," it is very obvious that Commodore Stockton did not regard the extensive coast embraced within the limits specified as placed under blockade by the published notice, or that any particular port would be in a state of blockade, until a sufficient blockading force was actually present to enforce it.

* Laid before Parliament, 1861.

In authorizing conquest or blockade on the west coast, the President has desired to subject neutral commerce to the least possible inconvenience or obstruction compatible with the exercise of the belligerent rights necessary to the success of our military operations.

The generality of the language employed by Commodore Stockton, in his notice of intended blockade, it seems, has excited alarm with neutrals in regard to shipments to Mexican ports, and may have prevented their being made ; and as it is desirable to avoid any such interference with their commercial adventures in articles not contraband, I invite your attention to the subject, and desire you to take the necessary measures to correct any erroneous impressions which may have been produced.

You will employ the forces under your command in the active prosecution of the war, and establish and maintain the blockade of such of the enemy's ports as you may deem proper in the execution of your orders, giving to neutral vessels in such ports 20 days to leave. But a lawful maritime blockade requires the actual presence of a sufficient force stationed at the entrance of the ports, sufficiently near to prevent communication. The only exception to this rule, which requires the actual presence of an adequate force to constitute a lawful blockade, arises out of the circumstance of the occasional temporary absence of the blockading squadron, produced by accident, as in the case of a storm, which does not suspend the legal operation of a blockade. The law considers an attempt to take advantage of such an accidental removal a fraudulent attempt to break the blockade.

The United States have at all times maintained these principles on the subject of blockade ; and you will take care not to attempt the application of penalties for a breach of blockade, except in cases where your right is justified by these rules. You should give public notice, that under Commodore Stockton's general notification no port on the west coast of Mexico is regarded as blockaded unless there is a sufficient American force to maintain it, actually present, or temporarily driven from such actual presence by stress of weather, intending to return.

I am, &c.

The Commanding Officers of 'The United States'
Navy in the Pacific Ocean.

*TREATY of Peace, Friendship, Limits, and Settlement, between The United States and Mexico. — Signed at Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848.

[Ratifications exchanged at Queretaro, May 30, 1848.]

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS a Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Limits, and Settlement, between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic, was concluded and signed at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo on the 2nd day of February, 1848, which Treaty, as amended by the Senate of The United States, and being in the English and Spanish languages, is word for word as follows :

In the name of Almighty God :

The United States of America and the United Mexican States, animated by a sincere desire to put an end to the calamities of the war which unhappily exists between the 2 Republics, and to establish upon a solid basis relations of peace and friendship, which shall confer reciprocal benefits upon the citizens of both, and assure the concord, harmony, and mutual confidence wherein the 2 people should live, as good neighbours, have for that purpose appointed their respective Plenipotentiaries—that is to say, the President of The United States has appointed Nicholas P. Trist, a citizen of The United States, and the President of the Mexican Republic has appointed Don Luis Gonzaga Cuevas, Don Bernardo Couto, and Don Miguel Atristain, citizens of the said republic, who, after a reciprocal communication of their respective full powers, have, under the protection of Almighty God, the author of peace, arranged, agreed upon, and signed the following

Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Limits, and Settlement, between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic.

ART. I. There shall be firm and universal peace between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic, and between their respective countries, territories, cities, towns, and people, without exception of places or persons.

II. Immediately upon the signature of this Treaty, a Convention shall be entered into between a commissioner or commissioners appointed by the General-in-chief of the forces of The United States, and such as may be appointed by the Mexican Government, to the end that a provisional suspension of hostilities shall take place, and that, in the places occupied by the said forces, constitutional order may be re-established, as regards the political, administrative, and judicial branches, so far as this shall be permitted by the circumstances of military occupation.

III. Immediately upon the ratification of the present Treaty by the Government of The United States, orders shall be transmitted to the commanders of their land and naval forces, requiring the latter (provided this Treaty shall then have been ratified by the Government of the Mexican Republic, and the ratifications exchanged) immediately to desist from blockading any Mexican ports; and requiring the former (under the same condition) to commence, at the earliest moment practicable, withdrawing all troops of The United States then in the interior of the Mexican Republic, to points that shall be selected by common agreement, at a distance from the seaports not exceeding 30 leagues; and such evacuation of the interior of the republic shall be completed with the least possible delay; the Mexican Government hereby binding itself to afford every facility in its power for rendering the same convenient to the troops, on their march and in their new positions, and for promoting a good understanding between them and the inhabitants. In like manner, orders shall be dispatched to the persons in charge of the Custom Houses at all ports occupied by the forces of The United States, requiring them (under the same condition) immediately to deliver possession of the same to the persons authorized by the Mexican Government to receive it, together with all bonds and evidences of debt for duties on importations and on exportations, not yet fallen due. Moreover, a faithful and exact account shall be made out, showing the entire amount of all duties on imports and on exports, collected at such Custom-Houses, or elsewhere in Mexico, by authority of The United States, from and after the day of the ratification of this Treaty by the Government of the Mexican Republic; and also an account of the cost of collection; and such entire amount, deducting only the cost of collection, shall be delivered to the Mexican Government, at the city of Mexico, within 3 months after the exchange of ratifications.

The evacuation of the capital of the Mexican Republic by the troops of The United States, in virtue of the above stipulation, shall be completed in 1 month after the orders there stipulated for shall have been received by the commander of said troops, or sooner if possible.

IV. Immediately after the exchange of ratifications of the present Treaty all castles, forts, territories, places, and possessions, which have been taken or occupied by the forces of The United States during the present war, within the limits of the Mexican Republic, as about to be established by the following Article, shall be definitively restored to the said Republic, together with all the artillery, arms, apparatus of war, munitions, and other public property, which were in the said castles and forts when captured, and which shall remain there at the time when this Treaty shall be duly ratified by the Government of the Mexican Republic. To this end, immediately upon the signature of this Treaty, orders shall be dispatched to the American officers commanding such castles and forts, securing against the removal or destruction of any such artillery, arms, apparatus of war, munitions, or other public property. The city of Mexico, within the inner line of intrenchments surrounding the said city, is comprehended in the above stipulations, as regards the restoration of artillery, apparatus of war, &c.

The final evacuation of the territory of the Mexican Republic, by the forces of The United States, shall be completed in 3 months from the said exchange of ratifications, or sooner if possible: the Mexican Government hereby engaging, as in the foregoing Article, to use all means in its power for facilitating such evacuation, and rendering it convenient to the troops, and for promoting a good understanding between them and the inhabitants.

If, however, the ratification of this Treaty by both parties should not take place in time to allow the embarkation of the troops of The United States to be completed before the commencement of the sickly season, at the Mexican ports on the Gulf of Mexico, in such case a friendly arrangement shall be entered into between the General-in-chief of the said troops and the Mexican Government, whereby healthy and otherwise suitable places at a distance from the ports not exceeding 30 leagues shall be designated for the residence of such troops as may not yet have embarked, until the return of the healthy season. And the space of time here referred to as comprehending the sickly season, shall be understood to extend from the 1st day of May to the 1st day of November.

All prisoners of war taken on either side, on land or on sea, shall be restored as soon as practicable after the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty. It is also agreed that if any Mexicans should now be held as captives by any savage tribe within the limits of The United States, as about to be established by the following Article, the Government of the said United States will exact the release of such captives, and cause them to be restored to their country.

V. The boundary line between the 2 Republics shall commence in the Gulf of Mexico, 3 leagues from land, opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande, otherwise called Rio Bravo del Norte, or opposite the mouth of its deepest branch, if it should have more than one branch emptying directly into the sea; from thence up the middle of that river, following the deepest channel, where it has more than one, to the point where it strikes the southern boundary of New Mexico; thence, westwardly, along the whole southern boundary of New Mexico (which runs north of the town called Paso) to its western termination; thence, northward, along the western line of New Mexico, until it intersects the first branch of the river Gila (or if it should not intersect any branch of that river, then to the point on the said line nearest to such branch, and thence in a direct line to the same); thence down the middle of the said branch and of the said river, until it empties into the Rio Colorado; thence across the Rio Colorado, following the division line between Upper and Lower California, to the Pacific Ocean.

The southern and western limits of New Mexico, mentioned in this Article, are those laid down in the map entitled "Map of the United Mexican States, as organized and defined by various Acts of the Congress of said Republic, and constructed according to the best Authorities. Revised edition. Published at New York, in 1847, by J. Disturnell." Of which map a copy is added to this Treaty, bearing the signatures and seals of the undersigned Plenipotentiaries. And, in order to preclude all difficulty in tracing upon the ground the limit separating Upper from Lower California, it is agreed that the said limit shall consist of a straight line drawn from the middle of the Rio Gila, where it unites with the Colorado, to a point on the coast of the Pacific Ocean distant 1 marine league due south of the southernmost point of the port of San Diego, according to the plan of said port made in the year 1782 by Don Juan Pantoja, second sailing-master of the Spanish fleet, and published at Madrid in the year 1802, in the atlas to the voyage of the schooners Sutil and Mexicana, of which plan a copy is hereunto added, signed and sealed by the respective Plenipotentiaries.

In order to designate the boundary line with due precision, upon authoritative maps, and to establish upon the ground landmarks which shall show the limits of both Republics, as described in the present Article, the 2 Governments shall each appoint a commissioner and a surveyor, who, before the expiration of 1 year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty, shall meet at the port of San Diego, and proceed to run and mark the said boundary in its whole course to the mouth of the Rio Bravo del Norte. They shall keep journals and make out plans of their operations; and the result agreed upon by them shall be deemed a part of this Treaty, and shall have the same force as if it were inserted therein. The 2 Governments will amicably agree regarding what may be necessary to these persons, and also as to their respective escorts, should such be necessary.

The boundary line established by this Article shall be religiously respected by each of the 2 Republics, and no change shall ever be made therein, except by the express and free consent of both nations, lawfully given by the general Government of each, in conformity with its own constitution.

VI. The vessels and citizens of The United States shall, in all time, have a free and uninterrupted passage by the Gulf of California, and by the River Colorado below its confluence with the Gila, to and from their possessions situated north of the boundary line defined in the preceding Article; it being understood that this passage is to be by navigating the Gulf of California and the river Colorado, and not by land, without the express consent of the Mexican Government.

If, by the examinations which may be made, it should be ascertained to be practicable and advantageous to construct a road, canal, or railway, which should in whole or in part run upon the River Gila, or upon its right or its left bank, within the space of 1 marine league from either margin of the river, the Governments of both Republics will form an agreement regarding its construction, in order that it may serve equally for the use and advantage of both countries.

VII. The River Gila, and the part of the Rio Bravo del Norte lying below the southern boundary of New Mexico, being agreeably to the Vth Article, divided in the middle between the 2 Republics, the navigation of the Gila and of the Bravo below said boundary shall be free and common to the vessels and citizens of both countries; and neither shall, without the consent of the other, construct any work that may impede or interrupt, in whole or in part, the exercise of this right; not even for the purpose of favouring new methods of navigation. Nor shall any tax or contribution, under any denomination or title, be levied upon vessels, or persons navigating the same, or upon merchandise or effects transported thereon, except in the case of landing upon one of their shores. If, for the purpose of making the said rivers navigable, or for maintaining them in such state, it should be necessary or advantageous to establish any tax or contribution, this shall not be done without the consent of both Governments.

The stipulations contained in the present Article shall not impair the territorial rights of either Republic within its established limits.

VIII. Mexicans now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and which remain for the future within the limits of The United States, as defined by the present Treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside, or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territories, or disposing thereof, and removing the proceeds wherever they please, without their being subjected, on this account, to any contribution, tax, or charge whatever.

Those who shall prefer to remain in the said territories, may either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens, or acquire those of citizens of The United States. But they shall be under the obligation to make their election within 1 year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty; and those who shall remain in the said territories after the expiration of that year, without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans, shall be considered to have elected to become citizens of The United States.

In the said territories, property of every kind, now belonging to Mexicans not established there, shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract, shall enjoy with respect to it, guarantees equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of The United States.

IX. The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding Article, shall be incorporated into the union of The United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of The United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of The United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

X. [Stricken out.]

XI. Considering that a great part of the territories which, by the present Treaty, are to be comprehended for the future within the limits of The United States, is now occupied by savage tribes, who will hereafter be under the exclusive control of the Government of The United States, and whose incursions within the territory of Mexico would be prejudicial in the extreme, it is solemnly agreed that all such incursions shall be forcibly restrained by the Government of The United States whensoever this may be necessary; and that when they cannot be prevented, they shall be punished by the said Government, and satisfaction for the same shall be exacted—all in the same way, and with equal diligence and energy, as if the same incursions were meditated or committed within its own territory, against its own citizens.

It shall not be lawful, under any pretext whatever, for any inhabitant of The United States to purchase or acquire any Mexican, or any foreigner residing in Mexico, who may have been captured by Indians inhabiting the territory of either of the 2 Republics, nor to purchase or acquire horses, mules, cattle, or property of any kind, stolen within Mexican territory by such Indians.

And in the event of any person or persons, captured within Mexican territory by Indians, being carried into the territory of The United States, the Government of the latter engages and binds itself, in the most solemn manner, so soon as it shall know of such captives being within its territory, and shall be able so to do, through the faithful exercise of its influence and power, to rescue them and return them to their country, or deliver them to the agent or representative of the Mexican Government. The Mexican authorities will, as far as practicable, give to the Government of The United States notice of such captures; and its agent shall pay the expenses incurred in the maintenance and transmission of the rescued captives; who, in the meantime, shall be treated with the utmost hospitality by the American authorities at the place where they may be. But if the Government of The United States, before receiving such notice from Mexico, should obtain intelligence, through any other channel, of the existence of Mexican captives within its territory, it will proceed forthwith to effect their release and delivery to the Mexican agent as above stipulated.

For the purpose of giving to these stipulations the fullest possible efficacy, thereby affording the security and redress demanded by their true spirit and intent, the Government of The United States will now and hereafter pass, without unnecessary delay, and always vigilantly enforce, such laws as the nature of the subject may require. And finally, the sacredness of this obligation shall never be lost sight of by the said Government when providing for the removal of the Indians from any portion of the said territories, or for its being settled by citizens of The United States; but on the contrary, special care shall then be taken not to place its Indian occupants under the necessity of seeking new homes, by committing those invasions which The United States have solemnly obliged themselves to restrain.

XII. In consideration of the extension acquired by the boundaries of The United States, as defined in the Vth Article of the present Treaty, the Government of The United States engages to pay to that of the Mexican Republic the sum of 15,000,000 of dollars.

Immediately after this Treaty shall have been duly ratified by the Government of the Mexican Republic, the sum of 3,000,000 of dollars shall be paid to the said Government by that of The United States, at the city of Mexico, in the gold or silver coin of Mexico. The remaining 12,000,000 of dollars shall be paid at the same place, and in the same coin, in annual instalments of 3,000,000 of dollars each, together with interest on the same at the rate of 6 per centum per annum. This interest shall begin to run upon the whole sum of 12,000,000 from the day of the ratification of the present Treaty by the Mexican Government, and the first of the instalments shall be paid at the expiration of 1 year from the same day. Together with each annual instalment, as it falls due, the whole interest accruing on such instalment from the beginning shall also be paid.

XIII. The United States engage, moreover, to assume and pay to the claimants all the amounts now due to them, and those hereafter to become due, by reason of the claims already liquidated and decided against the Mexican Republic, under the Conventions between the 2 Republics, severally concluded on the 11th day of April, 1839, and on the 30th day of January, 1843: so that the Mexican Republic shall be absolutely exempt for the future from all expense whatever on account of the said claims.

XIV. The United States do furthermore discharge the Mexican Republic from all claims of citizens of The United States, not heretofore decided against the Mexican Government, which may have arisen previously to the date of the signature of this Treaty; which discharge shall be final and perpetual, whether the said claims be rejected or be allowed by the Board of Commissioners provided for in the following Article, and whatever shall be the total amount of those allowed.

XV. The United States, exonerating Mexico from all demands on account of the claims of their citizens mentioned in the preceding Article, and considering them entirely and for ever cancelled, whatever their amount may be, undertake to make satisfaction for the same, to an amount not exceeding three and one quarter millions of dollars. To ascertain the validity and amount of those claims, a Board of Commissioners shall be established by the Government of The United States, whose awards shall be final and conclusive; provided, that in deciding upon the validity of each claim, the Board shall be guided and governed by the principles and rules of decision prescribed by the 1st and Vth Articles of the unratified Convention, concluded at the city of Mexico on the 20th day of November, 1843;* and in no case shall an award be made in favour of any claim not embraced by these principles and rules.

If, in the opinion of the said Board of Commissioners, or of the claimants, any books, records, or documents in the possession or power of the Government of the Mexican Republic, shall be deemed necessary to the just decision of any claim, the commissioners, or the claimants through them, shall, within such period as Congress may designate, make an application in writing for the same, addressed to the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs, to be transmitted by the Secretary of State of The United States; and the Mexican Government engages, at the earliest possible moment after the receipt of such demand, to cause any of the books, records, or documents, so specified, which shall be in their possession or power, (or authenticated copies or extracts of the same,) to be transmitted to the said Secretary of State, who shall immediately deliver them over to the said Board of Commissioners: provided, that no such application shall be made by, or at the instance of, any claimant, until the facts which it is expected to prove by such books, records, or documents, shall have been stated under oath or affirmation.

XVI. Each of the Contracting Parties reserves to itself the entire right to fortify whatever point within its territory it may judge proper so to fortify for its security.

XVII. The Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation, concluded at the city of Mexico on the 5th day of April, A.D. 1831,* between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, except the Additional Article, and except so far as the stipulations of the said Treaty may be incompatible with any stipulations contained in the present Treaty, is hereby revived for the period of 8 years from the day of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty, with the same force and virtue as if incorporated therein; it being understood that each of the Contracting Parties reserves to itself the right at any time after the said period of 8 years shall have expired, to terminate the same by giving one year's notice of such intention to the other party.

XVIII. All supplies whatever for troops of The United States in Mexico, arriving at ports in the occupation of such troops previous to the final evacuation thereof, although subsequently to the restoration of the custom-houses at such ports, shall be entirely exempt from duties and charges of any kind; the Government of The United States hereby engaging and pledging its faith to establish, and vigilantly to enforce, all possible guards for securing the revenue of Mexico, by preventing the importation, under cover of this stipulation, of any articles other than such, both in kind and in quantity, as shall really be wanted for the use and consumption of the forces of The United States during the time they may remain in Mexico. To this end, it shall be the duty of all officers and agents of The United States to denounce to the Mexican authorities at the respective ports any attempts at a fraudulent abuse of this stipulation which they may know of or may have reason to suspect, and to give to such authorities all the aid in their power with regard thereto; and every such attempt, when duly proved and established by sentence of a competent tribunal, shall be punished by the confiscation of the property so attempted to be fraudulently introduced.

XIX. With respect to all merchandise, effects, and property whatsoever, imported into ports of Mexico whilst in the occupation of the forces of The United States, whether by citizens of either Republic, or by citizens or subjects of any neutral nation, the following rules shall be observed:

1. All such merchandise, effects, and property, if imported previously to the restoration of the Custom Houses to the Mexican authorities, as stipulated for in the Article III of this Treaty, shall be exempt from confiscation, although the importation of the same be prohibited by the Mexican tariff.

2. The same perfect exemption shall be enjoyed by all such merchandise, effects, and property, imported subsequently to the restoration of the Custom Houses, and previously to the 60 days fixed in the following Article for the coming into force of the Mexican tariff at such ports respectively; the said merchandise, effects, and property being, however, at the time of their importation, subject to the payment of duties, as provided for in the said following Article.

3. All merchandise, effects, and property described in the 2 rules foregoing shall, during their continuance at the place of importation, and upon their leaving such place for the interior, be exempt from all duty, tax, or impost of every kind, under whatsoever title or denomination. Nor shall they be there subjected to any charge whatsoever upon the sale thereof.

4. All merchandise, effects, and property described in the 1st and 2nd Rules, which shall have been removed to any place in the interior whilst such place was in the occupation of the forces of The United States, shall, during their continuance therein, be exempt from all tax upon the sale or consumption thereof, and from every kind of impost or contribution, under whatsoever title or denomination.

5. But if any merchandise, effects, or property, described in the 1st and 2nd Rules, shall be removed to any place not occupied at the time by the forces of The United States, they shall, upon their introduction into such place, or upon their sale or consumption there, be subject to the same duties which, under the Mexican laws, they would be required to pay in such cases if they had been imported in time of peace, through the maritime Custom Houses, and had there paid the duties conformably with the Mexican tariff.

6. The owners of all merchandise, effects, or property described in the 1st and 2nd Rules, and existing in any port of Mexico, shall have the right to reship the same, exempt from all tax, impost, or contribution whatever.

With respect to the metals, or other property, exported from any Mexican port whilst in the occupation of the forces of the United States, and previously to the restoration of the Custom House at such port, no person shall be required by the Mexican authorities, whether general or State, to pay any tax, duty, or contribution upon any such exportation, or in any manner to account for the same to the said authorities.

XX. Through consideration for the interests of commerce generally, it is agreed, that if less than 60 days should elapse between the date of the signature of this Treaty and the restoration of the Custom Houses, conformably with the stipulation in the 3rd Article, in such case all merchandise, effects, and property whatsoever, arriving at the Mexican ports after the restoration of the said Custom Houses, and previously to the expiration of 60 days after the day of the signature of this Treaty, shall be admitted to entry; and no other duties shall be levied thereon than the duties established by the tariff found in force at such Custom Houses at the time of the restoration of the same. And to all such merchandise, effects, and property, the rules established by the preceding article shall apply.

XXI. If unhappily any disagreement should hereafter arise between the Governments of the 2 Republics, whether with respect to the interpretation of any stipulation in this Treaty, or with respect to any other particular concerning the political or commercial relations of the 2 nations, the said Governments, in the name of those nations, do promise to each other that they will endeavour, in the most sincere and earnest manner, to settle the differences so arising, and to preserve the state of peace and friendship in which the 2 countries are now placing themselves; using, for this end, mutual representations and pacific negotiations. And if, by these means, they should not be enabled to come to an agreement, a resort shall not, on this account, be had to reprisals, aggression, or hostility of any kind, by the one Republic against the other, until the Government of that which deems itself aggrieved shall have maturely considered, in the spirit of peace and good neighbourship, whether it would not be better that such difference should be settled by the arbitration of commissioners appointed on each side, or by that of a friendly nation. And should such course be proposed by either party, it shall be acceded to by the other, unless deemed by it altogether incompatible with the nature of the difference, or the circumstances of the case.

XXII. If (which is not to be expected, and which God forbid!) war should unhappily break out between the 2 Republics, they do now, with a view to such calamity, solemnly pledge themselves to each other and to the world, to observe the following rules: absolutely, where the nature of the subject permits; and as closely as possible in all cases where such absolute observance shall be impossible.

1. The merchants of either Republic then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain 12 months (for those dwelling in the interior), and 6 months (for those dwelling at the seaports), to collect their debts and settle their affairs; during which periods, they shall enjoy the same protection, and be on the same footing, in all respects, as the citizens or subjects of the most friendly nations; and, at the expiration thereof, or at any time before, they shall have full liberty to depart, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance: conforming therein to the same laws which the citizens or subjects of the most friendly nations are required to conform to. Upon the entrance of the armies of either nation into the territories of the other, women and children, ecclesiastics, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, merchants, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all persons whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments unmolested in their persons. Nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their cattle taken, nor their fields wasted, by the armed force into whose power, by the events of war, they may happen to fall; but if the necessity arise to take anything from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at an equitable price. All churches, hospitals, schools, colleges, libraries, and other establishments, for charitable and beneficent purposes, shall be respected, and all persons connected with the same protected in the discharge of their duties, and the pursuit of their vocations.

2. In order that the fate of prisoners of war may be alleviated, all such practices as those of sending them into distant, inclement, or unwholesome districts, or crowding them into close and noxious places, shall be studiously avoided. They shall not be confined in dungeons, prison-ships, or prisons; nor be put in irons, or bound or otherwise restrained in the use of their limbs. The officers shall enjoy liberty on their paroles, within convenient districts, and have comfortable quarters; and the common soldiers shall be disposed in cantonments, open and extensive enough for air and exercise, and lodged in barracks as roomy and good as are provided by the party in whose power they are, for its own troops. But if any officer shall break his parole by leaving the district so assigned him, or any other prisoner shall escape from the limits of his cantonment, after they shall have been designated to him, such individual, officer, or other prisoner, shall forfeit so much of the benefit of this Article as provides for his liberty on parole or in cantonment. And if any officer so breaking his parole, or any common soldier so escaping from the limits assigned him, shall afterwards be found in arms, previously to his being regularly exchanged, the person so offending shall be dealt with according to the established laws of war. The officers shall be daily furnished by the party in whose power they are, with as many rations, and of the same articles, as are allowed, either in kind or by commutation, to officers of equal rank in its own army; and all others shall be daily furnished with such ration as is allowed to a common soldier in his own service: the value of all which supplies shall, at the close of the war, or at periods to be agreed upon between the respective commanders, be paid by the other party, on a mutual adjustment of accounts for the subsistence of prisoners; and such accounts shall not be mingled with or set off against any others, nor the balance due on them be withheld, as a compensation or reprisal for any cause whatever, real or pretended. Each party shall be allowed to keep a commissary of prisoners, appointed by itself, with every cantonment of prisoners, in possession of the other; which commissary shall see the prisoners as often as he pleases; shall be allowed to receive, exempt from all duties or taxes, and to distribute, whatever comforts may be sent to them by their friends; and shall be free to transmit his reports in open letters to the party by whom he is employed.

And it is declared that neither the pretence that war dissolves all Treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending the solemn covenant contained in this Article. On the contrary, the state of war is precisely that for which it is provided; and during which, its stipulations are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged obligations under the law of nature or nations.

XXIII. This Treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof; and by the President of the Mexican Republic, with the previous approbation of its General Congress: and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the city of Washington, or at the seat of Government of Mexico, in 4 months from the date of the signature hereof, or sooner if practicable.

In faith whereof, we, the respective Plenipotentiaries, have signed this Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Limits, and Settlement; and have hereunto affixed our seals respectively. Done in quintuplicate, at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the 2nd day of February, in the year of our Lord 1848.

And whereas the said Treaty, as amended, has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications of the same were exchanged at Querétaro on the 30th day of May last, by Ambrose H. Sevier and Nathan Clifford, Commissioners on the part of the Government of The United States, and by Señor Don Louis de la Rosa, Minister of Relations of the Mexican Republic, on the part of that Government:

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, James K. Polk, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof, may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by The United States and the citizens thereof.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of The United States to be affixed.

*DISCOURS du Roi des Belges, à l'Ouverture des 2 Chambres.—
Bruxelles, le 26 Juin, 1848.*

MESSIEURS,

Je suis heureux de me retrouver au milieu des Représentants de la Nation. En présence des agitations qui remuent si profondément l'Europe, la Belgique est demeurée calme, confiante et forte. Il me tardait d'exprimer publiquement ce que mon cœur en a ressenti de gratitude et de juste fierté ! Les changements survenus dans l'Etat politique de divers pays n'ont aucunement altéré nos bonnes relations internationales. Nos rapports officiels avec la République Française se trouvent établis dans les termes d'une bienveillance mutuelle. De toutes parts, nous avons reçu des témoignages de sympathie et d'estime.

Des lois importantes ont marqué la dernière session. Le cercle des droits politiques a été considérablement élargi, et la première application de la réforme électorale a prouvé que nous n'avions pas trop présumé de la sagesse de la nation.

L'organisation de la garde civique se poursuit avec activité ; l'excellent esprit des populations en facilite et en assure le succès.

Les circonstances ont imposé au pays des charges extraordinaires. Il en a compris la nécessité et les a courageusement supportées. Au moyen des mesures financières votées dans la dernière session, notre patriotique armée a été maintenue sur un pied défensif respectable ; nous avons alimenté le travail ; le trésor public a pu remplir fidèlement toutes ses obligations ; le fardeau de la dette flottante a cessé de peser sur le crédit. L'avenir récompensera les sacrifices du passé.

Les subsides destinés aux besoins extraordinaires n'ont été votés que jusqu'au 1^{er} Septembre. Mais, grâce à la sage réserve que nous nous sommes imposée dans les dépenses, la création de nouvelles charges ne sera pas nécessaire ; et si des complications imprévues n'y viennent faire obstacle, les crédits votés suffiront pour atteindre la fin de l'année.

Tous nos efforts, Messieurs, doivent tendre à conserver à la Belgique une bonne situation financière. Là réside en grande partie sa force et sa sécurité. Le budget normal des dépenses sera réduit.

Mon Gouvernement est résolu à opérer successivement des économies efficaces.

Plusieurs impôts devront être modifiés dans leur base. Nous ne perdrons pas de vue dans la répartition des charges ce qui est dû de ménagement à ceux dont le travail seul entretient l'existence. Nous continuerons de rechercher avec une sollicitude vraie, toutes les mesures propres à améliorer et à relever la condition des classes laborieuses.

Nous traversons une époque remplie d'épreuves difficiles pour la Société Européenne. La Belgique ne se laissera pas détourner de la voie sage et sûre dans laquelle elle est entrée. Elle a pu, par un heureux accord, concilier la stabilité avec le progrès, l'ordre avec la pratique de toutes les libertés. Pour se maintenir dans cette voie, pour accomplir avec succès sa mission de paix et de travail, il suffit à la nation d'avoir foi en elle-même et de rester unie. Vous, Messieurs, qui êtes l'expression fidèle de ses sentiments et de ses vœux, vous, à qui elle a remis le dépôt de ses plus chers intérêts, vous répondrez dignement à son attente ; vous accorderez au Gouvernement le concours bienveillant dont il a besoin pour remplir sa tâche difficile, et, de nouveau, nos communs efforts auront bien mérité du pays.

DISCOURS du Roi des Pays-Bas, à l'Ouverture de la Session des Etats Généraux.—La Haye, le 16 Octobre, 1848.

NOBLES ET PUISSANTS SEIGNEURS,

Vous approuverez sans doute qu'à l'ouverture de cette session je m'abstienne de suivre l'usage établi de tracer un aperçu, comme introduction à vos travaux législatifs, de la situation du pays et des différents projets de loi qui vous seront présentés.

En effet, la mission de cette assemblée est exceptionnelle et transitoire de sa nature, et ces 2 Chambres des Etats-Généraux seront sous peu remplacées par d'autres Chambres composées et élues d'après les dispositions qui, lors de la révision de la loi-fondamentale accomplie dans la session qui vient de finir, ont été insérées dans cette loi et seront bientôt solennellement promulguées.

Toutefois, en cette occasion, je ne puis m'abstenir, nobles et puissants Seigneurs, de vous exprimer cette conviction que, si l'état général de l'Europe est de nature à faire naître de graves inquiétudes, divers signes favorables se manifestent dans la situation de notre patrie.

Soit que je considère nos relations avec les Puissances Etrangères, soit que je porte mes regards sur nos possessions dans les autres parties du monde, ou sur les intérêts du commerce, de la navigation, de l'agriculture et des autres branches de l'industrie, à côté de plusieurs symptômes inquiétants je rencontre aussi un grand nombre de motifs de consolation et d'encouragement. J'apprécie surtout, parmi ces derniers, la manière exemplaire dont a été commencée, poursuivie et accomplie la grande et importante œuvre de la révision de la loi fondamentale.

Tandis que tant d'Etats en Europe sont ébranlés jusque dans leur base par de violentes secousses, et que les rues de maintes cités sont teintes du sang des citoyens, notre pays a su se préserver de la fureur des dissensions civiles et des calamités qu'entraînent le désordre et l'anarchie. Bien plus, notre pays a joui de cet avantage que le pouvoir législatif, libre dans son action, avec une entière indépendance et dans la plus parfaite harmonie, là aussi où régnait une différence d'opinions, a accompli paisiblement sa vaste mission qui devait être si décisive pour les destinées du pays.

Au sujet de cette heureuse issue de l'œuvre toujours critique de la révision complète du pacte fondamental d'un Etat, j'ai fait exprimer, lors de la clôture de la dernière session, ma reconnaissance aux 2 Chambres des Etats-Généraux qui ont prêté à cette œuvre leur actif et vigilant concours. Mais pour moi-même et pour cette circonstance solennelle, je me suis réservé de remercier tous mes bien-aimés concitoyens de la modération, de la confiance, du respect pour les lois et l'ordre public, comme aussi de l'attachement à ma personne et à ma dynastie, que pendant la longue période exigée pour l'accomplissement de ces importants travaux législatifs ils ont manifestés sans restriction et avec tant de constance jusqu'à ce jour.

C'est ainsi, nobles et puissants Seigneurs, que notre édifice politique, tout en restant établi sur ses mêmes bases, a vu ses dispositions intérieures modifiées d'après les besoins de l'époque, et coordonnées de manière que les améliorations que l'avenir exigerait, puissent y être introduites sans produire la moindre secousse. Pour entrer dans cette nouvelle période, le concours de vos nobles puissances m'est encore nécessaire, et c'est ce concours qu'avec une pleine confiance je viens invoquer aujourd'hui pour le salut de la patrie.

Pour que la Néerlande prospère dans la nouvelle voie qui lui est ouverte, il faut que chacun de ses habitants ait la conscience intime des saints devoirs qui lui sont imposés, et soit animé de cet amour de la patrie toujours prêt à faire pour elle les plus grands sacrifices.

Le passé me fait nourrir à cet égard, nobles et puissants Seigneurs, le meilleur espoir pour l'avenir.

Si de nouveaux temps d'épreuve nous sont encore réservés, je suis convaincu que chacun, avec l'aide de la Providence, fera de courageux efforts pour les surmonter. Nous saurons détourner du sol de la patrie les troubles, le désordre, les dissensions de quelque nature qu'elles puissent être, et nous transmettrons intact à nos descendants le gage qui nous est confié.

Que le Tout-Puissant bénisse la constance de nos efforts!

*DISCOURS du Roi de Suède, à la Clôture de la Diète.—
Stockholm, le 24 Octobre, 1848.*

MESSIEURS,

L'EPOQUE qui vient de s'écouler depuis l'ouverture de vos délibérations, occupera une place remarquable dans les fastes de l'histoire. La plupart des états de l'Europe ont souffert de violentes commotions, et les questions sociales qui s'agitent entre les Gouvernements et les Peuples, n'atteindront peut-être pas de longtemps encore leur solution définitive. Rendons grâce à la bonté Divine de nous avoir épargné des secousses nuisibles à la tranquillité de l'état comme au bien-être de chaque individu, et réjouissons-nous de la modération et du calme, dont le peuple Suédois a fait preuve au milieu des tempêtes qui ont ébranlé le monde. Ce n'est qu'en persévérant avec la même mesure que nous pouvons espérer de voir réalisés, dans l'intérêt général, nos vœux communs pour l'amélioration de nos institutions.

Ma reconnaissance vous est acquise, Messieurs, pour la noble spontanéité avec laquelle vous vous êtes ralliés à ma décision de concourir au maintien de l'indépendance menacée de nos Voisins et Alliés. Des résultats satisfaisants ont déjà été obtenus, sans que les fonds alloués par vous ayant été épuisés, et nous pouvons envisager l'avenir d'un oeil plus tranquille. Une Convention d'armistice d'une durée assez prolongée a été conclue, sous ma médiation, entre les parties belligérantes, et nous pouvons nous flatter de l'espoir, que la voie est ouverte aux négociations pour amener une paix juste et durable.

Je n'ai cessé de suivre avec un vif intérêt vos délibérations au sujet de notre représentation nationale. L'expérience ayant démontré la difficulté de parvenir à concilier, sans mon intermédiaire, les opinions divergentes, je vous ai présenté un projet, lequel, en admettant une extension considérable du droit électoral, contient, en même temps les garanties nécessaires pour le maintien et le développement régulier de l'ordre social. Je me tiens assuré, Messieurs, qu'animés d'un désir sincère de terminer, d'une manière satisfaisante, cette grave question, vous lui vouerez, lors de votre prochaine réunion, l'attention qu'elle réclame si impérieusement.

C'est avec une vive satisfaction que j'ai appris votre décision d'accorder de nouvelles allocations pour améliorer et multiplier les écoles primaires. Vous avez donné ainsi un témoignage honorable de votre zèle pour l'éducation des générations futures.

Les questions importantes dont vous vous êtes occupés, n'ont point pu obtenir toutes, pendant cette Diète, une solution satisfaisante. Je ne cesserai cependant de les suivre avec un intérêt particulier, et de concourir à faciliter leur décision dans un sens conforme aux intérêts de la nation.

En déclarant maintenant vos travaux terminés, j'appelle sur les Etats Généraux les bénédictions du Ciel, et je vous renouvelle, Messieurs, les assurances de toute ma bienveillance royale.

DISCOURS du Président, à l'Ouverture de la Diète Ordinaire de la Suisse.—Le 3 Juillet, 1848.

MESSIEURS, CHERS ET FIDELES CONFEDERES!

PEU de jours seulement se sont écoulés depuis la clôture de la Diète de l'année dernière jusqu'à l'ouverture de la Diète de cette année qui nous réunit de nouveau dans cette enceinte à cette heure solennelle. Mais ce court espace de temps ne peut diminuer l'importance de ce jour ni la joie que procure le retour des députés du peuple Suisse des 22 cantons. Aujourd'hui, comme toujours, soyez les bienvenus, et aujourd'hui comme de tout temps recevez, dans le sentiment d'un amour invariable de la patrie, le salut d'amitié et de fraternité fédérales, vraies et sincères.

Nous avons traversé une année importante. En calculant d'après le temps l'espace qui s'est écoulé depuis la dernière réunion de la Diète, il n'y a qu'une année; mais si l'on tient compte des événements, il y a plus qu'un âge d'homme. Car le changement qui a eu lieu au milieu de nous, changement de la plus haute importance pour la Confédération et son existence ultérieure; la lutte violente qui peu de temps après a fait le tour chez tous les peuples de l'Europe, et qui, rapide comme l'éclair, a anéanti une dynastie, détruit le système politique qui était en vigueur jusqu'ici, brisé les vieilles entraves qui s'opposaient au progrès, fait tomber en ruine l'antique édifice social longtemps maintenu debout par des moyens artificiels et qui, avec une vitesse qu'on ne pouvait pressentir, a poussé les peuples à la conquête de leur liberté: tels sont, chers confédérés, les faits qui, réunis à bien d'autres encore, se sont passés dans l'espace des 12 derniers mois qui viennent de s'écouler. Ce sont des événements dont on trouvera difficilement le pendant dans l'histoire; ce sont des change-ments gigantesques, tels qu'aucune époque n'en a vu de pareils. A ces événements se rattache une nouvelle ère sociale ; ils nous font concevoir le doux espoir d'un avenir heureux et durable pour le bien-être des nations, si l'ordre public et la justice continuent à être leurs gardiens, si elles sont guidées par une volonté honnête et un pouvoir désintéressé. Les maux qui, d'après les lois éternelles de la nature, se manifestent dans tous les enfantements et se sont fait sentir dans cette révolution sociale, disparaîtront, il faut l'espérer, plus tôt que ne le désire la perversité des uns, plus tôt que ne le prédit la folie des autres. L'espèce humaine, il est vrai, peut se tromper, mais elle ne se perd jamais, et la liberté, lorsqu'elle est assise sur des bases solides, cicatrise bientôt les blessures et fait bien vite oublier les peines qu'on a endurées pour la conquérir.

En face de perspectives de cette nature, la Suisse qui possède avec sûreté depuis des siècles ce que d'autres peuples cherchent maintenant seulement à conquérir, peut contempler avec joie le passé et porter avec assurance ses regards sur l'avenir. Elle doit saluer avec sincérité les événements qui la rapprochent encore davantage des nations avec lesquelles elle a entretenu jusqu'ici des relations d'amitié. Elevés par nos propres forces et renforcés de nouveau par la conscience de nos droits, en possession paisible des biens que nous avons hérités de nos pères, nous sommes aujourd'hui réconciliés et heureux, sans réminiscence d'une querelle qui a été bien vite oubliée. Il est vrai qu'il nous reste encore des vœux à faire et des espérances à concevoir ; mais ils ne sont pas de nature à exciter en nous la jalousie ou l'envie envers d'autres nations ; car la réalisation de nos modestes vœux, de nos espérances sans prétention, dépend uniquement de nous. Ce qui nous manque ne peut nous être apporté de l'étranger ; il faut que nous l'obtenions chez nous, au milieu de nous, par notre propre volonté et notre propre action. Nous atteindrons sûrement ce but si, vis-à-vis de l'étranger, nous demeurons, quant à l'action, dans une stricte impartialité au milieu des efforts que font les peuples ; si de fait nous ne les favorisons ni ne les entravons et que nous exigeons la même impartialité pour nos affaires intérieures, si nous repoussons décidément et avec tout le poids de notre force morale et physique tout empiètement arbitraire sur notre territoire. A l'intérieur, si fidèles à notre origine, nous suivons avec loyauté et unis par les liens d'une concorde fraternelle la voie que nous nous sommes frayée et que nous avons déjà parcourue avec tant de bonheur. L'appréciation équitable et la réalisation consciencieuse de ces principes sont une garantie pour le bonheur durable de la Suisse, c'est à dire pour son indépendance vis-à-vis de l'étranger, pour sa liberté et son union à l'intérieur. La Suisse a son histoire à elle ; elle ne doit, elle ne peut fermer l'oreille aux enseignements qu'elle lui donne. Nous n'avons aucun droit ni aucun sujet quelconque de l'oublier. Sous ce rapport, comme sous bien d'autres, la nation Suisse occupe une place unique dans le monde et ce n'est certes pas un de ses derniers avantages. Si nous restons fidèles à nous-mêmes, nous ne nous précipiterons pas au-delà du but assigné à nos propres efforts et nous ne nous égarerons jamais dans ce labyrinthe dans lequel se montrent des ténèbres qui entravent le progrès, ou dans de fausses voies qui conduisent à une perte inévitable. La Suisse doit continuer à progresser et à se développer ultérieurement; c'est un besoin dont nous tous nous sentons la nécessité; c'est un sentiment qui vit dans la conscience de chacun et de tous. Mais ce que nous devons éviter, c'est de nous exposer au péril, sciemment ou à notre insu; que cet avertissement soit profondément gravé dans notre esprit.

L'œuvre terminée par la Diète récemment dissoute attend la reconnaissance et l'approbation du peuple Suisse. Cette œuvre nous fournira l'occasion de nous rendre compte à nous-mêmes si nous nous sommes bien compris réciproquement, si nous avons le même but en vue, ou bien si nous voulons nous diviser et nous rendre impuissants par cette division.

Je ne puis dissimuler que la voie est difficile, car ce n'est pas une tâche facile pour l'homme que de mettre des bornes à ses vœux et à ses opinions, de les sacrifier sans contrainte aux vœux et aux opinions des autres. Mais néanmoins aucune œuvre de concorde et de progrès organique ne peut prospérer sans cette déférence au bien public. L'atonie politique seule ou l'orgueil despotique peut se passer de cette déférence; or le Suisse repousse l'atonie politique et le despotisme, car il est étranger à l'une comme à l'autre. Notre seul guide est le besoin de la concorde, besoin aussi vieux que notre histoire et aussi fort que l'amour que nous portons à la patrie. L'histoire de notre origine et de notre développement comme nation l'a déjà prouvé souvent d'une manière suffisante; la dernière page de cette histoire vient encore de le buriner en traits indélébiles. Nous ne pouvons, nous ne voulons pas rompre désormais avec ce qui s'est confirmé dans les anciens jours et avec les événements qui se sont passés récemment. Il serait téméraire d'y songer. La Suisse entière protesterait contre cette audace.

C'est pourquoi, lors même que quelques-uns cherchent à faire prévaloir leurs propres vœux et leurs opinions particulières, lors même qu'il y a des citoyens qui refusent à la nouvelle constitution leur adhésion, et quant à la forme et quant au fond, d'autres qui la repoussent parce qu'elle promet trop aux uns et trop peu aux autres, nous avons néanmoins la conviction que la généralité, comme telle, ne prêterait pas l'oreille à des insinuations de cette nature, insinuations qui l'empêcheraient d'examiner mûrement cette œuvre et de l'apprécier sous toutes ses faces.

soutenions que le projet de constitution satisfait réellement tous les vœux et toutes les demandes que peuvent faire avec plus ou moins de raison 25 populations séparées les unes des autres d'après leur organisme intérieur et leurs besoins individuels. Nous sommes bien loin de le prétendre et nous sommes tout aussi loin d'espérer qu'elle recevra généralement la reconnaissance d'une population qui compte plus de 2,000,000 de citoyens dont les opinions sont si divergentes. Cela n'est pas possible. En revanche, ce qui est garanti par la nouvelle constitution mise en perspective et ce qui peut être accordé sans léser les uns comme sans faire peser une contrainte despotique sur les autres, c'est qu'elle laisse réellement et non seulement d'après son nom, subsister chaque canton faisant partie de l'alliance fédérale, et conserve à son profit ce qui, lui étant élevé, l'affaiblirait sans augmenter la force de la Confédération. Elle donne à la Confédération la force nécessaire pour prévenir toute décadence future sans cependant anéantir la souveraineté cantonale dont l'action s'exercera à l'intérieur, souveraineté sans laquelle la Confédération ne serait qu'une chimère ; elle ne restreint pas les Cantons au point de les réduire à l'inaction ; en un mot, elle forme une unité de tous les éléments divers qui la composent et les laisse en même temps subsister dans leur individualité propre d'une manière qui, d'après la conviction intime de ceux qui ont été appelés à coopérer à la construction de cet édifice social, répond à l'essence de la Confédération formée d'Etats souverains, en tenant compte de l'origine et du développement historiques, tant de la Confédération même que des Cantons et de la grande diversité qui y règne, circonstances qui méritent d'être appréciées à leur juste valeur. Frayant et aplanissant la voie partout où le besoin l'exigeait, où la possibilité le permettait, créant tout à neuf et opérant des changements partout où le passé le demandait et où l'avenir pouvait le désirer, la nouvelle constitution laisse néanmoins exister la souveraineté cantonale avec tous ses éléments de vie et en même temps elle remet entre les mains de la Confédération les moyens nécessaires sans lesquels on ne pourrait atteindre à une unité forte, sans lesquels il serait impossible de donner le jour à un être vivant de sa propre vie ; l'un dévorerait l'autre ou s'étiolerait jusqu'à son dépérissement complet.

On se disputera sans doute en théorie sur la question de savoir si l'autorité préconsultative a bien fait d'avoir égard au présent, dans son développement historique, sans méconnaître en même temps les droits de l'avenir, ou bien s'il vaut mieux chercher son nouveau salut dans le renversement subit de la constitution fondamentale actuelle. Or le point de vue politique et pratique, ainsi que l'expérience acquise par les leçons de l'histoire, se prononce d'une manière absolue contre cette dernière alternative et nous engage d'une manière tout aussi précise à suivre la direction opposée. Mais à peine avons-nous besoin de ces enseignements. La conviction que nous avons de la haute importance d'une unité forte, conviction qui a été renouvelée en nous, est trop générale, notre ancien attachement à notre état particulier qui a traversé les siècles, est encore trop vivace pour que nous puissions nous écarter de la véritable voie. Conservons cette conviction et cet attachement; ils nous maintiendront sur le bon chemin. Nous parviendrons assurément au but si nous sommes justes envers nous-mêmes, justes les uns envers les autres, si chacun n'exige rien de trop et n'offre rien de trop peu; en un mot si nous manifestons sérieusement la volonté de donner une plus grande force à l'antique Confédération. N'hésitons pas à exprimer ce que nous sentons tous, les choses sur lesquelles nous sommes tous d'accord, et avec nous, sans doute, toutes les nations amies de la Suisse. Dans cette enceinte sacrée j'engage tous les confédérés à bannir toute illusion, à s'abstenir de toute demande exagérée, de toute opposition inopportune, et à réfléchir que nous ne pouvons reculer couverts de honte, ni marcher témérairement en avant, mais que nous devons nous tenir strictement collés à ce qui, après des désirs longtemps manifestés et des peines nombreuses, peut être réellement mis à exécution.

Nos efforts doivent toujours tendre vers les biens les plus élevés et la plus grande perfection, mais il ne faut pas que nous les cherchions en dehors des limites du possible, que nous aspirions témérairement à un but que nous ne pouvons atteindre et que nous perdions des choses qui nous paraissent moins parfaites, mais que cependant nous pouvons obtenir. Lors même que ce danger nous paraîtrait pour le moment imaginaire, nous ne pouvons néanmoins oublier les leçons que nous a données le passé ni les dangers que pourrait nous apporter l'avenir. Car quoique bien des choses se soient présentées récemment sous un aspect plus favorable, les inquiétudes ne sont cependant pas dissipées pour toujours. L'orage, quoique ce ne soit pas d'une manière immédiate, est encore suspendu sur nos têtes et se traîne à l'horizon politique, et peut-être non seulement il se condensera, mais il pourrait encore nous atteindre. Nous admettons des possibilités, car nous savons que celui-là seul peut éviter à temps le danger qui suit l'apercevoir de près. La Suisse doit s'approprier sans crainte cette mesure de sûreté. Mais il faut aussi qu'elle sache que nous ne serons forts et que nous ne pourrons résister aux orages et aux tempêtes que lorsque nous nous serons frayé à nous mêmes une voie nette et que nous aurons réglé en bons pères de famille nos affaires intérieures; lorsqu'aucun acte rétrograde, aucune mésintelligence ne viendront briser notre volonté générale, notre force commune. Nous parviendrons à ce but si, par une entente fraternelle, nous adoptons la nouvelle constitution pour loi fondamentale; c'est à ce but que nous

C'est pourquoi, chers confédérés, prenons courage, jetons rapidement un pont sur l'ancien rivage pendant qu'il est encore affermi. Ce pont sera assez fort pour nous conduire à une vie plus robuste, à une union plus forte et à un nouveau progrès. Sur le terrain aplani de cette constitution fédérale, sous l'égide tutélaire des institutions améliorées qu'elle engendrera, nous pourrons en toute confiance marcher en avant et laisser passer sans crainte sur nos têtes les orages qui pourront éclater. Je n'ai vraiment pas le courage de songer au sort qui nous serait réservé si nous ne tenions pas compte des sérieux enseignements de l'époque actuelle, après que nous avons abattu jusque dans ses fondements l'édifice antique et d'ailleurs vermoulu de nos institutions fédérales et que nous avons généralement reconnu et exprimé le besoin d'en créer de nouvelles.

Je puis me dispenser de scruter l'avenir, lorsque je considère l'esprit sain et vigoureux du peuple Suisse. J'aime mieux porter mes regards sur nos alpes verdoyantes, sur nos riches vallées où règnent aujourd'hui, comme toujours, l'industrie, l'activité habituelles, ces compagnes nécessaires de notre bien-être national, qui sont des sources naturelles auxquelles nous allons puiser. Cet aspect réjouissant est d'autant plus sublime qu'ici nous n'avons pas à combattre les êtres monstrueux qui exercent presque partout leurs ravages. La Suisse, au milieu de l'anarchie qui règne presque partout, jouit du bonheur digne d'envie de figurer parmi le petit nombre de pays où n'ont pu pénétrer ni cette maladie ni les suites qui l'accompagnent et qui sont tout aussi dangereuses. La Suisse, plus Suisse aujourd'hui qu'elle ne l'a été longtemps auparavant, présente à coup sûr un spectacle réjouissant, même dans l'imperfection de son état social.

A l'étranger, nos relations de droit public avec les nations n'ont éprouvé aucune espèce d'interruption dans ces derniers temps; à l'intérieur, l'ordre, le droit et la loi règnent dans toute leur antique vigueur et protègent l'homme libre ainsi que la famille. L'agriculture, l'éducation du bétail, l'exploitation de nos alpes, ces éléments principaux de notre bien-être matériel, n'ont pas cessé d'être florissantes. L'industrie, le commerce et la circulation n'ont pas éprouvé non plus de contre-coup d'une nature générale et dangereuse. Là où la stagnation s'est fait sentir, c'est à la suite de mesures prises par l'étranger et devenues indispensables dans les relations que la circulation entre les peuples civilisés rend nécessaires.

Notre état financier, sans être bien riche et surabondant, est cependant convenablement régularisé, et avec une sage économie, nos finances suffiront à couvrir tous nos besoins. Nos écoles et tous nos établissements d'instruction publique continuent à être florissants.

Le manque de travail ou plutôt la dégénération de l'amour du travail qui est généralement nécessaire à l'homme, n'a pas provoqué chez nous des mesures extraordinaires d'une nature permanente; au contraire, sous ce rapport ont pu suffire les sources régulières que présentent les besoins ordinaires et la protection des lois de police habituelle qui leur prêtent leur appui.

Les sacrifices qu'ont exigés nécessairement des uns et des autres nos derniers efforts pour dompter les éléments hostiles à notre commune patrie n'ont nullement excédé la mesure de nos forces, nulle part ils n'ont laissé des traces indélébiles de dévastation. Il est vrai que nous avons à déplorer la perte de plusieurs de nos fils et de nos frères; mais comme le Suisse fait volontiers le sacrifice de sa vie pour le bien de la patrie; comme les survivants se sont chargés bénévolement et avec amour des veuves, des orphelins et des blessés, le souvenir de ces événements n'est pas de nature non plus à couvrir de deuil l'image rassérénée de la patrie commune.

Malgré les imperfections et les défauts de l'ancien pacte, malgré les ébranlements et les changements auxquels nous avons assisté de loin ou de près, la situation de la patrie commune ne présente pas un sombre spectacle; il est au contraire bien plus réjouissant que celui que nous offrent la plupart des Etats de l'Europe; si déjà maintenant nous pouvons nous applaudir de cet état de choses, à quelle douce attente ne pouvons-nous pas nous livrer pour l'avenir, quel agréable espoir ne pouvons-nous pas concevoir, lorsque de toutes parts l'ordre légal, la tranquillité seront rétablis en Europe et que la nouvelle constitution qui nous offre un terrain si fertile pour tout progrès et pour le bien-être général matériel et politique du peuple Suisse sera introduite dans notre patrie. Mon dernier vœu, qui est aussi le vôtre, c'est que ces espérances se réalisent bientôt et qu'elles fondent d'une manière durable le bonheur de la patrie commune, pour notre salut et celui de nos descendants.

Avec cet espoir nous prendrons congé du passé et nous nous avancerons dans l'avenir, dont l'aurore nous apparaît sous des couleurs si riantes.

Nourrissant cet espoir, je déclare ouverte la session ordinaire de l'année 1848.

Je vous invite, chers, fidèles Confédérés à confirmer encore une fois l'ancien pacte fédéral par notre serment.

SPEECH of the Hospodar of Wallachia, on the Opening of the General Assembly.—Bucharest, January 29, 1848.

MESSIEURS LES DEPUTES DE L'ASSEMBLEE GENERALE,

EN vous revoyant réunis autour de moi, j'éprouve la satisfaction que donnent une confiance mutuelle et des services communs rendus à la patrie.

Vos travaux de la session dernière, qui sera consignée avec honneur dans nos annales, ont déjà porté une grande partie de leurs fruit.

Dix mille familles dont vous avez brisé les fers bénissent votre nom, en goûtant les bienfaits de la liberté, et leur faible tribut ajoute chaque jour au nombre des affranchis. C'est sans doute un grand sujet de bonheur pour nous tous de pouvoir penser que dans peu d'années la terre Valaque ne nourrira plus que des hommes libres.

L'instruction publique, en ce qui concerne les écoles primaires et élémentaires dans nos villes et communes, a déjà reçu toutes les améliorations qu'elle réclamait. J'ai tout lieu d'espérer que bientôt je serai parvenu à surmonter aussi les difficultés que présente l'organisation de l'enseignement supérieur, afin que nos fils ne soient plus obligés de s'expatrier à un âge où les souvenirs du sol natal, trop faibles encore, finissent par s'effacer, pour faire place à des impressions qui les rendent ordinairement étrangers parmi les leurs et aux affaires de leur pays.

La loi que vous avez votée sur l'amélioration du sort du petit clergé, et sur la régularisation des revenus de la métropole et des évéchés, a reçu en partie son exécution. Nous pouvons espérer que ces dispositions salutaires recevront, dans le courant de cette année, leur entière application.

La réunion de nos douanes avec celles de la Moldavie a levé les entraves qui empêchaient, au détriment des 2 pays, le libre échange de leurs produits, en même tems qu'elle a apporté une augmentation à nos revenus. Le prix obtenu aux dernières enchères effectuée dans la capitale de la Moldavie, a dépassé, pour la part qui nous revient dans le produit de cette ferme, celui obtenu les années précédentes, non obstant la réserve faite à l'égard de l'exportation du bétail.

Les sommes que vous avez allouées pour faire remplacer par un système régulier et économique le mode vicieux qu'on suit dans l'exploitation de nos salines, sont destinées à nous réaliser des bénéfices considérables.

Les travaux qui y ont été exécutés dans le courant de l'année qui vient de finir, ont dépassé toutes nos espérances; ils nous donnent la certitude que bien avant la fin du dernier contrat de ferme. Nous aurons obtenu le double but d'un système d'exploitation mieux entendu et combiné avec les améliorations que les devoirs de l'humanité réclamaient depuis long-temps en faveur des grands coupables condamnés aux travaux forcés.

La partie judiciaire a aussi reçu de notables améliorations par le frein que vous avez mis à l'esprit de chicane, en statuant des frais légers, il est vrai, mais suffisants pour prévenir bien des poursuites injustes, et par la stabilité que vous avez assurée à la propriété, en soumettant la possession immobilière aux règles de la prescription. A la suite de ces sages dispositions les procès ont diminué dans une proportion considérable ; sur 18,000 affaires pendantes au commencement de l'année dernière, il n'en reste plus que 4000.

Voilà, Messieurs, les résultats d'une seule session. Ils sont bien glorieux pour vous, et ils donnent la mesure de ce que peut l'harmonie entre le Gouvernement et l'Assemblée.

Au milieu de la joie générale et des espérances que vos travaux avaient laissées dans tous les cœurs, une grande calamité est venu nous frapper, en réduisant en cendres la partie la plus populeuse et la plus riche de notre capitale. Le Gouvernement a eu de pénibles devoirs à remplir dans cet affreux malheur, et j'ai la consolation de pouvoir penser qu'il s'en est acquitté ainsi qu'il le devait. Je ne doute pas qu'il n'obtienne aussi votre approbation en ce qui concerne les secours que les caisses publiques sont venus ajouter à ceux offerts par la charité privée dont le zèle s'est élevé au dessus de tout éloge. Les Hautes Cours Suzeraine et Protectrice nous ont donné en cette circonstance des preuves touchantes de leur constante sollicitude et de leur inépuisable générosité, qui ont pénétré nos cœurs de la plus vive reconnaissance. Sa Majesté l'Empereur de Russie a en outre autorisé qu'une souscription fût ouverte dans l'intérieur de son Empire, dont le produit a soulagé et soulage encore bien des infortunés. Il fallait de promptes mesures pour faire tourner cette catastrophe au profit de la prospérité future de la ville ; bien des difficultés s'opposaient à leur exécution ; grâce néanmoins à la bonne volonté de ses bons habitants, elles ont été applanies, et nous pouvons avoir le doux espoir que le nouvel aspect que présentera bientôt notre capitale finira par effacer les regrets du passé. Il m'est impossible, Messieurs, de me rappeler ce désastre sans éprouver, parmi la terreur que ce souvenir réveille dans mon âme, un sentiment de vive émotion et d'orgueil national, en pensant au courage des victimes et à l'empressement que tous ont mis, le lendemain même du sinistre, à remplir leurs engagements. Le bon ordre n'a pas été troublé un seul instant et notre crédit, sorti victorieux de cette terrible crise, que devoit bientôt aggraver le gêne survenu à l'étranger, est aujourd'hui mieux assis que jamais, grâce à l'activité et à la fidélité de nos commerçans.

Notre finance est sans doute loin d'être en rapport avec les besoins qui se développent chaque jour ; cependant, par suite de la règle que je me suis imposée dès le principe de ne jamais dépasser les ressources disponibles, elle peut être considérée comme en très bon état. Aucune de nos caisses publiques n'offre de déficit et la plupart même possèdent un excédant comme vous aurez lieu de vous convaincre par les comptes qui seront soumis à votre contrôle.

Je vous avais promis au commencement de l'année dernière, le pont sur l'Olto, des aqueducs pour notre Capitale, et l'ouverture à travers les Carpathes de la route à Kinnéni. Vous savez que ces promesses ont été accomplies de manière à laisser à ceux qui viendront après nous de véritables monumens du zèle et du talent de ceux qui m'ont aidé dans leur exécution. Plusieurs autres travaux importants, tendant à faciliter nos communications et à nous ouvrir de nouvelles sources de prospérité, ont été entrepris sur différents points de la Principauté, et ils seront poursuivis, dès le retour de la belle saison, avec la nouvelle ardeur que donnent le succès et l'expérience.

Si à côté de ce tableau succinct de ce qui a été fait dans l'espace d'une seule année, nous considérons l'état de calme, de sécurité et de bien-être dont jouit notre pays nous ne pouvons que nous féliciter et en tirer le plus heureux présage pour son avenir; mais à la condition que nous ne nous arrêterons pas; les tems d'arrêt sont de tems de mort pour les peuples qui reviennent à la vie.

Nous sommes, Messieurs, dans la bonne voie; continuons à nous donner la main; nos efforts réunis ne sauraient être de trop pour vaincre les obstacles qui encombrant la route de la civilisation. La patrie vous en sera reconnaissante.

CORRESPONDENCE respecting the Affairs of Hungary.—
1847, 1848.*

No. 2.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Nov. 26.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, November 20, 1847.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the copy of the propositions submitted by His Imperial Majesty to the Hungarian Diet, as it appeared in the Vienna Gazette of to-day. I enclose them in translation.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure.)—Propositions submitted to the Hungarian Diet.

(Translation.)

Presburg, November 11, 1847.

IN the name of His Imperial and Royal Majesty our gracious ruler, the following propositions are communicated to the Imperial Archduke and the honourable members, who have been summoned for the present Diet by His Imperial Majesty. His Imperial Majesty, in accordance with the desire he has ever felt since his accession to the Throne, that the welfare and prosperity of Hungary and of the dominions incorporated in it might gain ground, partly through the strict observance of existing laws, partly by the creation of new ones, has been pleased to summon together the above-mentioned Members of the Diet, and graciously expresses the following wishes :

* Laid before Parliament, with subsequent Papers, 1850.

I. That inasmuch as the post of Palatine has become vacant by the decease of His Imperial Highness the Archduke Joseph, the honourable Members of the Diet should proceed to the election of a Palatine, who, after he has been duly elected, and shall have taken the customary oaths, will be confirmed by His Imperial Majesty in his office, &c.

II. With regard to the maintenance and quartering of the army, the definitive adoption of the propositions and military regulations mentioned in the Imperial address of November 10, 1844, and herewith submitted to the Diet, shall be taken into consideration, and the result made known as soon as possible to His Imperial Majesty.

III. Since, in consideration of the position allotted to the royal free cities by the Diet, the abolition of those fundamental disabilities mentioned in the 3rd section of the propositions made at the last Diet ought not to be any longer deferred, His Imperial Majesty thinks fit to call upon the honourable Members of the Diet again, in order that as regards the right of voting properly belonging to the royal free and mining cities, measures may be taken in accordance with the above-mentioned royal wishes, and that the proper increase of constitutional rights may be likewise extended to the power of voting enjoyed by the ecclesiastical body and the free districts.

IV. His Imperial Majesty has, in his fatherly care for the reasonable and due advancement of the royal free cities, and in consideration of the prayers of the citizens that a constitutional establishment of the free and mining cities may be effected as soon as possible, determined to submit the accompanying proposal with this view to the honourable Members, in order that the deliberation of the Diet upon this most important subject may be hastened, and the object proposed attained as soon as possible.

V. For the security of the possession of property in land, and in the interest of the private credit which actually depends upon this, it is necessary that the laws concerning the purchase and transfer of land should be carefully altered ; that the mode of carrying on law-suits with reference to this should likewise be clearly laid down ; that land-registration books should be introduced ; and that courts of law should be established for the maintenance of these regulations in each comitat.

To promote this object His Imperial Majesty communicates to the honourable Members the accompanying propositions for their consideration, and refers them at the same time to the 6th section of the Royal Propositions at the last Diet.

VI. The permission for those persons who are subject to the laws of "Roboth," to buy themselves free for ever, has been, it is true, declared by law; but the carrying out of this is connected with many difficulties. In order, therefore, to render the attainment of the object of this legal declaration more easy, His Imperial Majesty wishes the honourable Members, in the course of the assembly of this very Diet, to submit to his gracious approval a proposition for a law so that the assigned object may be obtained after setting aside all the obstacles arising from the present state of the law, always in consideration of what is reasonable and with due regard to the rights of property.

VII. With regard to the prosperity of commerce and manufacture in the interior, His Imperial Majesty has no more ardent desire than that the existing commercial relations between Hungary and Austria should be arranged for the reciprocal profit of both, and that commerce should likewise be extricated from the present existing impediments caused by imperious necessity alone.

For the attainment of this object His Imperial Majesty has no better plan to propose than the abolition of the Custom-house barriers between Hungary and the other Austrian States. But the adoption of this measure requires on the one hand the constitutional co-operation of the Diet, on account of the circumstances connected with it, and, on the other hand, it demands the most careful and deliberate consideration, on account of the considerable reaction which it will produce upon the present condition of the Austrian hereditary States, and the revenue of the State. His Imperial Majesty has consequently thought fit to call on the honourable Members to deliberate carefully upon the best means for attaining this object, and to submit the result of their deliberations as soon as possible to him, in order that His Imperial Majesty (who has already directed that the existing official reports upon the Hungarian commerce should be communicated to the honourable Members) may at an early period be able to make the necessary regulations respecting the further means of assistance which may be suggested in the progress of the deliberations; so that after every possible light has been thrown on the subject, he may be able to obtain laws which will meet the mutual interests of all, and to make the necessary dispositions.

VIII. Since all endeavours to improve the trade of the country, however praiseworthy they may be, must remain without result, owing to the want of proper means of communication in the country, His Imperial Majesty in order to prepare and facilitate the solution of the present question by first establishing the data and the preparatory steps, has been pleased to form the Imperial Stathaltery, a department for consideration of the means of communication. His Imperial Majesty has also resolved to afford considerable assistance to the principal private undertakings, and especially to the construction of the central line of railroad, and to encourage the patriotic endeavours of the company formed for the regulation of the River Theiss.

His Imperial Majesty has hereby given fresh proofs of his paternal desire to improve the material interests of the country, and calls upon the States, in reference to the scarcity which in past years occurred in several parts of the kingdom, also in consequence of the defective means of communication, to resume the deliberations begun in the last Diet relative to the means of meeting the general necessities of the country, and to ensure not only the advantageous result of the undertaking for the regulation of the Theiss, which is so important a point in the national economy of the country, but also to further the other means of communication in regard to which, be it observed, that in as far as relates to the charter and guarantee of the Fiume railroad, neither the expense of its construction, nor of the previous works, nor the means of covering the interest thereof, were pointed out in the propositions of the last Diet. Moreover, as the said Communication Department has already been informed how far the States are in this instance to refer to the President, in order to submit to him the data and preparatory labours now collected together, His Majesty calls upon them to work out the propositions in such a manner that they may at the same time include the foundation of a national fund, already recognized as necessary by Article XXX, 1802, and also the way and manner of its establishment.

IX. His Imperial Majesty lays before the States in the annexed propositions the result of the previous operations and negotiations which must necessarily precede the execution of Article XXXI of 1836, with the request that whereas, besides the circumstances which impede the carrying into execution of Article XXXI of the law, the petition of the States of Transylvania to be admitted to a further union with Hungary, so often and so recently presented to His Imperial Majesty, supported by the weight of the judicial authorities, who are concerned therein, claim in the highest degree the attention of the legislature, the States will take into due consideration all the circumstances which appertain to the subject.

X. That which His Majesty suggested to the States in the Royal Propositions of the year 1844, namely, that they should draw up the project of a law, based upon the proceedings of the Commission named according to Article V, 1840, for the purpose of framing a code of criminal law and a system of improvement, has now become a still more urgent necessity. His Imperial Majesty can come to no satisfactory conclusion relative to the representation of the Diet upon the system of prison discipline, till the States have come to an agreement respecting the mode of punishment, and the question of who shall exercise the criminal jurisdiction. His Majesty hopes that the States will not delay to lay before him the first and second parts of the Penal Code.

XI. Whereas the Royal Treasury, burdened with so many expenses of the State, cannot spare the sums amounting to 528,566 fl. C M., and 24,313 fl. W. W., which were advanced by the Treasury in consequence of the exhaustion of the national funds, at the intercession of His Imperial Highness the late Archduke Palatine, His Majesty wishes that in compliance with Article VIII of the Royal Propositions of the year 1843, the States would take measures for the speedy repayment of the said sums to the Treasury.

This is what His Majesty deigns to submit to the States, in expectation that the Diet will provide for the maintenance of due order and moderation, and for the insurance of the freedom of speech and opinion from all external influence, and from such lamentable manifestations as took place during the last Diet. His Majesty has moreover but to assure the Diet of his gracious favour.

EDUARD VON ZSEDENYI.

No. 3.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston —(Rec. Jan. 27.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, January 19, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship 2 despatches which I have received from Mr. Blackwell, inclosing his report on the proceedings of the Hungarian Diet at Presburg.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.

(Extract.)

Presburg, December 22, 1847.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency a summary of the proceedings of the Diet.

The principal question under discussion has been the address.

In the address voted by the Delegates, paragraphs 1 to 6 inclusive convey the customary expression of thanks, and were passed unanimously by both Houses.

In sections 16 and 17, His Majesty is requested to summon a Diet annually in Pesth. If the Delegates had merely requested that the Diets might in future be held at Pesth, these paragraphs would also have been unanimously adopted; but the word "annually" precluded the Magnates of the Government party from assenting to the proposal, although several of them are fully convinced that the summoning of an annual Diet is a measure imperatively required, and which cannot be much longer delayed. I may here remark, that the last Diet passed a bill, or, more properly speaking, a resolution, for the erection of a Dietal Palace in Pesth, and published a prospectus, in several languages, offering a prize for the best plan, &c. A few days ago I was surprised to find no less than 40, sent from all parts of Europe, 3 of them from England. These plans will be submitted to a Dietal Committee, and a representation no doubt sent to His Majesty on the subject.

The 14th section expresses, in answer to the 7th Royal Proposition, the willingness of the Diet to pass measures "for adjusting the conflicting interests of Hungary and Austria," a somewhat vague phrase, inserted probably to meet the views of all parties. The contemplated removal of the intermediate customs line is, however, a measure that will encounter the most violent opposition. The Liberal party regard this line as one of the safeguards of Hungarian nationality. Hence, a question that is apparently a purely commercial one, assumes, like every other question in this country, a political tendency. The line forms a barrier, though a commercial one, between Hungary and Austria. This, irrespective of its commercial advantages or disadvantages, is quite sufficient for it to find favour with the Hungarian Liberals, who declare that, if it were possible, they would convert it into a wall of brass. In a commercial point of view, the removal of the intermediate line would unquestionably be advantageous to Hungary; but unless the Austrian Tariff be at the same time rendered much less prohibitory, the measure would be a further impediment to Hungary entering into commercial relations with foreign States; whereas if the line were kept up, as the Liberal party in Hungary wish it to be, and the Diet allowed to exercise its acknowledged constitutional right to regulate the Hungarian customs duties, there would be a much greater prospect of a fresh market being opened for British manufactures.

Paragraphs 7 to 13 relate to the so-called grievances of the nation. It was these paragraphs, especially the 11th, which furnished the principal topic of discussion in the 2 Houses. The great question of the day in Hungary, is, in fact, the nomination of administrators alluded to in the 11th paragraph. As this is a measure that may lead to very important political results, I will not venture, at present, to pronounce a decided opinion respecting it; both parties having cited the same Dietal Acts: the one to show the illegality of the measure, the other to prove that it is in strict accordance with the law. That it has greatly modified the system of Comitatal administration in Hungary is, however, unquestionable. I will merely observe, at present, that Count Apponyi (the present Chancellor) deemed it expedient to render the office of Lord-Lieutenant of a county merely nominal, by appointing, in upwards of twenty counties, administrators to exercise all the functions which the Lords-Lieutenant ought to have exercised, although they very seldom thought proper to do so.

However, notwithstanding all the efforts which the administrators are said to have made to influence the elections, the Government party still remains in the minority. In the last Diet the Liberals had, on most questions, a majority in the Lower House, varying from 10 to 25. In the present Diet they have only been able to show a majority of from 2 to 4, viz., on the Address, taxation not being regarded as a party question, although they boast that on other questions this majority will be much greater, at least 20. However, be this as it may, a majority of 2 or 20 will lead to the same result. The Government being, as usual, in a majority in the Upper House, and in a minority in the Lower one, very few measures will be carried; and as party spirit will always rise higher, the Government will be obliged either to make very important concessions or to dissolve the Diet, unless they should prefer letting it wear itself out, like the last one, it being obvious that, so long as the 2 Houses are animated by a different spirit, nothing effective can be accomplished.

A person unacquainted with Hungarian politics would imagine that unanimity prevailed on most questions submitted to the consideration of the present Diet. But with all this apparent unanimity of opinion, there was perhaps never a Diet held in Hungary in which the 2 parties differed so materially in their views as in the present one. The Conservatives wish to carry out the necessary reforms with the co-operation of the Government, and under what they term "its legitimate and constitutional influence." The Opposition, as will be seen by their famous "Programme," have lost all confidence in the Government, and hence are too apt to regard even the most wholesome measures that are supported by the Government party, with undue suspicion. The 2 parties have also totally different objects in view. The Conservatives wish to effect a moderate reform in the existing institutions, in a manner that would tend to strengthen the ties that unite Hungary to Austria. The Liberals, although with professions of loyalty, attachment to the Imperial dynasty, &c., wish to sever these ties, and make Hungary an independent kingdom. The final object which they profess to have in view is, what they term administrative independence; but it is obvious that if this object should ever be attained, and Hungary have its responsible Ministry, its national treasury, national army, &c., administrative independence would soon be converted into national independence, and the ancient crown of St. Stephen again encircle the brows of a Magyar Sovereign.

I conceive it to be my duty, whilst I am here, to give an impartial statement of facts, and to show with equal impartiality the spirit that animates the different parties, as well as the tendency of the measures brought before the Diet. If the struggle between the 2 parties led to no further results than a modification, for better or worse, of the Hungarian social institutions, it would possess little interest for other countries. It is, for instance, a matter of comparative indifference for England, whether the Hungarian free towns obtain the right of voting at the Diet or not; whether the new system of Comital administration be suffered to take root or be abolished; whether the Aviticity laws be reformed or still allowed to exercise their baneful influence. But when it can be shown that the fate of the Austrian Empire is involved in this struggle, that which at first view appears to be mere party contention, assumes a much higher degree of importance, and claims the attention of statesmen.

Regarding Hungarian affairs in this light, I have deemed it advisable to classify my reports as follows, viz. :

1st. A summary of the proceedings of the Diet.

2nd. Explanatory remarks.

3rd. Supplementary documents, or what the French term pièces justificatives.

4th. Documents relating to commercial affairs; and

5th. Letters or despatches officially addressed to your Excellency.

I will merely observe, at present, that although the Government party is more numerous in the present Diet than in the last one, this accession of strength is probably more apparent than real, and is fully counterbalanced by the Liberal party being much better organised than when I was last in Hungary, not only in the Diet, but, if I may rely on their own statements, throughout the country. They held for the first time regular quarterly meetings at Pesth during the inter-Dietal period—have been drilled into something like order and subordination under acknowledged leaders—have established an active correspondence with the counties in their interest—and made known their views in a programme—an analysis of which I have given in the supplementary documents, No. 1. I should not however be surprised to find this organisation become much looser before the end of the Diet. This at least was the case during the last Diet; the Opposition forming a much more compact body at its commencement than at its close. They have also lost some of their most talented men.

THE Diet was opened on the 11th of November by the King (1)* in person. On the 12th a mixed sitting (of both Houses) was held. The Magnates and Delegates then went to the Primatial Palace to hear the Royal propositions read. On their return they proceeded in conformity with the first proposition, to elect a Palatine, when the

* See Explanatory Remarks, page 613.

Archduke Stephen, son of the late Palatine, was elected by general acclamation; the Royal rescript, containing the names of 4 candidates (2 Catholics and 2 Protestants, as prescribed by law), remaining unopened.

On the 15th another mixed sitting was held, when the newly-elected Palatine was duly installed, and made a suitable speech on the occasion.

On the 16th the Royal propositions were read at a Dietal sitting (2) of the Delegates.

By these propositions, 11 in number, the Diet is called upon,—

1st. To elect a Palatine in conformity with the Dietal Act 3, 1608.

And to take into consideration various important measures specified in the following propositions, viz.:

2nd. The manner of provisioning and quartering the troops stationed in Hungary; the Royal rescript of Nov. 10, 1844, and the bill annexed to this proposition, to serve as the basis of their deliberations.

3rd. The claim of the Royal free towns to exercise the right of voting at the Diet, and the expediency of extending this constitutional right to the ecclesiastical corporations (chapters of cathedrals) and the free districts.

4th. The co-ordination (i.e., the reform of the corporations) of the Royal free towns; a bill for which object is annexed to the proposition, and submitted to the Diet.

5th. The laws and usages relating to mortgages of manorial estates, for the amendment of which a bill is annexed to the proposition, its chief feature being the introduction of a system of registration (hypothecary registers).

6th. The urbarial laws, (i.e., the laws relating to the lords of manors and their peasant tenantry, with a view of abolishing the robboth (corvée); the Dietal Acts 8, 1836, and 7, 1840, which permit this robboth to be commuted into a money rent, or to be redeemed for perpetuity, by mutual agreement of the parties concerned, not having been found effective.

7th. The regulation of the commercial relations of Hungary and Austria in a manner conformable to the interests of both countries; His Majesty being, moreover, of opinion that nothing would be more conducive to these interests than the removal of the intermediate customs line. Such a measure, he states, will require the most mature deliberation, on account of the peculiar circumstances connected with it and the questions it involves, as well as in respect to its bearing on the Austrian States and the Royal revenue. His Majesty therefore wishes the Diet to inquire into the means by which so desirable a result may be obtained, and to submit their views to him as soon as possible; for which purpose His Majesty has been graciously pleased to order that the official data respecting the trade of Hungary be laid before them.

8th. In this proposition His Majesty states that all the efforts for extending the trade of Hungary having hitherto been unavailing on account of the want of roads and other facilities for the conveyance of merchandize, he has deemed it expedient to form a special section, or board of public work, in the Vice-Regal Council, and has, moreover, assisted by loans of money several private undertakings; as, for instance, the Central Hungarian Railway Company, and the Company for the regulation of the River Theiss. His Majesty, therefore, wishes the Diet to take the important question of public works into their serious consideration, and, among other matters, to direct their attention to the representation (bill) presented by the last Diet, respecting a railway to Fiume, in which neither a satisfactory estimate of the cost, nor the sources from which is to be derived the sum that would probably be required to cover the guarantee of interest to a company, are sufficiently specified.

9th. His Majesty recommends the States (3) to take into their consideration the documents which will be laid before them respecting the re-incorporated Transylvanian counties (4).

10th. His Majesty expresses a hope that the States will resume their labours on the Criminal Code, the Code presented by the last Diet, and for which that drawn up by a Dietal commission appointed for the purpose in the year 1844, served as basis, not being sufficiently complete to receive His Majesty's sanction.

11th. His Majesty requests the payment of 53,828*l.*, advanced by the Royal Treasury for national purposes.

On November 22nd, the debate on the address in answer to the royal propositions, commenced in the Chamber of Delegates [circular sitting (5)]. The Conservative, or so-called Government party, wished to limit the address to the usual expression of thanks. The Opposition, or so-called National party, contended that an allusion ought to be made to the gravamina, and especially to the recent nominations of administrators of counties, which they held to be an unconstitutional measure of the most dangerous tendency. Kossuth [pronounced Kosh-shut], delegate of the county of Pesth, who may be regarded as the leader of the Opposition in the Lower House, made a 2 hours' speech on the occasion, which he concluded by reading the draft of an address embodying the sentiments of his party. He was answered by Count Stephen Széchenyi, who, in the present Diet, sits in the Lower House as the delegate of the county of Moson [Wieselburg], and professes at least not to belong to any party. The address which he proposed, after the usual expression of thanks, alluded in general terms to the gravamina, with the remark that the Diet would subsequently send up a representation respecting them. He agreed, however, with Kossuth, that both an account of these gravamina and the numerous measures that required to be taken into consideration, His Majesty should be requested to summon a Diet to meet annually in the city of Pesth.

On the 27th, after a 6 days' debate, Kossuth's motion was carried, but only by a single vote (28 to 27), or if only the Comitatal votes be reckoned, and they are practically the only ones taken into account, by a majority of 3; 26 counties voting for the motion, and 23, the delegate of Croatia included, against it.

On December 1st this resolution was confirmed at a Dietal sitting, and the address thus voted sent up to the Magnates. It is worded as follows:

" 1. Your Majesty's faithful States summoned to the present Diet enter with pleasure on the laborious task of legislation, incited by the hope of their efforts leading to a favourable result.

" 2. With pleasure, because this has been the first time for centuries that the Hungarian nation has had the happiness of hearing from the lips of its crowned Sovereign the cherished tones of its native tongue.

" 3. With the hope of their efforts leading to a favourable result, from the consideration of your Majesty having presented the Arch-duke Stephen to the nation, and by this pledge of mutual affection strengthened that tie by which we are indissolubly attached—by law, by interest, and by predilection—to the Imperial dynasty, and through this dynasty to the entire monarchy.

" 4. May your Majesty therefore be graciously pleased to accept the ardent thanks of the nation.

" 5. We also cannot refrain from mentioning that, by the royal propositions read to us on the 11th November, several questions have been submitted to our consideration, the decision of which has long formed one of our most ardent desires. We trust that this may be regarded as a proof that between the nation and its ruler no misunderstanding subsists.

" 6. Having succeeded in responding to the first of the royal propositions in a manner strictly conformable to the interests both of the Government and the nation, there is nothing we more ardently desire than to acquire the conviction that in treating the other questions contained in the propositions, as well as the ulterior measures which the necessities of the country imperatively demand, this fortunate coincidence may not be wanting: that the views of the Monarch and the wishes of the nation may have the same tendency.

" 7: While we, therefore, joyfully embrace this opportunity of conveying to your Majesty the expression of our sincere thanks and our unshaken loyalty, we also regard it as our duty frankly to make mention of those obstacles, without the removal of which we can perceive no guarantee of the future.

“ 8. The chief obstacle to our social progress consists, in our opinion, in the Dietal Act 10, 1790, not having hitherto been fully realized; for the Government of our country does not yet possess that independence which, according to law, it ought to possess.

“ 9. This obstacle is the more serious on account of the very essential difference that exists in the fundamental principles of our legislative and administrative systems. It is owing to this circumstance that, in considering the questions submitted to us at our Diets and called for by the wants of the age, we cannot calculate with any degree of certainty how far the views of the Government and those of the nation may coincide.

“ 10. Our preliminary and other grievances (gravamina) which we have repeatedly laid before the Throne from Diet to Diet, still remain unredressed, which increases the doubt that we must necessarily entertain of the operation even of the most wholesome laws that may be enacted, a doubt which is justified by the fact that the execution and promulgation of our laws is not fully guaranteed. It is thus that the Dietal Act 20, 1836, has not yet been put in execution; and that the Acts on religious affairs and on bills of exchange have not even been promulgated in the districts constituting the military frontiers.

“ 11. To this must be added, that along with a tendency to set aside the influence of the legislature, a tendency to increase the power of the Administration is also clearly apparent. As a proof of what we here advance we may cite those recent measures for reducing into a system the hitherto exceptional employ of county administrators, as well as those respecting the county congregations; measures which are at variance with our Comitatal administration, as established by the Dietal Acts 56, 1723, and 36, 1536.

“ 12. The special cases herein mentioned will serve to give your Majesty a general idea of our present position. We shall hereafter venture to submit our views also respecting the details, with the remark that we regard the removal of these obstacles as an essential condition of the organic reform of our social institutions.

“ 13. We are convinced that the expediency of removing these obstacles and equitably adjusting the conflicting interests they give rise to will not escape your majesty's paternal solicitude, solely directed to the welfare of your people. With this hope we enter willingly into the consideration of the questions contained in the Royal propositions, and which have been called for by the exigences of the nation. We shall also not neglect to lay our grievances before your Majesty in conformity with the Dietal Act 13, 1790.

“ 14. We have no hesitation in stating that we are willing to pass such measures as may lead to an equitable adjustment of the conflicting interests of Hungary and the hereditary States; the more so as we are convinced that the difficulties in the way of this adjustment do not proceed from the nature of the relations themselves.

"15. Great and arduous is the task of the coming times! It is ours to develop to the utmost extent our social institutions, grounded on constitutional rights, as well as our material resources. It is that of your Majesty to make these coincide with the intellectual development and the material interests of the entire monarchy swayed by your sceptre, in conformity with the principles of justice and the exigences of the age.

"16. Taking into consideration the numerous and important measures that will have to be submitted to us, it appears to us an object of paramount necessity that a Diet should be held annually in the city of Pesth.

"17. We have to beg that your Majesty may be graciously pleased to give the nation the assurance beforehand that its wishes in this respect may be complied with.

"18. We trust that in this manner and with the aid of the infinite goodness of the Almighty, some steps may be taken towards the end we have in view."

The Address voted by the Delegates was read in the Chamber of Magnates on December 4th, and gave rise to a six days' debate. All the amendments proposed by the Conservatives (Government party) having been carried by very considerable majorities. (6.)

On the 13th the Address was sent back to the Delegates with a renuncium, in which the Magnates stated that they would prefer laying before the Throne the simple expression of their thanks without alluding to the gravamina, the more so as these gravamina would have to be taken into consideration and submitted to His Majesty during the course of the Diet. If, however, the Delegates insisted on alluding to them, they (the Magnates) were of opinion that it ought to be in general terms. That the nomination of administrators was a question in which they would not enter, but were of opinion that until it could be proved that such nomination was an unconstitutional measure, it could not be called a grievance, and ought not to be alluded to. They therefore suggested the propriety of omitting altogether the 8th, 9th, and 11th paragraphs. They further stated, that although they fully agreed with the Delegates on the expediency of holding the Diet in the city of Pesth, the general wish of the nation in this respect had already been laid before the Throne in several Dietal representations; and, without entering into the question of annual Diets, they were of opinion that it would be more appropriate to send up a special representation on the subject, than to mention it in the address, and for these reasons must also suggest the propriety of omitting the 16th and 17th paragraphs.

On the 15th, 16th, and 17th, a very stormy debate—frequently interrupted by the cheers and clamour of the young men in the galleries—took place in the circular sittings of the Chamber of Delegates, on this renuncium. Very violent language was made use of by several Delegates of the Liberal party. The administrators were compared with the district-captains of Galicia, and stigmatized as the salaried tools of an arbitrary Government, ready, when called upon, to do the same dirty work as their Galician colleagues. To this Somsich, a Government official and Delegate of the county of Baranya, replied, that there was a great difference between the Hungarian administrators and the Galician district-captains, the former being under a constitutional, and the latter under an absolute authority. Kossuth said that as the 2 Houses differed respecting constitutional principles, it would be a mere waste of time to enter into any further discussion on the Address, or to send it back to the Magnates. He therefore moved that it should be deposited or dropped, i. e., that no further notice should be taken of it, adding that they would have an opportunity of expressing their thanks to His Majesty for opening the Diet, &c., in one of the Dietal representations. The Conservative Delegates tried to refute this argument, and one of them even went so far as to say that the Magnates had misunderstood the address, and that he was convinced that on maturer consideration, they would, with a few trifling modifications, agree to it. Kossuth's motion was, however, carried by a majority of 4,—25 counties voting for, and 21 against it; 2 or 3 counties having furnished their Delegates with fresh instructions either to vote for it, or to insist on the paragraph respecting the administrators being retained.

On the 20th, this resolution was confirmed at a Dietal sitting, the personal* striving in vain to persuade the Delegates to rescind it, and send the address to the Magnates, he being persuaded, he said, that the 2 Houses would soon come to an understanding on the subject. However, a nuncium was sent to the Magnates, announcing the fact of the address having been deposited, and stating the motives which had induced the Delegates to have recourse to such a proceeding.

The other proceedings of the Diet (up to the Christmas recess) may be classified as follows:

A. Measures recommended to be taken into consideration in the Royal propositions.

a. The Alimentation of the Troops stationed in Hungary. (2nd R. Proposition.)

* See Remark 2, page 613.

On December 13th, the Delegates sent a nuncium to the Magnates, together with a representation requesting that His Majesty would be pleased to appoint a Royal Commissioner to act with a Dietal Committee to be appointed for the final settlement of this question. On the nuncium and representation being read, the Palatine observed that it was unnecessary to send the latter, a Royal Commissioner being already in Presburg. (7.)

b. Co-ordination of the Royal Free Towns. (3rd and 4th R. Proposition.)

On November 29th, a Committee of Delegates (8) was appointed to draw up a bill on this question, and to make use for this purpose both of the bill annexed to the 2nd Royal Proposition, and of that which gave rise to so much discussion during the last Diet. (9.)

c. The Laws relating to the Mortgages of Manorial Estates. (5th Royal Proposition.)

This question was discussed in the Lower House on December 13th, when it was resolved to appoint a Committee (of Delegates) to draw up a bill that should embrace the question in all its bearings, not only in respect to the mortgage, but also to the tenure of manorial (allodial) estates, with a view of abolishing, or at least of greatly amending the existing law of Aviticity. (10.) The Committee to make use, for this purpose, of the bill annexed to the 5th Royal Proposition, as well as of the report made to the last Diet by the Committee specially appointed to inquire into the laws and usages relating to Aviticity, and propose measures for their amendment and final abolition.

d. Urbarial Laws. (6th Royal Proposition.)

The expediency of amending the existing laws that define the mutual relations of manorial lords and their tenant peasantry, was discussed in the Chamber of Delegates on December 3rd and 6th. All parties agreed that the Roboth ought to be abolished; the Opposition citing the sanguinary acts perpetrated in Galicia, to show what use might be made of a peasantry compelled by law to work for their landlords. The House was also unanimously of opinion that, as the Dietal Acts of 1836 and 1840 had not been effective, a compulsory law ought to be passed by the present Diet. Several Delegates contended that the law ought to be compulsory for both parties; that the peasants should be compelled either to redeem their Roboth for perpetuity, or to commute it into an annual money rent, in the manner specified in the above-mentioned Acts of the Diets of 1836 and 1840; and that the landlords should likewise be compelled to accept this redemption or commutation. It was, however, decided by a majority of 24,—37 counties for, and 13 against—that the law should only be compulsory for the landlords, they being entitled to a full compensation for the loss which, by the change of system, they would have to sustain. A resolution was also passed to appoint a Committee to draw up a bill on the subject. The question whether this should be a Dietal or a Circular Committee (11), gave rise to an animated debate, which ended by the House deciding, by a majority of 8, in favour of a Dietal Committee. These resolutions were confirmed at a Dietal sitting on December 21st, and a nuncium sent to the Magnates requesting them to agree to the appointment of a Dietal Committee, on the conditions that the contemplated measures should be framed in conformity with the resolutions passed by the Delegates.

B. Measures not mentioned in the Royal Propositions.

a. The late Palatine.

A proposal to found a beneficent institution in commemoration of the late Palatine, the said institution to bear his name, has been unanimously adopted by both houses. They have also unanimously resolved to send a representation to request that, in consideration of the services of the late Palatine, His Majesty may be graciously pleased to make the Archduke Stephen, the present Palatine, a donation of a Crown domain.

b. Croation Affairs.

On November 29, the Delegates appointed a Circular Committee to investigate the causes that have led to the Croation agitation, and collect the necessary data respecting the same, with a view of framing an Act to remedy the evil. There are 12 county Delegates on this Committee; all belong to the Liberal party, Kossuth being the chairman.

c. General Taxation.

On November 29th, Szemere [Sem-er-y], the Delegate of the county of Borsod, one of the most liberal and at the same time most Protestant counties in Hungary, brought the question of general taxation before the Lower House. In conformity with the present system, the county rates (cassa domestica) and the war-tax (12) are levied almost exclusively on sessional (peasants') property. The peasants, in fact, have to pay all, or pretty nearly all, the direct taxes; the nobles (13) being totally exempt from direct taxation. Szemere concluded his speech with three proposals in the form of questions, viz.:

1st. Are the nobles willing to pay, conjointly with the non-nobles (peasants), the county rates?

This question was answered in the affirmative by a majority of 17.

2nd. Are the nobles willing to contribute their share to the war-tax?

Negatived by a majority of 15.

3rd. Are the nobles willing to pay a direct tax into a national treasury, the funds so raised to be applied for objects of national utility, such as the making of roads, &c. ?

Answered in the affirmative by a majority of 44 ; that is to say, almost unanimously.

These resolutions having been confirmed at a Dietal sitting held on December 7th, a nuncium was sent to the Magnates, requesting them to consent to the appointment of a Dietal Committee on the subject, the Delegates assuming that the resolutions they had passed respecting the payment of county rates, and a general tax by the nobles, could not fail of being adopted by the Upper House. They at the same time observed that they were of opinion that it would be advisable to raise the funds for national purposes more by indirect than by direct taxation, the details of which, as well as the most expedient manner of exercising a Dietal control over the administration of the said funds, they would leave to the consideration of the proposed committee. This nuncium has not as yet been discussed by the Magnates ; but they will no doubt consent to the appointment of a mixed committee on the question.

d. Liberty of the Press.

On November 29th, the Delegates appointed a Circular Committee to inquire into the present regulations respecting the press, with a view of abolishing the censorship, which is regarded by the Diet as existing merely de facto, but not de jure, no Dietal Act having ever been passed for its establishment in Hungary. Szemere and Count Stephen Széchenyi are on this committee, and of the 17 members that compose it, 12 at least are Liberals.

A very animated debate had previously taken place (on November 16th), respecting the establishment of a free Dietal newspaper—that is to say, of a daily paper, in which a full and impartial account of the proceedings of the Diet should be given,—which led to a general discussion on the degree of liberty that, in a constitutional country, ought to be accorded to the press ; the most moderate of the Liberal party admitting that some measures of a repressive nature were essential for its due regulation.

Somsich [Shom-sich], Delegate of the county of Baranya, and a member of the Vice-Regal Council, and consequently in the employ of the Government, spoke against the censorship, which he designated as a system that no longer answered the purpose for which it had been introduced, as a worn-out system, in fact, for which a more rational one ought to be substituted. “I believe, therefore,” he added, “that I am acting in conformity with the views of the Government, when I vote for a repressive law on the press.”

The motion for the establishment of a free Dietal newspaper was carried, although the Conservative, and even several of the Opposition

Mexico; thence, westwardly, along the whole southern boundary of New Mexico (which runs north of the town called Paso) to its western termination; thence, northward, along the western line of New Mexico, until it intersects the first branch of the river Gila (or if it should not intersect any branch of that river, then to the point on the said line nearest to such branch, and thence in a direct line to the same); thence down the middle of the said branch and of the said river, until it empties into the Rio Colorado; thence across the Rio Colorado, following the division line between Upper and Lower California, to the Pacific Ocean.

The southern and western limits of New Mexico, mentioned in this Article, are those laid down in the map entitled "Map of the United Mexican States, as organized and defined by various Acts of the Congress of said Republic, and constructed according to the best Authorities. Revised edition. Published at New York, in 1847, by J. Disturnell." Of which map a copy is added to this Treaty, bearing the signatures and seals of the undersigned Plenipotentiaries. And, in order to preclude all difficulty in tracing upon the ground the limit separating Upper from Lower California, it is agreed that the said limit shall consist of a straight line drawn from the middle of the Rio Gila, where it unites with the Colorado, to a point on the coast of the Pacific Ocean distant 1 marine league due south of the southernmost point of the port of San Diego, according to the plan of said port made in the year 1782 by Don Juan Pantoja, second sailing-master of the Spanish fleet, and published at Madrid in the year 1802, in the atlas to the voyage of the schooners Sutil and Mexicana, of which plan a copy is hereunto added, signed and sealed by the respective Plenipotentiaries.

In order to designate the boundary line with due precision, upon authoritative maps, and to establish upon the ground landmarks which shall show the limits of both Republics, as described in the present Article, the 2 Governments shall each appoint a commissioner and a surveyor, who, before the expiration of 1 year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty, shall meet at the port of San Diego, and proceed to run and mark the said boundary in its whole course to the mouth of the Rio Bravo del Norte. They shall keep journals and make out plans of their operations; and the result agreed upon by them shall be deemed a part of this Treaty, and shall have the same force as if it were inserted therein. The 2 Governments will amicably agree regarding what may be necessary to these persons, and also as to their respective escorts, should such be necessary.

The boundary line established by this Article shall be religiously respected by each of the 2 Republics, and no change shall ever be made therein, except by the express and free consent of both nations, lawfully given by the general Government of each, in conformity with its own constitution.

VI. The vessels and citizens of The United States shall, in all time, have a free and uninterrupted passage by the Gulf of California, and by the River Colorado below its confluence with the Gila, to and from their possessions situated north of the boundary line defined in the preceding Article; it being understood that this passage is to be by navigating the Gulf of California and the river Colorado, and not by land, without the express consent of the Mexican Government.

If, by the examinations which may be made, it should be ascertained to be practicable and advantageous to construct a road, canal, or railway, which should in whole or in part run upon the River Gila, or upon its right or its left bank, within the space of 1 marine league from either margin of the river, the Governments of both Republics will form an agreement regarding its construction, in order that it may serve equally for the use and advantage of both countries.

VII. The River Gila, and the part of the Rio Bravo del Norte lying below the southern boundary of New Mexico, being agreeably to the Vth Article, divided in the middle between the 2 Republics, the navigation of the Gila and of the Bravo below said boundary shall be free and common to the vessels and citizens of both countries; and neither shall, without the consent of the other, construct any work that may impede or interrupt, in whole or in part, the exercise of this right; not even for the purpose of favouring new methods of navigation. Nor shall any tax or contribution, under any denomination or title, be levied upon vessels, or persons navigating the same, or upon merchandise or effects transported thereon, except in the case of landing upon one of their shores. If, for the purpose of making the said rivers navigable, or for maintaining them in such state, it should be necessary or advantageous to establish any tax or contribution, this shall not be done without the consent of both Governments.

The stipulations contained in the present Article shall not impair the territorial rights of either Republic within its established limits.

VIII. Mexicans now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and which remain for the future within the limits of The United States, as defined by the present Treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside, or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territories, or disposing thereof, and removing the proceeds wherever they please, without their being subjected, on this account, to any contribution, tax, or charge whatever.

Those who shall prefer to remain in the said territories, may either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens, or acquire those of citizens of The United States. But they shall be under the obligation to make their election within 1 year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty ; and those who shall remain in the said territories after the expiration of that year, without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans, shall be considered to have elected to become citizens of The United States.

In the said territories, property of every kind, now belonging to Mexicans not established there, shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract, shall enjoy with respect to it, guarantees equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of The United States.

IX. The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding Article, shall be incorporated into the union of The United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of The United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of The United States, according to the principles of the Constitution ; and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

X. [Stricken out.]

XI. Considering that a great part of the territories which, by the present Treaty, are to be comprehended for the future within the limits of The United States, is now occupied by savage tribes, who will hereafter be under the exclusive control of the Government of The United States, and whose incursions within the territory of Mexico would be prejudicial in the extreme, it is solemnly agreed that all such incursions shall be forcibly restrained by the Government of The United States whensoever this may be necessary ; and that when they cannot be prevented, they shall be punished by the said Government, and satisfaction for the same shall be exacted—all in the same way, and with equal diligence and energy, as if the same incursions were meditated or committed within its own territory, against its own citizens.

It shall not be lawful, under any pretext whatever, for any inhabitant of The United States to purchase or acquire any Mexican, or any foreigner residing in Mexico, who may have been captured by Indians inhabiting the territory of either of the 2 Republics, nor to purchase or acquire horses, mules, cattle, or property of any kind, stolen within Mexican territory by such Indians.

And in the event of any person or persons, captured within Mexican territory by Indians, being carried into the territory of The United States, the Government of the latter engages and binds itself, in the most solemn manner, so soon as it shall know of such captives being within its territory, and shall be able so to do, through the faithful exercise of its influence and power, to rescue them and return them to their country, or deliver them to the agent or representative of the Mexican Government. The Mexican authorities will, as far as practicable, give to the Government of The United States notice of such captures; and its agent shall pay the expenses incurred in the maintenance and transmission of the rescued captives; who, in the meantime, shall be treated with the utmost hospitality by the American authorities at the place where they may be. But if the Government of The United States, before receiving such notice from Mexico, should obtain intelligence, through any other channel, of the existence of Mexican captives within its territory, it will proceed forthwith to effect their release and delivery to the Mexican agent as above stipulated.

For the purpose of giving to these stipulations the fullest possible efficacy, thereby affording the security and redress demanded by their true spirit and intent, the Government of The United States will now and hereafter pass, without unnecessary delay, and always vigilantly enforce, such laws as the nature of the subject may require. And finally, the sacredness of this obligation shall never be lost sight of by the said Government when providing for the removal of the Indians from any portion of the said territories, or for its being settled by citizens of The United States; but on the contrary, special care shall then be taken not to place its Indian occupants under the necessity of seeking new homes, by committing those invasions which The United States have solemnly obliged themselves to restrain.

XII. In consideration of the extension acquired by the boundaries of The United States, as defined in the Vth Article of the present Treaty, the Government of The United States engages to pay to that of the Mexican Republic the sum of 15,000,000 of dollars.

Immediately after this Treaty shall have been duly ratified by the Government of the Mexican Republic, the sum of 3,000,000 of dollars shall be paid to the said Government by that of The United States, at the city of Mexico, in the gold or silver coin of Mexico. The remaining 12,000,000 of dollars shall be paid at the same place, and in the same coin, in annual instalments of 3,000,000 of dollars each, together with interest on the same at the rate of 6 per centum per annum. This interest shall begin to run upon the whole sum of 12,000,000 from the day of the ratification of the present Treaty by the Mexican Government, and the first of the instalments shall be paid at the expiration of 1 year from the same day. Together with each annual instalment, as it falls due, the whole interest accruing on such instalment from the beginning shall also be paid.

XIII. The United States engage, moreover, to assume and pay to the claimants all the amounts now due to them, and those hereafter to become due, by reason of the claims already liquidated and decided against the Mexican Republic, under the Conventions between the 2 Republics, severally concluded on the 11th day of April, 1839, and on the 30th day of January, 1843: so that the Mexican Republic shall be absolutely exempt for the future from all expense whatever on account of the said claims.

XIV. The United States do furthermore discharge the Mexican Republic from all claims of citizens of The United States, not heretofore decided against the Mexican Government, which may have arisen previously to the date of the signature of this Treaty; which discharge shall be final and perpetual, whether the said claims be rejected or be allowed by the Board of Commissioners provided for in the following Article, and whatever shall be the total amount of those allowed.

XV. The United States, exonerating Mexico from all demands on account of the claims of their citizens mentioned in the preceding Article, and considering them entirely and for ever cancelled, whatever their amount may be, undertake to make satisfaction for the same, to an amount not exceeding three and one quarter millions of dollars. To ascertain the validity and amount of those claims, a Board of Commissioners shall be established by the Government of The United States, whose awards shall be final and conclusive; provided, that in deciding upon the validity of each claim, the Board shall be guided and governed by the principles and rules of decision prescribed by the 1st and Vth Articles of the unratified Convention, concluded at the city of Mexico on the 20th day of November, 1843;* and in no case shall an award be made in favour of any claim not embraced by these principles and rules.

If, in the opinion of the said Board of Commissioners, or of the claimants, any books, records, or documents in the possession or power of the Government of the Mexican Republic, shall be deemed necessary to the just decision of any claim, the commissioners, or the claimants through them, shall, within such period as Congress may designate, make an application in writing for the same, addressed to the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs, to be transmitted by the Secretary of State of The United States; and the Mexican Government engages, at the earliest possible moment after the receipt of such demand, to cause any of the books, records, or documents, so specified, which shall be in their possession or power, (or authenticated copies or extracts of the same,) to be transmitted to the said Secretary of State, who shall immediately deliver them over to the said Board of Commissioners: provided, that no such application shall be made by, or at the instance of, any claimant, until the facts which it is expected to prove by such books, records, or documents, shall have been stated under oath or affirmation.

XVI. Each of the Contracting Parties reserves to itself the entire right to fortify whatever point within its territory it may judge proper so to fortify for its security.

XVII. The Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation, concluded at the city of Mexico on the 5th day of April, A.D. 1831,* between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, except the Additional Article, and except so far as the stipulations of the said Treaty may be incompatible with any stipulations contained in the present Treaty, is hereby revived for the period of 8 years from the day of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty, with the same force and virtue as if incorporated therein; it being understood that each of the Contracting Parties reserves to itself the right at any time after the said period of 8 years shall have expired, to terminate the same by giving one year's notice of such intention to the other party.

XVIII. All supplies whatever for troops of The United States in Mexico, arriving at ports in the occupation of such troops previous to the final evacuation thereof, although subsequently to the restoration of the custom-houses at such ports, shall be entirely exempt from duties and charges of any kind; the Government of The United States hereby engaging and pledging its faith to establish, and vigilantly to enforce, all possible guards for securing the revenue of Mexico, by preventing the importation, under cover of this stipulation, of any articles other than such, both in kind and in quantity, as shall really be wanted for the use and consumption of the forces of The United States during the time they may remain in Mexico. To this end, it shall be the duty of all officers and agents of The United States to denounce to the Mexican authorities at the respective ports any attempts at a fraudulent abuse of this stipulation which they may know of or may have reason to suspect, and to give to such authorities all the aid in their power with regard thereto; and every such attempt, when duly proved and established by sentence of a competent tribunal, shall be punished by the confiscation of the property so attempted to be fraudulently introduced.

XIX. With respect to all merchandise, effects, and property whatsoever, imported into ports of Mexico whilst in the occupation of the forces of The United States, whether by citizens of either Republic, or by citizens or subjects of any neutral nation, the following rules shall be observed:

1. All such merchandise, effects, and property, if imported previously to the restoration of the Custom Houses to the Mexican authorities, as stipulated for in the Article III of this Treaty, shall be exempt from confiscation, although the importation of the same be prohibited by the Mexican tariff.

2. The same perfect exemption shall be enjoyed by all such merchandise, effects, and property, imported subsequently to the restoration of the Custom Houses, and previously to the 60 days fixed in the following Article for the coming into force of the Mexican tariff at such ports respectively; the said merchandise, effects, and property being, however, at the time of their importation, subject to the payment of duties, as provided for in the said following Article.

3. All merchandise, effects, and property described in the 2 rules foregoing shall, during their continuance at the place of importation, and upon their leaving such place for the interior, be exempt from all duty, tax, or impost of every kind, under whatsoever title or denomination. Nor shall they be there subjected to any charge whatsoever upon the sale thereof.

4. All merchandise, effects, and property described in the 1st and 2nd Rules, which shall have been removed to any place in the interior whilst such place was in the occupation of the forces of The United States, shall, during their continuance therein, be exempt from all tax upon the sale or consumption thereof, and from every kind of impost or contribution, under whatsoever title or denomination.

5. But if any merchandise, effects, or property, described in the 1st and 2nd Rules, shall be removed to any place not occupied at the time by the forces of The United States, they shall, upon their introduction into such place, or upon their sale or consumption there, be subject to the same duties which, under the Mexican laws, they would be required to pay in such cases if they had been imported in time of peace, through the maritime Custom Houses, and had there paid the duties conformably with the Mexican tariff.

6. The owners of all merchandise, effects, or property described in the 1st and 2nd Rules, and existing in any port of Mexico, shall have the right to reship the same, exempt from all tax, impost, or contribution whatever.

With respect to the metals, or other property, exported from any Mexican port whilst in the occupation of the forces of the United States, and previously to the restoration of the Custom House at such port, no person shall be required by the Mexican authorities, whether general or State, to pay any tax, duty, or contribution upon any such exportation, or in any manner to account for the same to the said authorities.

XX. Through consideration for the interests of commerce generally, it is agreed, that if less than 60 days should elapse between the date of the signature of this Treaty and the restoration of the Custom Houses, conformably with the stipulation in the 3rd Article, in such case all merchandise, effects, and property whatsoever, arriving at the Mexican ports after the restoration of the said Custom Houses, and previously to the expiration of 60 days after the day of the signature of this Treaty, shall be admitted to entry; and no other duties shall be levied thereon than the duties established by the tariff found in force at such Custom Houses at the time of the restoration of the same. And to all such merchandise, effects, and property, the rules established by the preceding article shall apply.

XXI. If unhappily any disagreement should hereafter arise between the Governments of the 2 Republics, whether with respect to the interpretation of any stipulation in this Treaty, or with respect to any other particular concerning the political or commercial relations of the 2 nations, the said Governments, in the name of those nations, do promise to each other that they will endeavour, in the most sincere and earnest manner, to settle the differences so arising, and to preserve the state of peace and friendship in which the 2 countries are now placing themselves; using, for this end, mutual representations and pacific negotiations. And if, by these means, they should not be enabled to come to an agreement, a resort shall not, on this account, be had to reprisals, aggression, or hostility of any kind, by the one Republic against the other, until the Government of that which deems itself aggrieved shall have maturely considered, in the spirit of peace and good neighbourship, whether it would not be better that such difference should be settled by the arbitration of commissioners appointed on each side, or by that of a friendly nation. And should such course be proposed by either party, it shall be acceded to by the other, unless deemed by it altogether incompatible with the nature of the difference, or the circumstances of the case.

XXII. If (which is not to be expected, and which God forbid!) war should unhappily break out between the 2 Republics, they do now, with a view to such calamity, solemnly pledge themselves to each other and to the world, to observe the following rules: absolutely, where the nature of the subject permits; and as closely as possible in all cases where such absolute observance shall be impossible.

1. The merchants of either Republic then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain 12 months (for those dwelling in the interior), and 6 months (for those dwelling at the seaports), to collect their debts and settle their affairs; during which periods, they shall enjoy the same protection, and be on the same footing, in all respects, as the citizens or subjects of the most friendly nations; and, at the expiration thereof, or at any time before, they shall have full liberty to depart, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance: conforming therein to the same laws which the citizens or subjects of the most friendly nations are required to conform to. Upon the entrance of the armies of either nation into the territories of the other, women and children, ecclesiastics, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, merchants, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all persons whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments unmolested in their persons. Nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their cattle taken, nor their fields wasted, by the armed force into whose power, by the events of war, they may happen to fall; but if the necessity arise to take anything from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at an equitable price. All churches, hospitals, schools, colleges, libraries, and other establishments, for charitable and beneficent purposes, shall be respected, and all persons connected with the same protected in the discharge of their duties, and the pursuit of their vocations.

2. In order that the fate of prisoners of war may be alleviated, all such practices as those of sending them into distant, inclement, or unwholesome districts, or crowding them into close and noxious places, shall be studiously avoided. They shall not be confined in dungeons, prison-ships, or prisons; nor be put in irons, or bound or otherwise restrained in the use of their limbs. The officers shall enjoy liberty on their paroles, within convenient districts, and have comfortable quarters; and the common soldiers shall be disposed in cantonments, open and extensive enough for air and exercise, and lodged in barracks as roomy and good as are provided by the party in whose power they are, for its own troops. But if any officer shall break his parole by leaving the district so assigned him, or any other prisoner shall escape from the limits of his cantonment, after they shall have been designated to him, such individual, officer, or other prisoner, shall forfeit so much of the benefit of this Article as provides for his liberty on parole or in cantonment. And if any officer so breaking his parole, or any common soldier so escaping from the limits assigned him, shall afterwards be found in arms, previously to his being regularly exchanged, the person so offending shall be dealt with according to the established laws of war. The officers shall be daily furnished by the party in whose power they are, with as many rations, and of the same articles, as are allowed, either in kind or by commutation, to officers of equal rank in its own army; and all others shall be daily furnished with such ration as is allowed to a common soldier in his own service: the value of all which supplies shall, at the close of the war, or at periods to be agreed upon between the respective commanders, be paid by the other party, on a mutual adjustment of accounts for the subsistence of prisoners; and such accounts shall not be mingled with or set off against any others, nor the balance due on them be withheld, as a compensation or reprisal for any cause whatever, real or pretended. Each party shall be allowed to keep a commissary of prisoners, appointed by itself, with every cantonment of prisoners, in possession of the other; which commissary shall see the prisoners as often as he pleases; shall be allowed to receive, exempt from all duties or taxes, and to distribute, whatever comforts may be sent to them by their friends; and shall be free to transmit his reports in open letters to the party by whom he is employed.

And it is declared that neither the pretence that war dissolves all Treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending the solemn covenant contained in this Article. On the contrary, the state of war is precisely that for which it is provided; and during which, its stipulations are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged obligations under the law of nature or nations.

XXIII. This Treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof; and by the President of the Mexican Republic, with the previous approbation of its General Congress: and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the city of Washington, or at the seat of Government of Mexico, in 4 months from the date of the signature hereof, or sooner if practicable.

In faith whereof, we, the respective Plenipotentiaries, have signed this Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Limits, and Settlement; and have hereunto affixed our seals respectively. Done in quintuplicate, at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the 2nd day of February, in the year of our Lord 1848.

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, James K. Polk, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof, may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by The United States and the citizens thereof.

*DISCOURS du Roi des Belges, à l'Ouverture des 2 Chambres.—
Bruxelles, le 26 Juin, 1848.*

MESSIEURS,

JE suis heureux de me retrouver au milieu des Représentants de la Nation. En présence des agitations qui remuent si profondément l'Europe, la Belgique est demeurée calme, confiante et forte. Il me tardait d'exprimer publiquement ce que mon cœur en a ressenti de gratitude et de juste fierté ! Les changements survenus dans l'Etat politique de divers pays n'ont aucunement altéré nos bonnes relations internationales. Nos rapports officiels avec la République Française se trouvent établis dans les termes d'une bienveillance mutuelle. De toutes parts, nous avons reçu des témoignages de sympathie et d'estime.

Des lois importantes ont marqué la dernière session. Le cercle des droits politiques a été considérablement élargi, et la première application de la réforme électorale a prouvé que nous n'avions pas trop présumé de la sagesse de la nation.

L'organisation de la garde civique se poursuit avec activité ; l'excellent esprit des populations en facilite et en assure le succès.

Les circonstances ont imposé au pays des charges extraordinaires. Il en a compris la nécessité et les a courageusement supportées. Au moyen des mesures financières votées dans la dernière session, notre patriotique armée a été maintenue sur un pied défensif respectable ; nous avons alimenté le travail ; le trésor public a pu remplir fidèlement toutes ses obligations ; le fardeau de la dette flottante a cessé de peser sur le crédit. L'avenir récompensera les sacrifices du passé.

Les subsides destinés aux besoins extraordinaires n'ont été votés que jusqu'au 1^{er} Septembre. Mais, grâce à la sage réserve que nous nous sommes imposée dans les dépenses, la création de nouvelles charges ne sera pas nécessaire ; et si des complications imprévues n'y viennent faire obstacle, les crédits votés suffiront pour atteindre la fin de l'année.

Tous nos efforts, Messieurs, doivent tendre à conserver à la Belgique une bonne situation financière. Là réside en grande partie sa force et sa sécurité. Le budget normal des dépenses sera réduit.

Mon Gouvernement est résolu à opérer successivement des économies efficaces.

Plusieurs impôts devront être modifiés dans leur base. Nous ne perdrons pas de vue dans la répartition des charges ce qui est dû de ménagement à ceux dont le travail seul entretient l'existence. Nous continuerons de rechercher avec une sollicitude vraie, toutes les mesures propres à améliorer et à relever la condition des classes laborieuses.

Nous traversons une époque remplie d'épreuves difficiles pour la Société Européenne. La Belgique ne se laissera pas détourner de la voie sage et sûre dans laquelle elle est entrée. Elle a pu, par un heureux accord, concilier la stabilité avec le progrès, l'ordre avec la pratique de toutes les libertés. Pour se maintenir dans cette voie, pour accomplir avec succès sa mission de paix et de travail, il suffit à la nation d'avoir foi en elle-même et de rester unie. Vous, Messieurs, qui êtes l'expression fidèle de ses sentiments et de ses vœux, vous, à qui elle a remis le dépôt de ses plus chers intérêts, vous répondrez dignement à son attente ; vous accorderez au Gouvernement le concours bienveillant dont il a besoin pour remplir sa tâche difficile, et, de nouveau, nos communs efforts auront bien mérité du pays.

DISCOURS du Roi des Pays-Bas, à l'Ouverture de la Session des Etats Généraux.—La Haye, le 16 Octobre, 1848.

NOBLES ET PUISSANTS SEIGNEURS,

Vous approuverez sans doute qu'à l'ouverture de cette session je m'abstienne de suivre l'usage établi de tracer un aperçu, comme introduction à vos travaux législatifs, de la situation du pays et des différents projets de loi qui vous seront présentés.

En effet, la mission de cette assemblée est exceptionnelle et transitoire de sa nature, et ces 2 Chambres des Etats-Généraux seront sous peu remplacées par d'autres Chambres composées et élues d'après les dispositions qui, lors de la révision de la loi-fondamentale accomplie dans la session qui vient de finir, ont été insérées dans cette loi et seront bientôt solennellement promulguées.

Toutefois, en cette occasion, je ne puis m'abstenir, nobles et puissants Seigneurs, de vous exprimer cette conviction que, si l'état général de l'Europe est de nature à faire naître de graves inquiétudes, divers signes favorables se manifestent dans la situation de notre patrie.

Soit que je considère nos relations avec les Puissances Etrangères, soit que je porte mes regards sur nos possessions dans les autres parties du monde, ou sur les intérêts du commerce, de la navigation, de l'agriculture et des autres branches de l'industrie, à côté de plusieurs symptômes inquiétants je rencontre aussi un grand nombre de motifs de consolation et d'encouragement. J'apprécie surtout, parmi ces derniers, la manière exemplaire dont a été commencée, poursuivie et accomplie la grande et importante œuvre de la révision de la loi fondamentale.

Tandis que tant d'Etats en Europe sont ébranlés jusque dans leur base par de violentes secousses, et que les rues de maintes cités sont teintes du sang des citoyens, notre pays a su se préserver de la fureur des dissensions civiles et des calamités qu'entraînent le désordre et l'anarchie. Bien plus, notre pays a joui de cet avantage que le pouvoir législatif, libre dans son action, avec une entière indépendance et dans la plus parfaite harmonie, là aussi où régnait une différence d'opinions, a accompli paisiblement sa vaste mission qui devait être si décisive pour les destinées du pays.

Au sujet de cette heureuse issue de l'œuvre toujours critique de la révision complète du pacte fondamental d'un Etat, j'ai fait exprimer, lors de la clôture de la dernière session, ma reconnaissance aux 2 Chambres des Etats-Généraux qui ont prêté à cette œuvre leur actif et vigilant concours. Mais pour moi-même et pour cette circonstance solennelle, je me suis réservé de remercier tous mes bien-aimés concitoyens de la modération, de la confiance, du respect pour les lois et l'ordre public, comme aussi de l'attachement à ma personne et à ma dynastie, que pendant la longue période exigée pour l'accomplissement de ces importants travaux législatifs ils ont manifestés sans restriction et avec tant de constance jusqu'à ce jour.

C'est ainsi, nobles et puissants Seigneurs, que notre édifice politique, tout en restant établi sur ses mêmes bases, a vu ses dispositions intérieures modifiées d'après les besoins de l'époque, et coordonnées de manière que les améliorations que l'avenir exigerait, puissent y être introduites sans produire la moindre secousse. Pour entrer dans cette nouvelle période, le concours de vos nobles puissances m'est encore nécessaire, et c'est ce concours qu'avec une pleine confiance je viens invoquer aujourd'hui pour le salut de la patrie.

Pour que la Néerlande prospère dans la nouvelle voie qui lui est ouverte, il faut que chacun de ses habitants ait la conscience intime des saints devoirs qui lui sont imposés, et soit animé de cet amour de la patrie toujours prêt à faire pour elle les plus grands sacrifices.

Le passé me fait nourrir à cet égard, nobles et puissants Seigneurs, le meilleur espoir pour l'avenir.

Si de nouveaux temps d'épreuve nous sont encore réservés, je suis

convaincu que chacun, avec l'aide de la Providence, fera de courageux efforts pour les surmonter. Nous saurons détourner du sol de la patrie les troubles, le désordre, les dissensions de quelque nature qu'elles puissent être, et nous transmettrons intact à nos descendants le gage qui nous est confié.

Que le Tout-Puissant bénisse la constance de nos efforts!

Stockholm, le 24 Octobre, 1848.*

MESSIEURS,

L'EPOQUE qui vient de s'écouler depuis l'ouverture de vos délibérations, occupera une place remarquable dans les fastes de l'histoire. La plupart des états de l'Europe ont souffert de violentes commotions, et les questions sociales qui s'agitent entre les Gouvernements et les Peuples, n'atteindront peut-être pas de longtemps encore leur solution définitive. Rendons grâce à la bonté Divine de nous avoir épargné des secousses nuisibles à la tranquillité de l'état comme au bien-être de chaque individu, et réjouissons-nous de la modération et du calme, dont le peuple Suédois a fait preuve au milieu des tempêtes qui ont ébranlé le monde. Ce n'est qu'en persévérant avec la même mesure que nous pouvons espérer de voir réalisés, dans l'intérêt général, nos vœux communs pour l'amélioration de nos institutions.

Ma reconnaissance vous est acquise, Messieurs, pour la noble spontanéité avec laquelle vous vous êtes ralliés à ma décision de concourir au maintien de l'indépendance menacée de nos Voisins et Alliés. Des résultats satisfaisants ont déjà été obtenus, sans que les fonds alloués par vous ayant été épuisés, et nous pouvons envisager l'avenir d'un oeil plus tranquille. Une Convention d'armistice d'une durée assez prolongée a été conclue, sous ma médiation, entre les parties belligérantes, et nous pouvons nous flatter de l'espoir, que la voie est ouverte aux négociations pour amener une paix juste et durable.

Je n'ai cessé de suivre avec un vif intérêt vos délibérations au sujet de notre représentation nationale. L'expérience ayant démontré la difficulté de parvenir à concilier, sans mon intermédiaire, les opinions divergentes, je vous ai présenté un projet, lequel, en admettant une extension considérable du droit électoral, contient, en même temps les garanties nécessaires pour le maintien et le développement régulier de l'ordre social. Je me tiens assuré, Messieurs, qu'animés d'un désir sincère de terminer, d'une manière satisfaisante, cette grave question, vous lui vouerez, lors de votre prochaine réunion, l'attention qu'elle réclame si impérieusement.

C'est avec une vive satisfaction que j'ai appris votre décision d'accorder de nouvelles allocations pour améliorer et multiplier les écoles primaires. Vous avez donné ainsi un témoignage honorable de votre zèle pour l'éducation des générations futures.

Les questions importantes dont vous vous êtes occupés, n'ont point pu obtenir toutes, pendant cette Diète, une solution satisfaisante. Je ne cesserai cependant de les suivre avec un intérêt particulier, et de concourir à faciliter leur décision dans un sens conforme aux intérêts de la nation.

En déclarant maintenant vos travaux terminés, j'appelle sur les Etats Généraux les bénédictions du Ciel, et je vous renouvelle, Messieurs, les assurances de toute ma bienveillance royale.

DISCOURS du Président, à l'Ouverture de la Diète Ordinaire de la Suisse.—Le 3 Juillet, 1848.

MESSIEURS, CHERS ET FIDÈLES CONFÉDÉRÉS !

PEU de jours seulement se sont écoulés depuis la clôture de la Diète de l'année dernière jusqu'à l'ouverture de la Diète de cette année qui nous réunit de nouveau dans cette enceinte à cette heure solennelle. Mais ce court espace de temps ne peut diminuer l'importance de ce jour ni la joie que procure le retour des députés du peuple Suisse des 22 cantons. Aujourd'hui, comme toujours, soyez les bienvenus, et aujourd'hui comme de tout temps recevez, dans le sentiment d'un amour invariable de la patrie, le salut d'amitié et de fraternité fédérales, vraies et sincères.

Nous avons traversé une année importante. En calculant d'après le temps l'espace qui s'est écoulé depuis la dernière réunion de la Diète, il n'y a qu'une année ; mais si l'on tient compte des événements, il y a plus qu'un âge d'homme. Car le changement qui a eu lieu au milieu de nous, changement de la plus haute importance pour la Confédération et son existence ultérieure ; la lutte violente qui peu de temps après a fait le tour chez tous les peuples de l'Europe, et qui, rapide comme l'éclair, a anéanti une dynastie, détruit le système politique qui était en vigueur jusqu'ici, brisé les vieilles entraves qui s'opposaient au progrès, fait tomber en ruine l'antique édifice social longtemps maintenu debout par des moyens artificiels et qui, avec une vitesse qu'on ne pouvait pressentir, a poussé les peuples à la conquête de leur liberté : tels sont, chers confédérés, les faits qui, réunis à bien d'autres encore, se sont passés dans l'espace des 12 derniers mois qui viennent de s'écouler. Ce sont des événements dont on trouvera difficilement le pendant dans l'histoire ; ce sont des change-ments gigantesques, tels qu'aucune époque n'en a vu de pareils. A ces événements se rattache une nouvelle ère sociale ; ils nous font concevoir le doux espoir d'un avenir heureux et durable pour le bien-être des nations, si l'ordre public et la justice continuent à être leurs gardiens, si elles sont guidées par une volonté honnête et un pouvoir désintéressé. Les maux qui, d'après les lois éternelles de la nature, se manifestent dans tous les enfantements et se sont fait sentir dans cette révolution sociale, disparaîtront, il faut l'espérer, plus tôt que ne le désire la perversité des uns, plus tôt que ne le prédit la folie des autres. L'espèce humaine, il est vrai, peut se tromper, mais elle ne se perd jamais, et la liberté, lorsqu'elle est assise sur des bases solides, cicatrise bientôt les blessures et fait bien vite oublier les peines qu'on a endurées pour la conquérir.

En face de perspectives de cette nature, la Suisse qui possède avec sûreté depuis des siècles ce que d'autres peuples cherchent maintenant seulement à conquérir, peut contempler avec joie le passé et porter avec assurance ses regards sur l'avenir. Elle doit saluer avec sincérité les événements qui la rapprochent encore davantage des nations avec lesquelles elle a entretenu jusqu'ici des relations d'amitié. Elevés par nos propres forces et renforcés de nouveau par la conscience de nos droits, en possession paisible des biens que nous avons hérités de nos pères, nous sommes aujourd'hui réconciliés et heureux, sans réminiscence d'une querelle qui a été bien vite oubliée. Il est vrai qu'il nous reste encore des vœux à faire et des espérances à concevoir ; mais ils ne sont pas de nature à exciter en nous la jalousie ou l'envie envers d'autres nations ; car la réalisation de nos modestes vœux, de nos espérances sans prétention, dépend uniquement de nous. Ce qui nous manque ne peut nous être apporté de l'étranger ; il faut que nous l'obtenions chez nous, au milieu de nous, par notre propre volonté et notre propre action. Nous atteindrons sûrement ce but si, vis-à-vis de l'étranger, nous demeurons, quant à l'action, dans une stricte impartialité au milieu des efforts que font les peuples ; si de fait nous ne les favorisons ni ne les entravons et que nous exigeons la même impartialité pour nos affaires intérieures, si nous repoussons décidément et avec tout le poids de notre force morale et physique tout empiètement arbitraire sur notre territoire. A l'intérieur, si fidèles à notre origine, nous suivons avec loyauté et unis par les liens d'une concorde fraternelle la voie que nous nous sommes frayée et que nous avons déjà parcourue avec tant de bonheur. L'appréciation équitable et la réalisation consciencieuse de ces principes sont une garantie pour le bonheur durable de la Suisse, c'est à dire pour son indépendance vis-à-vis de l'étranger, pour sa liberté et son union à l'intérieur. La Suisse a son histoire à elle ; elle ne doit, elle ne peut fermer l'oreille aux enseignements qu'elle lui donne. Nous n'avons aucun droit ni aucun sujet quelconque de l'oublier. Sous ce rapport, comme sous bien d'autres, la nation Suisse occupe une place unique dans le monde et ce n'est certes pas un de ses derniers avantages. Si nous restons fidèles à nous-mêmes, nous ne nous précipiterons pas au-delà du but assigné à nos propres efforts et nous ne nous égarerons jamais dans ce labyrinthe dans lequel se montrent des ténèbres qui entravent le progrès, ou dans de fausses voies qui conduisent à une perte inévitable. La Suisse doit continuer à progresser et à se développer ultérieurement ; c'est un besoin dont nous tous nous sentons la nécessité ; c'est un sentiment qui vit dans la conscience de chacun et de tous. Mais ce que nous devons éviter, c'est de nous exposer au péril, sciemment ou à notre insu ; que cet avertissement soit profondément gravé dans notre esprit.

L'œuvre terminée par la Diète récemment dissoute attend la reconnaissance et l'approbation du peuple Suisse. Cette œuvre nous fournira l'occasion de nous rendre compte à nous-mêmes si nous nous sommes bien compris réciproquement, si nous avons le même but en vue, ou bien si nous voulons nous diviser et nous rendre impuissants par cette division.

Je ne puis dissimuler que la voie est difficile, car ce n'est pas une tâche facile pour l'homme que de mettre des bornes à ses vœux et à ses opinions, de les sacrifier sans contrainte aux vœux et aux opinions des autres. Mais néanmoins aucune œuvre de concorde et de progrès organique ne peut prospérer sans cette déférence au bien public. L'atonie politique seule ou l'orgueil despotique peut se passer de cette déférence ; or la Suisse repousse l'atonie politique et le despotisme, car il est étranger à l'une comme à l'autre. Notre seul guide est le besoin de la concorde, besoin aussi vieux que notre histoire et aussi fort que l'amour que nous portons à la patrie. L'histoire de notre origine et de notre développement comme nation l'a déjà prouvé souvent d'une manière suffisante ; la dernière page de cette histoire vient encore de le buriner en traits indélébiles. Nous ne pouvons, nous ne voulons pas rompre désormais avec ce qui s'est confirmé dans les anciens jours et avec les événements qui se sont passés récemment. Il serait téméraire d'y songer. La Suisse entière protesterait contre cette audace.

C'est pourquoi, lors même que quelques-uns cherchent à faire prévaloir leurs propres vœux et leurs opinions particulières, lors même qu'il y a des citoyens qui refusent à la nouvelle constitution leur adhésion, et quant à la forme et quant au fond, d'autres qui la repoussent parce qu'elle promet trop aux uns et trop peu aux autres, nous avons néanmoins la conviction que la généralité, comme telle, ne prêterait pas l'oreille à des insinuations de cette nature, insinuations qui l'empêcheraient d'examiner mûrement cette œuvre et de l'apprécier sous toutes ses faces.

soutenions que le projet de constitution satisfait réellement tous les vœux et toutes les demandes que peuvent faire avec plus ou moins de raison 25 populations séparées les unes des autres d'après leur organisme intérieur et leurs besoins individuels. Nous sommes bien loin de le prétendre et nous sommes tout aussi loin d'espérer qu'elle recevra généralement la reconnaissance d'une population qui compte plus de 2,000,000 de citoyens dont les opinions sont si divergentes. Cela n'est pas possible. En revanche, ce qui est garanti par la nouvelle constitution mise en perspective et ce qui peut être accordé sans léser les uns comme sans faire peser une contrainte despotique sur les autres, c'est qu'elle laisse réellement et non seulement d'après son nom, subsister chaque canton faisant partie de l'alliance fédérale, et conserve à son profit ce qui, lui étant élevé, l'affaiblirait sans augmenter la force de la Confédération. Elle donne à la Confédération la force nécessaire pour prévenir toute décadence future sans cependant anéantir la souveraineté cantonale dont l'action s'exercera à l'intérieur, souveraineté sans laquelle la Confédération ne serait qu'une chimère ; elle ne restreint pas les Cantons au point de les réduire à l'inaction ; en un mot, elle forme une unité de tous les éléments divers qui la composent et les laisse en même temps subsister dans leur individualité propre d'une manière qui, d'après la conviction intime de ceux qui ont été appelés à coopérer à la construction de cet édifice social, répond à l'essence de la Confédération formée d'Etats souverains, en tenant compte de l'origine et du développement historiques, tant de la Confédération même que des Cantons et de la grande diversité qui y règne, circonstances qui méritent d'être appréciées à leur juste valeur. Frayant et aplanissant la voie partout où le besoin l'exigeait, où la possibilité le permettait, créant tout à neuf et opérant des changements partout où le passé le demandait et où l'avenir pouvait le désirer, la nouvelle constitution laisse néanmoins exister la souveraineté cantonale avec tous ses éléments de vie et en même temps elle remet entre les mains de la Confédération les moyens nécessaires sans lesquels on ne pourrait atteindre à une unité forte, sans lesquels il serait impossible de donner le jour à un être vivant de sa propre vie ; l'un dévorerait l'autre ou s'étiolerait jusqu'à son dépérissement complet.

On se disputera sans doute en théorie sur la question de savoir si l'autorité préconsultative a bien fait d'avoir égard au présent, dans son développement historique, sans méconnaître en même temps les droits de l'avenir, ou bien s'il vaut mieux chercher son nouveau salut dans le renversement subit de la constitution fondamentale actuelle. Or le point de vue politique et pratique, ainsi que l'expérience acquise par les leçons de l'histoire, se prononce d'une manière absolue contre cette dernière alternative et nous engage d'une manière tout aussi précise à suivre la direction opposée. Mais à peine avons-nous besoin de ces enseignements. La conviction que nous avons de la haute importance d'une unité forte, conviction qui a été renouvelée en nous, est trop générale, notre ancien attachement à notre état particulier qui a traversé les siècles, est encore trop vivace pour que nous puissions nous écarter de la véritable voie. Conservons cette conviction et cet attachement ; ils nous maintiendront sur le bon chemin. Nous parviendrons assurément au but si nous sommes justes envers nous-mêmes, justes les uns envers les autres, si chacun n'exige rien de trop et n'offre rien de trop peu ; en un mot si nous manifestons sérieusement la volonté de donner une plus grande force à l'antique Confédération. N'hésitons pas à exprimer ce que nous sentons tous, les choses sur lesquelles nous sommes tous d'accord, et avec nous, sans doute, toutes les nations amies de la Suisse. Dans cette enceinte sacrée j'engage tous les confédérés à bannir toute illusion, à s'abstenir de toute demande exagérée, de toute opposition inopportune, et à réfléchir que nous ne pouvons reculer couverts de honte, ni marcher témérairement en avant, mais que nous devons nous tenir strictement collés à ce qui, après des désirs longtemps manifestés et des peines nombreuses, peut être réellement mis à exécution.

Nos efforts doivent toujours tendre vers les biens les plus élevés et la plus grande perfection, mais il ne faut pas que nous les cherchions en dehors des limites du possible, que nous aspirions témérairement à un but que nous ne pouvons atteindre et que nous perdions des choses qui nous paraissent moins parfaites, mais que cependant nous pouvons obtenir. Lors même que ce danger nous paraîtrait pour le moment imaginaire, nous ne pouvons néanmoins oublier les leçons que nous a données le passé ni les dangers que pourrait nous apporter l'avenir. Car quoique bien des choses se soient présentées récemment sous un aspect plus favorable, les inquiétudes ne sont cependant pas dissipées pour toujours. L'orage, quoique ce ne soit pas d'une manière immédiate, est encore suspendu sur nos têtes et se traîne à l'horizon politique, et peut-être non seulement il se condensera, mais il pourrait encore nous atteindre. Nous admettons des possibilités, car nous savons que celui-là seul peut éviter à temps le danger qui suit l'apercevoir de près. La Suisse doit s'approprier sans crainte cette mesure de sûreté. Mais il faut aussi qu'elle sache que nous ne serons forts et que nous ne pourrons résister aux orages et aux tempêtes que lorsque nous nous serons frayé à nous mêmes une voie nette et que nous aurons réglé en bons pères de famille nos affaires intérieures ; lorsqu'aucun acte rétrograde, aucune mésintelligence ne viendront briser notre volonté générale, notre force commune. Nous parviendrons à ce but si, par une entente fraternelle, nous adoptons la nouvelle constitution pour loi fondamentale ; c'est à ce but que nous

C'est pourquoi, chers confédérés, prenons courage, jetons rapidement un pont sur l'ancien rivage pendant qu'il est encore affermi. Ce pont sera assez fort pour nous conduire à une vie plus robuste, à une union plus forte et à un nouveau progrès. Sur le terrain aplani de cette constitution fédérale, sous l'égide tutélaire des institutions améliorées qu'elle engendrera, nous pourrons en toute confiance marcher en avant et laisser passer sans crainte sur nos têtes les orages qui pourront éclater. Je n'ai vraiment pas le courage de songer au sort qui nous serait réservé si nous ne tenions pas compte des sérieux enseignements de l'époque actuelle, après que nous avons abattu jusque dans ses fondements l'édifice antique et d'ailleurs vermoulu de nos institutions fédérales et que nous avons généralement reconnu et exprimé le besoin d'en créer de nouvelles.

Je puis me dispenser de scruter l'avenir, lorsque je considère l'esprit sain et vigoureux du peuple Suisse. J'aime mieux porter mes regards sur nos alpes verdoyantes, sur nos riches vallées où règnent aujourd'hui, comme toujours, l'industrie, l'activité habituelles, ces compagnes nécessaires de notre bien-être national, qui sont des sources naturelles auxquelles nous allons puiser. Cet aspect réjouissant est d'autant plus sublime qu'ici nous n'avons pas à combattre les êtres monstrueux qui exercent presque partout leurs ravages. La Suisse, au milieu de l'anarchie qui règne presque partout, jouit du bonheur digne d'envie de figurer parmi le petit nombre de pays où n'ont pu pénétrer ni cette maladie ni les suites qui l'accompagnent et qui sont tout aussi dangereuses. La Suisse, plus Suisse aujourd'hui qu'elle ne l'a été longtemps auparavant, présente à coup sûr un spectacle réjouissant, même dans l'imperfection de son état social.

A l'étranger, nos relations de droit public avec les nations n'ont éprouvé aucune espèce d'interruption dans ces derniers temps; à l'intérieur, l'ordre, le droit et la loi règnent dans toute leur antique vigueur et protègent l'homme libre ainsi que la famille. L'agriculture, l'éducation du bétail, l'exploitation de nos alpes, ces éléments principaux de notre bien-être matériel, n'ont pas cessé d'être florissantes. L'industrie, le commerce et la circulation n'ont pas éprouvé non plus de contre-coup d'une nature générale et dangereuse. Là où la stagnation s'est fait sentir, c'est à la suite de mesures prises par l'étranger et devenues indispensables dans les relations que la circulation entre les peuples civilisés rend nécessaires.

Notre état financier, sans être bien riche et surabondant, est cependant convenablement régularisé, et avec une sage économie, nos finances suffiront à couvrir tous nos besoins. Nos écoles et tous nos établissements d'instruction publique continuent à être florissants.

Le manque de travail ou plutôt la dégénération de l'amour du travail qui est généralement nécessaire à l'homme, n'a pas provoqué chez nous des mesures extraordinaires d'une nature permanente; au contraire, sous ce rapport ont pu suffire les sources régulières que présentent les besoins ordinaires et la protection des lois de police habituelle qui leur prêtent leur appui.

Les sacrifices qu'ont exigés nécessairement des uns et des autres nos derniers efforts pour dompter les éléments hostiles à notre commune patrie n'ont nullement excédé la mesure de nos forces, nulle part ils n'ont laissé des traces indélébiles de dévastation. Il est vrai que nous avons à déplorer la perte de plusieurs de nos fils et de nos frères; mais comme le Suisse fait volontiers le sacrifice de sa vie pour le bien de la patrie; comme les survivants se sont chargés bénévolement et avec amour des veuves, des orphelins et des blessés, le souvenir de ces événements n'est pas de nature non plus à couvrir de deuil l'image rassérénée de la patrie commune.

Malgré les imperfections et les défauts de l'ancien pacte, malgré les ébranlements et les changements auxquels nous avons assisté de loin ou de près, la situation de la patrie commune ne présente pas un sombre spectacle; il est au contraire bien plus réjouissant que celui que nous offrent la plupart des Etats de l'Europe; si déjà maintenant nous pouvons nous applaudir de cet état de choses, à quelle douce attente ne pouvons-nous pas nous livrer pour l'avenir, quel agréable espoir ne pouvons-nous pas concevoir, lorsque de toutes parts l'ordre légal, la tranquillité seront rétablis en Europe et que la nouvelle constitution qui nous offre un terrain si fertile pour tout progrès et pour le bien-être général matériel et politique du peuple Suisse sera introduite dans notre patrie. Mon dernier vœu, qui est aussi le vôtre, c'est que ces espérances se réalisent bientôt et qu'elles fondent d'une manière durable le bonheur de la patrie commune, pour notre salut et celui de nos descendants.

Avec cet espoir nous prendrons congé du passé et nous nous avancerons dans l'avenir, dont l'aurore nous apparaît sous des couleurs si riantes.

Nourrissant cet espoir, je déclare ouverte la session ordinaire de l'année 1848.

Je vous invite, chers, fidèles Confédérés à confirmer encore une fois l'ancien pacte fédéral par notre serment.

SPEECH of the Hospodar of Wallachia, on the Opening of the General Assembly.—Bucharest, January 29, 1848.

MESSIEURS LES DEPUTES DE L'ASSEMBLEE GENERALE,

EN vous revoyant réunis autour de moi, j'éprouve la satisfaction que donnent une confiance mutuelle et des services communs rendus à la patrie.

Vos travaux de la session dernière, qui sera consignée avec honneur dans nos annales, ont déjà porté une grande partie de leurs fruit.

Dix mille familles dont vous avez brisé les fers bénissent votre nom, en goûtant les bienfaits de la liberté, et leur faible tribut ajoute chaque jour au nombre des affranchis. C'est sans doute un grand sujet de bonheur pour nous tous de pouvoir penser que dans peu d'années la terre Valaque ne nourrira plus que des hommes libres.

L'instruction publique, en ce qui concerne les écoles primaires et élémentaires dans nos villes et communes, a déjà reçu toutes les améliorations qu'elle réclamait. J'ai tout lieu d'espérer que bientôt je serai parvenu à surmonter aussi les difficultés que présente l'organisation de l'enseignement supérieur, afin que nos fils ne soient plus obligés de s'expatrier à un âge où les souvenirs du sol natal, trop faibles encore, finissent par s'effacer, pour faire place à des impressions qui les rendent ordinairement étrangers parmi les leurs et aux affaires de leur pays.

La loi que vous avez votée sur l'amélioration du sort du petit clergé, et sur la régularisation des revenus de la métropole et des évêchés, a reçu en partie son exécution. Nous pouvons espérer que ces dispositions salutaires recevront, dans le courant de cette année, leur entière application.

La réunion de nos douanes avec celles de la Moldavie a levé les entraves qui empêchaient, au détriment des 2 pays, le libre échange de leurs produits, en même tems qu'elle a apporté une augmentation à nos revenus. Le prix obtenu aux dernières enchères effectuée dans la capitale de la Moldavie, a dépassé, pour la part qui nous revient dans le produit de cette ferme, celui obtenu les années précédentes, non obstant la réserve faite à l'égard de l'exportation du bétail.

Les sommes que vous avez allouées pour faire remplacer par un système régulier et économique le mode vicieux qu'on suit dans l'exploitation de nos salines, sont destinées à nous réaliser des bénéfices considérables.

Les travaux qui y ont été exécutés dans le courant de l'année qui vient de finir, ont dépassé toutes nos espérances; ils nous donnent la certitude que bien avant la fin du dernier contrat de ferme. Nous aurons obtenu le double but d'un système d'exploitation mieux entendu et combiné avec les améliorations que les devoirs de l'humanité réclamaient depuis long-temps en faveur des grands coupables condamnés aux travaux forcés.

La partie judiciaire a aussi reçu de notables améliorations par le frein que vous avez mis à l'esprit de chicane, en statuant des frais légers, il est vrai, mais suffisants pour prévenir bien des poursuites injustes, et par la stabilité que vous avez assurée à la propriété, en soumettant la possession immobilière aux règles de la prescription. A la suite de ces sages dispositions les procès ont diminué dans une proportion considérable ; sur 18,000 affaires pendantes au commencement de l'année dernière, il n'en reste plus que 4000.

Voilà, Messieurs, les résultats d'une seule session. Ils sont bien glorieux pour vous, et ils donnent la mesure de ce que peut l'harmonie entre le Gouvernement et l'Assemblée.

Au milieu de la joie générale et des espérances que vos travaux avaient laissées dans tous les cœurs, une grande calamité est venu nous frapper, en réduisant en cendres la partie la plus populeuse et la plus riche de notre capitale. Le Gouvernement a eu de pénibles devoirs à remplir dans cet affreux malheur, et j'ai la consolation de pouvoir penser qu'il s'en est acquitté ainsi qu'il le devait. Je ne doute pas qu'il n'obtienne aussi votre approbation en ce qui concerne les secours que les caisses publiques sont venus ajouter à ceux offerts par la charité privée dont le zèle s'est élevé au dessus de tout éloge. Les Hautes Cours Suzeraine et Protectrice nous ont donné en cette circonstance des preuves touchantes de leur constante sollicitude et de leur inépuisable générosité, qui ont pénétré nos cœurs de la plus vive reconnaissance. Sa Majesté l'Empereur de Russie a en outre autorisé qu'une souscription fût ouverte dans l'intérieur de son Empire, dont le produit a soulagé et soulage encore bien des infortunés. Il fallait de promptes mesures pour faire tourner cette catastrophe au profit de la prospérité future de la ville ; bien des difficultés s'opposaient à leur exécution ; grâce néanmoins à la bonne volonté de ses bons habitants, elles ont été applanies, et nous pouvons avoir le doux espoir que le nouvel aspect que présentera bientôt notre capitale finira par effacer les regrets du passé. Il m'est impossible, Messieurs, de me rappeler ce désastre sans éprouver, parmi la terreur que ce souvenir réveille dans mon âme, un sentiment de vive émotion et d'orgueil national, en pensant au courage des victimes et à l'empressement que tous ont mis, le lendemain même du sinistre, à remplir leurs engagements. Le bon ordre n'a pas été troublé un seul instant et notre crédit, sorti victorieux de cette terrible crise, que devoit bientôt aggraver le gêne survenu à l'étranger, est aujourd'hui mieux assis que jamais, grâce à l'activité et à la fidélité de nos commerçans.

Notre finance est sans doute loin d'être en rapport avec les besoins qui se développent chaque jour ; cependant, par suite de la règle que je me suis imposée dès le principe de ne jamais dépasser les ressources disponibles, elle peut être considérée comme en très bon état. Aucune de nos caisses publiques n'offre de déficit et la plupart même possèdent un excédant comme vous aurez lieu de vous convaincre par les comptes qui seront soumis à votre contrôle.

Je vous avais promis au commencement de l'année dernière, le pont sur l'Olto, des aqueducs pour notre Capitale, et l'ouverture à travers les Carpathes de la route à Kinnéni. Vous savez que ces promesses ont été accomplies de manière à laisser à ceux qui viendront après nous de véritables monumens du zèle et du talent de ceux qui m'ont aidé dans leur exécution. Plusieurs autres travaux importants, tendant à faciliter nos communications et à nous ouvrir de nouvelles sources de prospérité, ont été entrepris sur différents points de la Principauté, et ils seront poursuivis, dès le retour de la belle saison, avec la nouvelle ardeur que donnent le succès et l'expérience.

Si à côté de ce tableau succinct de ce qui a été fait dans l'espace d'une seule année, nous considérons l'état de calme, de sécurité et de bien-être dont jouit notre pays nous ne pouvons que nous féliciter et en tirer le plus heureux présage pour son avenir; mais à la condition que nous ne nous arrêterons pas; les tems d'arrêt sont de tems de mort pour les peuples qui reviennent à la vie.

Nous sommes, Messieurs, dans la bonne voie; continuons à nous donner la main; nos efforts réunis ne sauraient être de trop pour vaincre les obstacles qui encombrent la route de la civilisation. La patrie vous en sera reconnaissante.

1847, 1848.*

No. 2.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Nov. 26.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, November 20, 1847.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the copy of the propositions submitted by His Imperial Majesty to the Hungarian Diet, as it appeared in the Vienna Gazette of to-day. I enclose them in translation.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure.)—Propositions submitted to the Hungarian Diet.

(Translation.)

Presburg, November 11, 1847.

IN the name of His Imperial and Royal Majesty our gracious ruler, the following propositions are communicated to the Imperial Archduke and the honourable members, who have been summoned

* Laid before Parliament, with subsequent Papers, 1850.

for the present Diet by His Imperial Majesty. His Imperial Majesty, in accordance with the desire he has ever felt since his accession to the Throne, that the welfare and prosperity of Hungary and of the dominions incorporated in it might gain ground, partly through the strict observance of existing laws, partly by the creation of new ones, has been pleased to summon together the above-mentioned Members of the Diet, and graciously expresses the following wishes:

I. That inasmuch as the post of Palatine has become vacant by the decease of His Imperial Highness the Archduke Joseph, the honourable Members of the Diet should proceed to the election of a Palatine, who, after he has been duly elected, and shall have taken the customary oaths, will be confirmed by His Imperial Majesty in his office, &c.

II. With regard to the maintenance and quartering of the army, the definitive adoption of the propositions and military regulations mentioned in the Imperial address of November 10, 1844, and herewith submitted to the Diet, shall be taken into consideration, and the result made known as soon as possible to His Imperial Majesty.

III. Since, in consideration of the position allotted to the royal free cities by the Diet, the abolition of those fundamental disabilities mentioned in the 3rd section of the propositions made at the last Diet ought not to be any longer deferred, His Imperial Majesty thinks fit to call upon the honourable Members of the Diet again, in order that as regards the right of voting properly belonging to the royal free and mining cities, measures may be taken in accordance with the above-mentioned royal wishes, and that the proper increase of constitutional rights may be likewise extended to the power of voting enjoyed by the ecclesiastical body and the free districts.

IV. His Imperial Majesty has, in his fatherly care for the reasonable and due advancement of the royal free cities, and in consideration of the prayers of the citizens that a constitutional establishment of the free and mining cities may be effected as soon as possible, determined to submit the accompanying proposal with this view to the honourable Members, in order that the deliberation of the Diet upon this most important subject may be hastened, and the object proposed attained as soon as possible.

V. For the security of the possession of property in land, and in the interest of the private credit which actually depends upon this, it is necessary that the laws concerning the purchase and transfer of land should be carefully altered; that the mode of carrying on law-suits with reference to this should likewise be clearly laid down; that land-registration books should be introduced; and that courts of law should be established for the maintenance of these regulations in each comitat.

To promote this object His Imperial Majesty communicates to the honourable Members the accompanying propositions for their consideration, and refers them at the same time to the 6th section of the Royal Propositions at the last Diet.

VI. The permission for those persons who are subject to the laws of "Roboth," to buy themselves free for ever, has been, it is true, declared by law; but the carrying out of this is connected with many difficulties. In order, therefore, to render the attainment of the object of this legal declaration more easy, His Imperial Majesty wishes the honourable Members, in the course of the assembly of this very Diet, to submit to his gracious approval a proposition for a law so that the assigned object may be obtained after setting aside all the obstacles arising from the present state of the law, always in consideration of what is reasonable and with due regard to the rights of property.

VII. With regard to the prosperity of commerce and manufacture in the interior, His Imperial Majesty has no more ardent desire than that the existing commercial relations between Hungary and Austria should be arranged for the reciprocal profit of both, and that commerce should likewise be extricated from the present existing impediments caused by imperious necessity alone.

For the attainment of this object His Imperial Majesty has no better plan to propose than the abolition of the Custom-house barriers between Hungary and the other Austrian States. But the adoption of this measure requires on the one hand the constitutional co-operation of the Diet, on account of the circumstances connected with it, and, on the other hand, it demands the most careful and deliberate consideration, on account of the considerable reaction which it will produce upon the present condition of the Austrian hereditary States, and the revenue of the State. His Imperial Majesty has consequently thought fit to call on the honourable Members to deliberate carefully upon the best means for attaining this object, and to submit the result of their deliberations as soon as possible to him, in order that His Imperial Majesty (who has already directed that the existing official reports upon the Hungarian commerce should be communicated to the honourable Members) may at an early period be able to make the necessary regulations respecting the further means of assistance which may be suggested in the progress of the deliberations; so that after every possible light has been thrown on the subject, he may be able to obtain laws which will meet the mutual interests of all, and to make the necessary dispositions.

VIII. Since all endeavours to improve the trade of the country, however praiseworthy they may be, must remain without result, owing to the want of proper means of communication in the country, His Imperial Majesty in order to prepare and facilitate the solution of the present question by first establishing the data and the preparatory steps, has been pleased to form the Imperial Stathaltery, a department for consideration of the means of communication. His Imperial Majesty has also resolved to afford considerable assistance to the principal private undertakings, and especially to the construction of the central line of railroad, and to encourage the patriotic endeavours of the company formed for the regulation of the River Theiss.

His Imperial Majesty has hereby given fresh proofs of his paternal desire to improve the material interests of the country, and calls upon the States, in reference to the scarcity which in past years occurred in several parts of the kingdom, also in consequence of the defective means of communication, to resume the deliberations begun in the last Diet relative to the means of meeting the general necessities of the country, and to ensure not only the advantageous result of the undertaking for the regulation of the Theiss, which is so important a point in the national economy of the country, but also to further the other means of communication in regard to which, be it observed, that in as far as relates to the charter and guarantee of the Fiume railroad, neither the expense of its construction, nor of the previous works, nor the means of covering the interest thereof, were pointed out in the propositions of the last Diet. Moreover, as the said Communication Department has already been informed how far the States are in this instance to refer to the President, in order to submit to him the data and preparatory labours now collected together, His Majesty calls upon them to work out the propositions in such a manner that they may at the same time include the foundation of a national fund, already recognized as necessary by Article XXX, 1802, and also the way and manner of its establishment.

IX. His Imperial Majesty lays before the States in the annexed propositions the result of the previous operations and negotiations which must necessarily precede the execution of Article XXXI of 1836, with the request that whereas, besides the circumstances which impede the carrying into execution of Article XXXI of the law, the petition of the States of Transylvania to be admitted to a further union with Hungary, so often and so recently presented to His Imperial Majesty, supported by the weight of the judicial authorities, who are concerned therein, claim in the highest degree the attention of the legislature, the States will take into due consideration all the circumstances which appertain to the subject.

X. That which His Majesty suggested to the States in the Royal Propositions of the year 1844, namely, that they should draw up the project of a law, based upon the proceedings of the Commission named according to Article V, 1840, for the purpose of framing a code of criminal law and a system of improvement, has now become a still more urgent necessity. His Imperial Majesty can come to no satisfactory conclusion relative to the representation of the Diet upon the system of prison discipline, till the States have come to an agreement respecting the mode of punishment, and the question of who shall exercise the criminal jurisdiction. His Majesty hopes that the States will not delay to lay before him the first and second parts of the Penal Code.

XI. Whereas the Royal Treasury, burdened with so many expenses of the State, cannot spare the sums amounting to 528,566 fl. C M., and 24,313 fl. W. W., which were advanced by the Treasury in consequence of the exhaustion of the national funds, at the intercession of His Imperial Highness the late Archduke Palatine, His Majesty wishes that in compliance with Article VIII of the Royal Propositions of the year 1843, the States would take measures for the speedy repayment of the said sums to the Treasury.

This is what His Majesty deigns to submit to the States, in expectation that the Diet will provide for the maintenance of due order and moderation, and for the insurance of the freedom of speech and opinion from all external influence, and from such lamentable manifestations as took place during the last Diet. His Majesty has moreover but to assure the Diet of his gracious favour.

EDUARD VON ZSEDENYI.

No. 3.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 27.)
MY LORD, Vienna, January 19, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship 2 despatches which I have received from Mr. Blackwell, inclosing his report on the proceedings of the Hungarian Diet at Presburg.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.
(Extract.) Presburg, December 22, 1847.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency a summary of the proceedings of the Diet.

The principal question under discussion has been the address.

In the address voted by the Delegates, paragraphs 1 to 6 inclusive convey the customary expression of thanks, and were passed unanimously by both Houses.

In sections 16 and 17, His Majesty is requested to summon a Diet annually in Pesth. If the Delegates had merely requested that the Diets might in future be held at Pesth, these paragraphs would also have been unanimously adopted; but the word "annually" precluded the Magnates of the Government party from assenting to the proposal, although several of them are fully convinced that the summoning of an annual Diet is a measure imperatively required, and which cannot be much longer delayed. I may here remark, that the last Diet passed a bill, or, more properly speaking, a resolution, for the erection of a Dietal Palace in Pesth, and published a prospectus, in several languages, offering a prize for the best plan, &c. A few days ago I was surprised to find no less than 40, sent from all parts of Europe, 3 of them from England. These plans will be submitted to a Dietal Committee, and a representation no doubt sent to His Majesty on the subject.

The 14th section expresses, in answer to the 7th Royal Proposition, the willingness of the Diet to pass measures "for adjusting the conflicting interests of Hungary and Austria," a somewhat vague phrase, inserted probably to meet the views of all parties. The contemplated removal of the intermediate customs line is, however, a measure that will encounter the most violent opposition. The Liberal party regard this line as one of the safeguards of Hungarian nationality. Hence, a question that is apparently a purely commercial one, assumes, like every other question in this country, a political tendency. The line forms a barrier, though a commercial one, between Hungary and Austria. This, irrespective of its commercial advantages or disadvantages, is quite sufficient for it to find favour with the Hungarian Liberals, who declare that, if it were possible, they would convert it into a wall of brass. In a commercial point of view, the removal of the intermediate line would unquestionably be advantageous to Hungary; but unless the Austrian Tariff be at the same time rendered much less prohibitory, the measure would be a further impediment to Hungary entering into commercial relations with foreign States; whereas if the line were kept up, as the Liberal party in Hungary wish it to be, and the Diet allowed to exercise its acknowledged constitutional right to regulate the Hungarian customs duties, there would be a much greater prospect of a fresh market being opened for British manufactures.

Paragraphs 7 to 13 relate to the so-called grievances of the nation. It was these paragraphs, especially the 11th, which furnished the principal topic of discussion in the 2 Houses. The great question of the day in Hungary, is, in fact, the nomination of administrators alluded to in the 11th paragraph. As this is a measure that may lead to very important political results, I will not venture, at present, to pronounce a decided opinion respecting it; both parties having cited the same Dietal Acts: the one to show the illegality of the measure, the other to prove that it is in strict accordance with the law. That it has greatly modified the system of Comitatal administration in Hungary is, however, unquestionable. I will merely observe, at present, that Count Apponyi (the present Chancellor) deemed it expedient to render the office of Lord-Lieutenant of a county merely nominal, by appointing, in upwards of twenty counties, administrators to exercise all the functions which the Lords-Lieutenant ought to have exercised, although they very seldom thought proper to do so.

However, notwithstanding all the efforts which the administrators are said to have made to influence the elections, the Government party still remains in the minority. In the last Diet the Liberals had, on most questions, a majority in the Lower House, varying from 10 to 25. In the present Diet they have only been able to show a majority of from 2 to 4, viz., on the Address, taxation not being regarded as a party question, although they boast that on other questions this majority will be much greater, at least 20. However, be this as it may, a majority of 2 or 20 will lead to the same result. The Government being, as usual, in a majority in the Upper House, and in a minority in the Lower one, very few measures will be carried; and as party spirit will always rise higher, the Government will be obliged either to make very important concessions or to dissolve the Diet, unless they should prefer letting it wear itself out, like the last one, it being obvious that, so long as the 2 Houses are animated by a different spirit, nothing effective can be accomplished.

A person unacquainted with Hungarian politics would imagine that unanimity prevailed on most questions submitted to the consideration of the present Diet. But with all this apparent unanimity of opinion, there was perhaps never a Diet held in Hungary in which the 2 parties differed so materially in their views as in the present one. The Conservatives wish to carry out the necessary reforms with the co-operation of the Government, and under what they term "its legitimate and constitutional influence." The Opposition, as will be seen by their famous "Programme," have lost all confidence in the Government, and hence are too apt to regard even the most wholesome measures that are supported by the Government party, with undue suspicion. The 2 parties have also totally different objects in view. The Conservatives wish to effect a moderate reform in the existing institutions, in a manner that would tend to strengthen the ties that unite Hungary to Austria. The Liberals, although with professions of loyalty, attachment to the Imperial dynasty, &c., wish to sever these ties, and make Hungary an independent kingdom. The final object which they profess to have in view is, what they term administrative independence; but it is obvious that if this object should ever be attained, and Hungary have its responsible Ministry, its national treasury, national army, &c., administrative independence would soon be converted into national independence, and the ancient crown of St. Stephen again encircle the brows of a Magyar Sovereign.

I conceive it to be my duty, whilst I am here, to give an impartial statement of facts, and to show with equal impartiality the spirit that animates the different parties, as well as the tendency of the measures brought before the Diet. If the struggle between the 2 parties led to no further results than a modification, for better or worse, of the Hungarian social institutions, it would possess little interest for other countries. It is, for instance, a matter of comparative indifference for England, whether the Hungarian free towns obtain the right of voting at the Diet or not; whether the new system of Comital administration be suffered to take root or be abolished; whether the Aviticity laws be reformed or still allowed to exercise their baneful influence. But when it can be shown that the fate of the Austrian Empire is involved in this struggle, that which at first view appears to be mere party contention, assumes a much higher degree of importance, and claims the attention of statesmen.

Regarding Hungarian affairs in this light, I have deemed it advisable to classify my reports as follows, viz. :

1st. A summary of the proceedings of the Diet.

2nd. Explanatory remarks.

3rd. Supplementary documents, or what the French term pièces justificatives.

4th. Documents relating to commercial affairs; and

5th. Letters or despatches officially addressed to your Excellency.

I will merely observe, at present, that although the Government party is more numerous in the present Diet than in the last one, this accession of strength is probably more apparent than real, and is fully counterbalanced by the Liberal party being much better organised than when I was last in Hungary, not only in the Diet, but, if I may rely on their own statements, throughout the country. They held for the first time regular quarterly meetings at Pesth during the inter-Dietal period—have been drilled into something like order and subordination under acknowledged leaders—have established an active correspondence with the counties in their interest—and made known their views in a programme—an analysis of which I have given in the supplementary documents, No. 1. I should not however be surprised to find this organisation become much looser before the end of the Diet. This at least was the case during the last Diet; the Opposition forming a much more compact body at its commencement than at its close. They have also lost some of their most talented men.

THE Diet was opened on the 11th of November by the King (1)* in person. On the 12th a mixed sitting (of both Houses) was held. The Magnates and Delegates then went to the Primatial Palace to hear the Royal propositions read. On their return they proceeded in conformity with the first proposition, to elect a Palatine, when the

* See Explanatory Remarks, page 613.

Archduke Stephen, son of the late Palatine, was elected by general acclamation; the Royal rescript, containing the names of 4 candidates (2 Catholics and 2 Protestants, as prescribed by law), remaining unopened.

On the 15th another mixed sitting was held, when the newly-elected Palatine was duly installed, and made a suitable speech on the occasion.

On the 16th the Royal propositions were read at a Dietal sitting (2) of the Delegates.

By these propositions, 11 in number, the Diet is called upon,—

1st. To elect a Palatine in conformity with the Dietal Act 3, 1608.

And to take into consideration various important measures specified in the following propositions, viz.:

2nd. The manner of provisioning and quartering the troops stationed in Hungary; the Royal rescript of Nov. 10, 1844, and the bill annexed to this proposition, to serve as the basis of their deliberations.

3rd. The claim of the Royal free towns to exercise the right of voting at the Diet, and the expediency of extending this constitutional right to the ecclesiastical corporations (chapters of cathedrals) and the free districts.

4th. The co-ordination (i.e., the reform of the corporations) of the Royal free towns; a bill for which object is annexed to the proposition, and submitted to the Diet.

5th. The laws and usages relating to mortgages of manorial estates, for the amendment of which a bill is annexed to the proposition, its chief feature being the introduction of a system of registration (hypothecary registers).

6th. The urbarial laws, (i.e., the laws relating to the lords of manors and their peasant tenantry, with a view of abolishing the roboth (corvée); the Dietal Acts 8, 1836, and 7, 1840, which permit this roboth to be commuted into a money rent, or to be redeemed for perpetuity, by mutual agreement of the parties concerned, not having been found effective.

7th. The regulation of the commercial relations of Hungary and Austria in a manner conformable to the interests of both countries; His Majesty being, moreover, of opinion that nothing would be more conducive to these interests than the removal of the intermediate customs line. Such a measure, he states, will require the most mature deliberation, on account of the peculiar circumstances connected with it and the questions it involves, as well as in respect to its bearing on the Austrian States and the Royal revenue. His Majesty therefore wishes the Diet to inquire into the means by which so desirable a result may be obtained, and to submit their views to him as soon as possible; for which purpose His Majesty has been graciously pleased to order that the official data respecting the trade of Hungary be laid before them.

8th. In this proposition His Majesty states that all the efforts for extending the trade of Hungary having hitherto been unavailing on account of the want of roads and other facilities for the conveyance of merchandize, he has deemed it expedient to form a special section, or board of public work, in the Vice-Regal Council, and has, moreover, assisted by loans of money several private undertakings; as, for instance, the Central Hungarian Railway Company, and the Company for the regulation of the River Theiss. His Majesty, therefore, wishes the Diet to take the important question of public works into their serious consideration, and, among other matters, to direct their attention to the representation (bill) presented by the last Diet, respecting a railway to Fiume, in which neither a satisfactory estimate of the cost, nor the sources from which is to be derived the sum that would probably be required to cover the guarantee of interest to a company, are sufficiently specified.

9th. His Majesty recommends the States (3) to take into their consideration the documents which will be laid before them respecting the re-incorporated Transylvanian counties (4).

10th. His Majesty expresses a hope that the States will resume their labours on the Criminal Code, the Code presented by the last Diet, and for which that drawn up by a Dietal commission appointed for the purpose in the year 1844, served as basis, not being sufficiently complete to receive His Majesty's sanction.

11th. His Majesty requests the payment of 53,828*l.*, advanced by the Royal Treasury for national purposes.

On November 22nd, the debate on the address in answer to the royal propositions, commenced in the Chamber of Delegates [circular sitting (5)]. The Conservative, or so-called Government party, wished to limit the address to the usual expression of thanks. The Opposition, or so-called National party, contended that an allusion ought to be made to the gravamina, and especially to the recent nominations of administrators of counties, which they held to be an unconstitutional measure of the most dangerous tendency. Kossuth [pronounced Kosh-shut], delegate of the county of Pesth, who may be regarded as the leader of the Opposition in the Lower House, made a 2 hours' speech on the occasion, which he concluded by reading the draft of an address embodying the sentiments of his party. He was answered by Count Stephen Széchenyi, who, in the present Diet, sits in the Lower House as the delegate of the county of Moson [Wieselburg], and professes at least not to belong to any party. The address which he proposed, after the usual expression of thanks, alluded in general terms to the gravamina, with the remark that the Diet would subsequently send up a representation respecting them. He agreed, however, with Kossuth, that both an account of these gravamina and the numerous measures that required to be taken into consideration, His Majesty should be requested to summon a Diet to meet annually in the city of Pesth.

On the 27th, after a 6 days' debate, Kossuth's motion was carried, but only by a single vote (28 to 27), or if only the Comitatal votes be reckoned, and they are practically the only ones taken into account, by a majority of 3; 26 counties voting for the motion, and 23, the delegate of Croatia included, against it.

On December 1st this resolution was confirmed at a Dietal sitting, and the address thus voted sent up to the Magnates. It is worded as follows:

" 1. Your Majesty's faithful States summoned to the present Diet enter with pleasure on the laborious task of legislation, incited by the hope of their efforts leading to a favourable result.

" 2. With pleasure, because this has been the first time for centuries that the Hungarian nation has had the happiness of hearing from the lips of its crowned Sovereign the cherished tones of its native tongue.

" 3. With the hope of their efforts leading to a favourable result, from the consideration of your Majesty having presented the Arch-duke Stephen to the nation, and by this pledge of mutual affection strengthened that tie by which we are indissolubly attached—by law, by interest, and by predilection—to the Imperial dynasty, and through this dynasty to the entire monarchy.

" 4. May your Majesty therefore be graciously pleased to accept the ardent thanks of the nation.

" 5. We also cannot refrain from mentioning that, by the royal propositions read to us on the 11th November, several questions have been submitted to our consideration, the decision of which has long formed one of our most ardent desires. We trust that this may be regarded as a proof that between the nation and its ruler no misunderstanding subsists.

" 6. Having succeeded in responding to the first of the royal propositions in a manner strictly conformable to the interests both of the Government and the nation, there is nothing we more ardently desire than to acquire the conviction that in treating the other questions contained in the propositions, as well as the ulterior measures which the necessities of the country imperatively demand, this fortunate coincidence may not be wanting: that the views of the Monarch and the wishes of the nation may have the same tendency.

" 7. While we, therefore, joyfully embrace this opportunity of conveying to your Majesty the expression of our sincere thanks and our unshaken loyalty, we also regard it as our duty frankly to make mention of those obstacles, without the removal of which we can perceive no guarantee of the future.

“ 8. The chief obstacle to our social progress consists, in our opinion, in the Dietal Act 10, 1790, not having hitherto been fully realized; for the Government of our country does not yet possess that independence which, according to law, it ought to possess.

“ 9. This obstacle is the more serious on account of the very essential difference that exists in the fundamental principles of our legislative and administrative systems. It is owing to this circumstance that, in considering the questions submitted to us at our Diets and called for by the wants of the age, we cannot calculate with any degree of certainty how far the views of the Government and those of the nation may coincide.

“ 10. Our preliminary and other grievances (gravamina) which we have repeatedly laid before the Throne from Diet to Diet, still remain unredressed, which increases the doubt that we must necessarily entertain of the operation even of the most wholesome laws that may be enacted, a doubt which is justified by the fact that the execution and promulgation of our laws is not fully guaranteed. It is thus that the Dietal Act 20, 1836, has not yet been put in execution; and that the Acts on religious affairs and on bills of exchange have not even been promulgated in the districts constituting the military frontiers.

“ 11. To this must be added, that along with a tendency to set aside the influence of the legislature, a tendency to increase the power of the Administration is also clearly apparent. As a proof of what we here advance we may cite those recent measures for reducing into a system the hitherto exceptional employ of county administrators, as well as those respecting the county congregations; measures which are at variance with our Comitatal administration, as established by the Dietal Acts 56, 1723, and 36, 1536.

“ 12. The special cases herein mentioned will serve to give your Majesty a general idea of our present position. We shall hereafter venture to submit our views also respecting the details, with the remark that we regard the removal of these obstacles as an essential condition of the organic reform of our social institutions.

“ 13. We are convinced that the expediency of removing these obstacles and equitably adjusting the conflicting interests they give rise to will not escape your majesty's paternal solicitude, solely directed to the welfare of your people. With this hope we enter willingly into the consideration of the questions contained in the Royal propositions, and which have been called for by the exigences of the nation. We shall also not neglect to lay our grievances before your Majesty in conformity with the Dietal Act 13, 1790.

“ 14. We have no hesitation in stating that we are willing to pass such measures as may lead to an equitable adjustment of the conflicting interests of Hungary and the hereditary States; the more so as we are convinced that the difficulties in the way of this adjustment do not proceed from the nature of the relations themselves.

"15. Great and arduous is the task of the coming times! It is ours to develop to the utmost extent our social institutions, grounded on constitutional rights, as well as our material resources. It is that of your Majesty to make these coincide with the intellectual development and the material interests of the entire monarchy swayed by your sceptre, in conformity with the principles of justice and the exigences of the age.

"16. Taking into consideration the numerous and important measures that will have to be submitted to us, it appears to us an object of paramount necessity that a Diet should be held annually in the city of Pesth.

"17. We have to beg that your Majesty may be graciously pleased to give the nation the assurance beforehand that its wishes in this respect may be complied with.

"18. We trust that in this manner and with the aid of the infinite goodness of the Almighty, some steps may be taken towards the end we have in view."

The Address voted by the Delegates was read in the Chamber of Magnates on December 4th, and gave rise to a six days' debate. All the amendments proposed by the Conservatives (Government party) having been carried by very considerable majorities. (6.)

On the 13th the Address was sent back to the Delegates with a renuncium, in which the Magnates stated that they would prefer laying before the Throne the simple expression of their thanks without alluding to the gravamina, the more so as these gravamina would have to be taken into consideration and submitted to His Majesty during the course of the Diet. If, however, the Delegates insisted on alluding to them, they (the Magnates) were of opinion that it ought to be in general terms. That the nomination of administrators was a question in which they would not enter, but were of opinion that until it could be proved that such nomination was an unconstitutional measure, it could not be called a grievance, and ought not to be alluded to. They therefore suggested the propriety of omitting altogether the 8th, 9th, and 11th paragraphs. They further stated, that although they fully agreed with the Delegates on the expediency of holding the Diet in the city of Pesth, the general wish of the nation in this respect had already been laid before the Throne in several Dietal representations; and, without entering into the question of annual Diets, they were of opinion that it would be more appropriate to send up a special representation on the subject, than to mention it in the address, and for these reasons must also suggest the propriety of omitting the 16th and 17th paragraphs.

On the 15th, 16th, and 17th, a very stormy debate—frequently interrupted by the cheers and clamour of the young men in the galleries—took place in the circular sittings of the Chamber of Delegates, on this renuncium. Very violent language was made use of by several Delegates of the Liberal party. The administrators were compared with the district-captains of Galicia, and stigmatized as the salaried tools of an arbitrary Government, ready, when called upon, to do the same dirty work as their Galician colleagues. To this Somsich, a Government official and Delegate of the county of Baranya, replied, that there was a great difference between the Hungarian administrators and the Galician district-captains, the former being under a constitutional, and the latter under an absolute authority. Kossuth said that as the 2 Houses differed respecting constitutional principles, it would be a mere waste of time to enter into any further discussion on the Address, or to send it back to the Magnates. He therefore moved that it should be deposited or dropped, i. e., that no further notice should be taken of it, adding that they would have an opportunity of expressing their thanks to His Majesty for opening the Diet, &c., in one of the Dietal representations. The Conservative Delegates tried to refute this argument, and one of them even went so far as to say that the Magnates had misunderstood the address, and that he was convinced that on maturer consideration, they would, with a few trifling modifications, agree to it. Kossuth's motion was, however, carried by a majority of 4,—25 counties voting for, and 21 against it; 2 or 3 counties having furnished their Delegates with fresh instructions either to vote for it, or to insist on the paragraph respecting the administrators being retained.

On the 20th, this resolution was confirmed at a Dietal sitting, the personal* striving in vain to persuade the Delegates to rescind it, and send the address to the Magnates, he being persuaded, he said, that the 2 Houses would soon come to an understanding on the subject. However, a nuncium was sent to the Magnates, announcing the fact of the address having been deposited, and stating the motives which had induced the Delegates to have recourse to such a proceeding.

The other proceedings of the Diet (up to the Christmas recess) may be classified as follows:

A. Measures recommended to be taken into consideration in the Royal propositions.

a. The Alimentation of the Troops stationed in Hungary. (2nd R. Proposition.)

* See Remark 2, page 613.

On December 13th, the Delegates sent a nuncium to the Magnates, together with a representation requesting that His Majesty would be pleased to appoint a Royal Commissioner to act with a Dietal Committee to be appointed for the final settlement of this question. On the nuncium and representation being read, the Palatine observed that it was unnecessary to send the latter, a Royal Commissioner being already in Presburg. (7.)

b. Co-ordination of the Royal Free Towns. (3rd and 4th R. Proposition.)

On November 29th, a Committee of Delegates (8) was appointed to draw up a bill on this question, and to make use for this purpose both of the bill annexed to the 2nd Royal Proposition, and of that which gave rise to so much discussion during the last Diet. (9.)

c. The Laws relating to the Mortgages of Manorial Estates. (5th Royal Proposition.)

This question was discussed in the Lower House on December 13th, when it was resolved to appoint a Committee (of Delegates) to draw up a bill that should embrace the question in all its bearings, not only in respect to the mortgage, but also to the tenure of manorial (allodial) estates, with a view of abolishing, or at least of greatly amending the existing law of Aviticity. (10.) The Committee to make use, for this purpose, of the bill annexed to the 5th Royal Proposition, as well as of the report made to the last Diet by the Committee specially appointed to inquire into the laws and usages relating to Aviticity, and propose measures for their amendment and final abolition.

d. Urbarial Laws. (6th Royal Proposition.)

The expediency of amending the existing laws that define the mutual relations of manorial lords and their tenant peasantry, was discussed in the Chamber of Delegates on December 3rd and 6th. All parties agreed that the Roboth ought to be abolished; the Opposition citing the sanguinary acts perpetrated in Galicia, to show what use might be made of a peasantry compelled by law to work for their landlords. The House was also unanimously of opinion that, as the Dietal Acts of 1836 and 1840 had not been effective, a compulsory law ought to be passed by the present Diet. Several Delegates contended that the law ought to be compulsory for both parties; that the peasants should be compelled either to redeem their Roboth for perpetuity, or to commute it into an annual money rent, in the manner specified in the above-mentioned Acts of the Diets of 1836 and 1840; and that the landlords should likewise be compelled to accept this redemption or commutation. It was, however, decided by a majority of 24, —37 counties for, and 13 against—that the law should only be compulsory for the landlords, they being entitled to a full compensation for the loss which, by the change of system, they would have to sustain. A resolution was also passed to appoint a Committee to draw up a bill on the subject. The question whether this should be a Dietal or a Circular Committee (11), gave rise to an animated debate, which ended by the House deciding, by a majority of 8, in favour of a Dietal Committee. These resolutions were confirmed at a Dietal sitting on December 21st, and a nuncium sent to the Magnates requesting them to agree to the appointment of a Dietal Committee, on the conditions that the contemplated measures should be framed in conformity with the resolutions passed by the Delegates.

B. Measures not mentioned in the Royal Propositions.

a. The late Palatine.

A proposal to found a beneficent institution in commemoration of the late Palatine, the said institution to bear his name, has been unanimously adopted by both houses. They have also unanimously resolved to send a representation to request that, in consideration of the services of the late Palatine, His Majesty may be graciously pleased to make the Archduke Stephen, the present Palatine, a donation of a Crown domain.

b. Croation Affairs.

On November 29, the Delegates appointed a Circular Committee to investigate the causes that have led to the Croation agitation, and collect the necessary data respecting the same, with a view of framing an Act to remedy the evil. There are 12 county Delegates on this Committee; all belong to the Liberal party, Kossuth being the chairman.

c. General Taxation.

On November 29th, Szemere [Sem-er-y], the Delegate of the county of Borsod, one of the most liberal and at the same time most Protestant counties in Hungary, brought the question of general taxation before the Lower House. In conformity with the present system, the county rates (cassa domestica) and the war-tax (12) are levied almost exclusively on sessional (peasants') property. The peasants, in fact, have to pay all, or pretty nearly all, the direct taxes; the nobles (13) being totally exempt from direct taxation. Szemere concluded his speech with three proposals in the form of questions, viz.:

1st. Are the nobles willing to pay, conjointly with the non-nobles (peasants), the county rates?

This question was answered in the affirmative by a majority of 17.

2nd. Are the nobles willing to contribute their share to the war-tax?

Negatived by a majority of 15.

3rd. Are the nobles willing to pay a direct tax into a national treasury, the funds so raised to be applied for objects of national utility, such as the making of roads, &c.?

Answered in the affirmative by a majority of 44; that is to say, almost unanimously.

These resolutions having been confirmed at a Dietal sitting held on December 7th, a nuncium was sent to the Magnates, requesting them to consent to the appointment of a Dietal Committee on the subject, the Delegates assuming that the resolutions they had passed respecting the payment of county rates, and a general tax by the nobles, could not fail of being adopted by the Upper House. They at the same time observed that they were of opinion that it would be advisable to raise the funds for national purposes more by indirect than by direct taxation, the details of which, as well as the most expedient manner of exercising a Dietal control over the administration of the said funds, they would leave to the consideration of the proposed committee. This nuncium has not as yet been discussed by the Magnates; but they will no doubt consent to the appointment of a mixed committee on the question.

d. Liberty of the Press.

On November 29th, the Delegates appointed a Circular Committee to inquire into the present regulations respecting the press, with a view of abolishing the censorship, which is regarded by the Diet as existing merely de facto, but not de jure, no Dietal Act having ever been passed for its establishment in Hungary. Szemere and Count Stephen Széchenyi are on this committee, and of the 17 members that compose it, 12 at least are Liberals.

A very animated debate had previously taken place (on November 16th), respecting the establishment of a free Dietal newspaper—that is to say, of a daily paper, in which a full and impartial account of the proceedings of the Diet should be given,—which led to a general discussion on the degree of liberty that, in a constitutional country, ought to be accorded to the press; the most moderate of the Liberal party admitting that some measures of a repressive nature were essential for its due regulation.

Somsich [Shom-sich], Delegate of the county of Baranya, and a member of the Vice-Regal Council, and consequently in the employ of the Government, spoke against the censorship, which he designated as a system that no longer answered the purpose for which it had been introduced, as a worn-out system, in fact, for which a more rational one ought to be substituted. “I believe, therefore,” he added, “that I am acting in conformity with the views of the Government, when I vote for a repressive law on the press.”

The motion for the establishment of a free Dietal newspaper was carried, although the Conservative, and even several of the Opposition

Delegates spoke against it, on the ground that an impartial newspaper would be a mere journal; that the scheme was in fact visionary and impracticable.

These resolutions having been confirmed at a Dietal sitting, a nuncium was sent to the Magnates on the subject, who, in a renuncium, suggested the expediency of referring the measure to the above-mentioned Committee on the Press, adding that they would take into due consideration any bill framed on the report of the said Committee that might be sent to them from the Lower House.

e. Magyarism, or Measures relating to the Hungarian Language and to Nationality, Naturalization, &c.

The Liberals having hitherto succeeded in their efforts respecting Magyarism—the Magyar language being at present the language, by law established, of the Legislature, the courts of justice, and, with the exception of the Post-office and the Customs, of every department of the Administration—have drawn up a fresh bill, in which the clauses that they were obliged to strike out of a bill passed by the last Diet in order that it might receive the royal sanction, have been embodied. This bill, and another on the naturalization of foreigners, both having the same object in view, viz., the preservation and propagation of Magyarism, are at present in the first stage of discussion in the Circular sittings of the Delegates.

One of the clauses of the bill, intituled “On the Hungarian Language and Nationality,” decrees that, after the passing of the Act, Magyar is to be the official language of the Post and Customs Departments, and that the official seals of every department of the Administration are to bear Magyar inscriptions. Another clause requires that a coinage, bearing inscriptions in the Magyar language, be struck for Hungary; and that vessels belonging to the Hungarian Littoral bear the Hungarian, and not the Austrian flag (like the Danubian steamers when they are within the Hungarian territories.)

f. The Comitatal Administration Question.

When the motion for the deposition of the address was carried in the Lower House, the Delegates passed a resolution to the effect that the Committee on Croatian Affairs should be charged to inquire into and make a report on the system of Comitatal administration introduced by the present Chancellor; the fact of the address having been deposited showing that the House regarded the recent nominations of county administrators as an unconstitutional measure. This Committee has been actively engaged during the Christmas recess, and will shortly make a report, which will no doubt give rise to a very animated discussion.

(Inclosure 3.)—Explanatory Remarks.

1. FERDINAND I, Emperor of Austria, appears at the Diet as Ferdinand V, King of Hungary.

2. It may not be irrelevant to remark, that the Delegates hold Circular sittings and Dietal sittings. The former are presided over by 2 Delegates (taken in rotation), and correspond, in a great measure, to what in English parliamentary language is called a Committee of the whole House. The resolutions passed at these Circular sittings are not valid, unless they be confirmed at a Dietal sitting, which is presided over by the Chief Justice of the King's Bench (Tabula Regia), or the Personal (Personalis præsentis Regiæ locum tenens), as he is called. The Circular sittings have, however, of late years become by far the most important, the resolutions passed at them being generally confirmed at a Dietal sitting without much discussion, by the majority crying out "Maradjon" ("let it remain;" i. e., as it was decided at the Circular sittings.) It is only at the Dietal sittings that the Delegates wear their sabres and appear in the Hungarian costume.

3. In official language, the Diet is addressed by the term "States," or "States and Orders."

4. Three Transylvanian counties and a district that formerly belonged to Hungary, were re-incorporated by an Act of the Diet of 1836; but they have hitherto refused to send Delegates to the Hungarian Diet, and petitioned the Government to let them remain incorporated with Transylvania.

5. See Remark 2.

6. Strictly speaking, the Magnates do not make what in English parliamentary language would be called amendments to a Bill, but state, in a so-called renuncium, on what points they differ from the Delegates; suggest the expediency of omitting certain clauses, of modifying others, &c. If the Delegates find that the difference of opinion between the Houses is too great to admit of mutual concessions being made, the bill or measure in question is deposited, or dropped: that is to say, no further notice is taken of it, except that of notifying the fact in a nuncium to the Magnates. This, however, very rarely happens on the first renuncium, which is almost invariably taken into due consideration by the Delegates, and some of the suggestions of the Magnates adopted. A bill is thus frequently sent several times from one House to the other, concessions being reciprocally made at each stage, until it is finally adopted by both Houses. It is then read, signed, and sealed at a mixed sitting, and sent to the Hungarian Chancery at Vienna, with a so-called representation, requesting that His Majesty may be graciously pleased to sanction it. The Opposition contend that, as the Government can always command a majority in the Upper House, a bill that has passed through such an ordeal ought to receive the Royal sanction without delay, or, at all events, that the Royal sanction ought to be either given or refused ; whereas, in the generality of cases, the bill is sent back to the Diet, accompanied by a Royal rescript, stating that His Majesty is willing to sanction such and such clauses, but that others will have to be amended, &c. These suggestions of the Hungarian Chancery are then taken into consideration ; and as it generally happens that the Magnates are willing to adopt them, while the Delegates insist on the bill being sent back in its original form, or with very trifling modifications, a great deal of time is lost in useless discussion. Bills are thus frequently sent from the Hungarian Chancery to the Diet, and from one House to the other, until the close of the Diet, when the greater part of them are either deposited or the Royal sanction withheld.

7. The troops stationed in the Hungarian villages are quartered in the houses of the peasantry. The peasants are also obliged to furnish them with bread and other provisions, and the cavalry with forage, at a certain fixed price, which is always below the market price. This difference of price, called the "deperdita," constitutes a tax, the total amount of which has been calculated, though on very inadequate data, to vary from 100,000*l.* to 400,000*l.* per annum. The last Diet sent a representation, with an accompanying Act for the abolishment of this system, offering at the same time to pay annually 100,000*l.* into the Royal treasury by way of compensation. This, it would appear, was deemed an adequate sum ; but the Government intimated that certain clauses of the Act would have to be modified before it would receive the Royal sanction. The proposed Dietal Committee, in conjunction with the Royal Commissioner, will probably devise some means for finally settling this long-debated question, and thus free the peasants from an onerous burden, as well as from the demoralizing effects which the quartering of troops in their villages must necessarily produce.

8. Formerly most of the committees appointed at an Hungarian Diet were Dietal, that is to say, mixed committees of Delegates and Magnates, a certain number of members to sit on such a committee being named by each House. Of late years, however, the Delegates have very rarely had recourse to the Magnates, almost all the numerous committees appointed at the last and 2 preceding Diets having been committees of Delegates, or Circular committees, as they are termed. A Circular committee mostly consists of from 12 to 20 Delegates of counties, generally an equal number from each of the 4 circles (circulos) into which Hungary Proper is juridically divided, a Delegate of the Free Districts, an ecclesiastical Delegate, and 3 or 4 Delegates of Free Towns. It is needless to add, that in such committees the Liberal party is always in the majority. To the Delegates belongs, exclusively, the so-called initiative; that is to say, every measure, whether it be the introduction of a bill, a representation to the Sovereign, the appointment of a committee, or what not, must originate in the Lower House. The Government itself is in this respect quite powerless; its action being limited to His Majesty recommending his "faithful States and Orders" to take certain measures specified in the Royal Propositions into their consideration. So long, however, as the Government retains an influence over a single county, this limitation of its action will be practically remedied by the said county furnishing its Delegates with whatever instructions the Hungarian Chancery may think proper to suggest or dictate.

9. In the last Diet the 2 Houses finally agreed to allow the free towns 16 votes, on condition of their corporations undergoing a thorough reform. It was respecting the extent to which this reform ought to be carried, that a difference of opinion prevailed, and as the Delegates would make no further concessions, the bill, which had gone the usual round several times, was finally dropped.

10. Aviticity. Right of resumption, upon certain conditions, of lands disposed of by sale at a former period.

11. See Remark 8.

12. Each of the Hungarian counties has a so-called Cassa Domestica, into which the county rates, levied exclusively on sessional or peasants' property, are paid. The war-tax, raised for the maintenance of the Hungarian troops, amounts to about half a million sterling. This tax is rated at so much per Porta, Hungary being divided for this purpose into 6,210 Portæ; 5,655 of which fall on the peasants, and 555 on the burgesses of the free towns. The peasants are also obliged to make their roads, such as they are, and render many other services, for a very inadequate remuneration.

13. The word "noble" has a very different signification in Hungary than in other countries, and is, strictly speaking, applied to designate a man enjoying certain rights and privileges, among which that of being exempt from taxation has hitherto been the most highly prized. The Hungarian nobles may, however, be classed as follows:

A. The Titled Nobles, Princes, Counts, and Barons, or the Nobility, as they would be termed in England.

These are the Magnates, or Peers of the realm, and appear at the Diet in their own right, either in person or by proxy. The proxies of Magnates, if in fact they may be so called, sit, however, or more properly speaking, stand in the Lower House, and are not allowed either to speak or vote.

B. The Untitled Nobles, viz.:

a. Those who possess estates, or who have studied the law. A class from which the county magistrates and the Delegates are elected, and which corresponds to that of our landed gentry. These gentlemen generally prefix to their names in German von, and in French de.

b. The Half-spurred Nobles, as they are termed, or those who possess only a small piece of ground, or, to use the Hungarian expression, "a house and four plum-trees." These form the mass of the electors.

c. Landless Nobles, who are consequently deprived of the elective franchise, and may be found gaining their livelihood in all capacities. The Hussars of the nobility frequently belong to this class.

(Inclosure 4.)—Supplementary Documents, or Pièces Justificatives.

No. 1.—PROGRAMME OF THE OPPOSITION.

THE Liberals—or the Opposition, as they are now generally called—after one of their quarterly meetings held at Pesth in March, 1847, made known their views and opinions by issuing a (lithographed) manifesto or programme, as the French would term it, which has been very widely circulated both in Hungary and Germany.

They begin this document by declaring that it is the vocation of the Opposition, in every Constitutional State, to exercise a control over the Government; and that they are determined to exercise such a control in every way that the constitution allows.

They profess that their opposition is not directed against persons, but against the system of government hitherto pursued. For the present Government of Hungary, they say, is not a national, but an alien (heterogenous) Government; a Government which, by ruling with absolute uncontrolled sway over the other States of the empire, is quite unfit for the administration of that State, viz., Hungary, which is in possession of a constitution.

They further declare that they can perceive no tendency towards the adoption of a better system, but that, on the contrary, the recent acts of the Government prove that the same anti-constitutional spirit still prevails. Their grievances, they say, which have been repeatedly laid before the Throne, are still unredressed; and they contend that a government that thus slights the legitimate voice of the people, violates the laws in as great a degree as the former Government by whose illegal acts these grievances arose; and that both are equally unentitled to claim the confidence of the nation.

As a proof of what they advance, they cite the grievances mentioned in the address; viz., the non-execution of the Dietal Acts relating to the re-incorporation of the Transylvanian counties; the non-promulgation of the Acts relating to Bills of Exchange and Religious Affairs within the districts constituting the military frontiers; the affairs of Croatia, &c.; and above all the introduction of what they term "an illegal and unconstitutional system of Comital administration," viz., the recent nomination of administrators alluded to in the address.

Under these circumstances they declare that they will use all their efforts to obtain further guarantees for the independence of the country.

Among such guarantees they mention—

A responsible Ministry ;

Liberty of the press ;

Union of Hungary and Transylvania ;

Publicity respecting everything relating to public affairs.

Among the reforms which they intend to propose at the next (that is to say at the present) Diet, they enumerate—

A system of general taxation for all classes, noble and non-noble, without distinction ;

The co-ordination of the free towns ;

Equality before the law ;

A reform of the Urbarial laws ;

The abolition of the Aviticity laws.

They conclude by saying—

" We shall continue, with unwearied zeal, to make use of every effort in our power for the attainment of these objects, without being unmindful of the relations which in accordance with the Pragmatic Sanction exist between Hungary and the Austrian hereditary States. We must observe, however, that our nationality is clearly laid down in the Dietal Act, § 10, anno 1790, and guaranteed by the sanction of a Royal oath. To this Act we shall tenaciously adhere ; for by it Hungary is declared and acknowledged to be, in all its administrative departments, a free and independent country, and therefore not subordinate to any other country. But while we shall carefully avoid placing the interests of Hungary in opposition to those of the entire monarchy, or rendering them incompatible with its unity and safety, we shall not suffer these interests to be rendered subservient, in an unreasonable and illegal manner, to those of the other States of the empire, as is actually the case in respect to our manufacturing industry and our commercial relations.

" Professing our willingness to support any measure that may tend to an equitable adjustment of the conflicting interests of Hungary and the hereditary States, we at the same time declare that we cannot tolerate a system that would sacrifice all our interests and our constitution itself to the so-called general administrative unity ; a kind of unity which by many is regarded as correlative with that of the monarchy. It was in the last quarter of the past century that the Government, by acting on this system of administrative unity, and offering us material advantages in exchange for our constitutional rights, attempted to subvert the nationality and independence of Hungary. It is to this system of administrative unity, developed, as it has constantly been, on the principles of absolutism, that all the free institutions of the Austrian hereditary States have been sacrificed. Our constitution is, however, a treasure which we cannot sacrifice for any advantages whatsoever. To maintain and invigorate this constitution is the first and most sacred duty that we owe to our country.

"We are convinced that if the old constitutional rights and liberties of the Austrian hereditary States still existed; if these States, in conformity with the demands of the age, and the principles of equity and justice, could be ranked amongst the constitutional nations of Europe—and the government of the entire monarchy, in its general system, as well as in every department of the administration, was grounded on constitutional principles, and animated by a constitutional spirit—we are convinced, we say, that our interests could then be easily combined with those which are at present in conflict with and even inimical to them; and that by a greater unity of interests and a greater degree of confidence being thus established, every part of the empire would be invigorated and knit together by a common tie, and the united monarchy, by a guarantee being thus afforded for its material and intellectual development, be enabled to brave with impunity the storms and convulsions by which it might hereafter be assailed."

(Extract.)

Presburg, January 6, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose the remaining sheets of the summary of the proceedings of the Diet up to the Christmas recess.*

The committees have been actively engaged during the recess in pursuing their inquiries, and a report will shortly be made to the Delegates respecting the new system of Comital administration. The debate on this question will show which party really possesses the majority in the Lower House, and probably induce the Government to take a decisive line of policy either in one direction or the other.

When I arrived here, the Conservatives assured me that their party was in the majority in the Lower House. When the motions respecting the address were carried against them, they said that the majority was "artificial and not natural," several Delegates having voted contrary to their instructions. The real fact I believe to be this, that the Delegates of two or three counties did not vote in strict conformity with their instructions, and might probably have voted on this particular question for either party, without materially infringing them.

The debate that will shortly take place in the Lower House will show which party really possesses the majority. Both parties are in the meantime making great exertions at the county congregations held at this season of the year, and at which the Comitatal administration question is the principal topic of discussion. As several counties will probably furnish their Delegates with fresh instructions, the statements of neither party can be implicitly relied on, although the Liberals declare that in the generality of cases these instructions will be in their favour.

The sittings of the Delegates recommence to-morrow; those of the Magnates on the 12th or 15th.

H.E. Viscount Ponsonby.

J. BLACKWELL.

No. 4.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Feb. 21.)
MY LORD, Vienna, February 16, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship 2 despatches I have received from Mr. Blackwell, containing a continuation of the summary of the proceedings of the Hungarian Diet.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.
(Extract.) Presburg, January 28, 1848.

IN the despatches of December 22, 1847, and January 6th instant, which I had the honour of addressing to your Excellency, I gave some account of the system of county administration introduced by Count Apponyi. I shall now enter more into the details of this system.

I must observe that there are 55 counties in Hungary; viz., 49—including the 3 reincorporated Transylvanian counties—in Hungary Proper, and 6 in the Partes Adnexæ, i.e., in Slavonia and Croatia; and that all the magistrates and officers of an Hungarian county are elected triennially by the nobles (freeholders) of the county at a general congregation, with the exception of the Comes Supremas or Lord-Lieutenant. In 3 counties this dignity is held ex-officio, the Palatine, the Primate, and the Archbishop of Erlau, being respectively the Lords-Lieutenant ex-officio of the counties of Pesth, Eztergom (Gran), and Heves. In 7 other counties the dignity is hereditary. In the remaining 45 counties the Lords-Lieutenant are appointed by the Crown.

A Lord-Lieutenant must possess landed property in the county over which he presides. He is regarded as the mediator between the county and the Crown, in the same manner as the Palatine is the mediator between the Crown and the nation. He, therefore, like the Palatine, holds his office for life, and, according to the strict letter of the law, is only removable for crimes and misdemeanours proved against him before a competent tribunal. He has no salary from the Government, but receives a remuneration for official expenses of 120%.

per annum from the county cassa. The Lords-Lieutenant are generally noblemen of rank and fortune. The office may, however, be held by a noble—[I use this word in contradistinction to “nobleman,” meaning by the latter a Magnate or person bearing the title of Prince, Count, or Baron],—who then becomes a Magnate ex-officio, and has a seat and vote in the Upper House.

It is useless to enter into a discussion of questions which at the present day have no practical bearing, otherwise I might show that in former times each county was probably represented at the Diet—when it was a uni-cameral and not a bi-cameral Assembly—by its Lord-Lieutenant, accompanied by a certain number of Delegates elected at a general congregation, or perhaps named directly or indirectly by the Lord-Lieutenant himself. Since the Diet has become a bi-cameral Assembly, the Delegates sit in the Lower and the Lords-Lieutenant in the Upper House, in which every one bearing the title of Prince, Count, or Baron, and who is not a minor, whether his father be living or not, has a seat and vote, which was probably in former times not the case.

Leaving, therefore, such questions as irrelevant to my present purpose, I must further observe that, for the counties in which the dignity is held ex-officio, it has been a long-established custom to appoint administrators or deputy Lords-Lieutenant, as they might be termed in English. For a county in which the dignity is hereditary, it has also been the custom to appoint an administrator whenever the Lord-Lieutenant happened to be a minor, the functions of the administrator ceasing with the minority of the Lord-Lieutenant. A few other exceptional cases might also be cited; but that these cases were exceptional, and only called for by peculiar circumstances, is, I think, undeniable; the arguments made use of to prove the contrary resting either on gratuitous assumptions or on inconclusive evidence.

The word “county” is a very inappropriate term to designate one of the 55 districts into which Hungary is divided, these districts having a much greater analogy with the Swiss Cantons or with the States of the American Union than they have either with the English counties or with the French departments. They may, in fact, almost be regarded as the independent States of a Confederation under the rule of an hereditary Monarch, whose constitutional authority is circumscribed within the narrowest possible limits. Hence the County Congregations declare themselves to be what they term autonomic, and not bound to acknowledge, for the affairs of their respective counties, any authority superior to their own.

With such a system, it is obvious that the only direct legitimate influence which the Government can exercise in a county, is through its Lord-Lieutenant. According to a Dietal Act passed in the beginning of the last century, a Lord-Lieutenant ought habitually to reside in his county, to preside over the County Congregations, and perform several other duties therein specified; but this Act, like too many other Hungarian laws, has remained a dead letter. A Lord-Lieutenant being, generally speaking, a man of rank and fashion, unacquainted with business, and until within these last 10 or 15 years, even unfamiliar with the vernacular idiom, only paid occasional visits to his county, generally for the purpose of giving a splendid banquet at a restoration, i.e., at the election of the county magistrates. By this dereliction of their duties the Lords-Lieutenant virtually abandoned what little influence they legitimately possessed; and the chief management of the affairs of a county necessarily fell into the hands of the Vice-Comes or Sheriff, whose interest, like that of all the other magistrates, was obviously to flatter the passions of the Assembly that had elected him, and to profess himself a supporter of Magyarism and Hungarian independence.

The Government has of late years sought to remedy this evil by appointing nobles (of the Class B 1) to fill the office of Lord-Lieutenant. There are, for instance, at the present moment no less than 13 Lords-Lieutenant belonging to this class, and who are consequently only Magnates ex-officio. This was a step which would eventually have led to the desired result. Nothing, in fact, could be said against it. According to law, all the Hungarian nobles, whatever difference may exist in other respects, are on a footing of perfect equality. This, I am aware, is not the case de facto, nor ever can be the case in any country. They are, however, all of them equal de jure, and both de jure and de facto are in the enjoyment of the same privileges. At a County Congregation the vote of a skin-clad noble who cultivates his plot of ground like a common peasant has the same weight as that of a Prince, and might turn the scale in favour of a Liberal or a Conservative candidate.

The nobles hitherto appointed to the office have been men possessing considerable landed property in their respective counties. The noble would by predilection habitually reside in his county, would be perfectly conversant with Comitatal affairs, by having held at different periods most of the county offices, and what is more, would, generally speaking, advise the Government to act on strictly Constitutional principles; whereas in 9 cases out of 10 the nobleman would reside either in Pesth or Vienna; would be ignorant of county affairs, and mingle in social intercourse with those who, although in the enjoyment of the same privileges, he would regard as an inferior class of society.

It is by having divested themselves of their exclusiveness, that the Magnates of the Liberal party have greatly increased their influence.

When Count Apponyi took the seals of office he deemed it advisable to effect a radical change in this system of county administration. He accordingly persuaded, with two or three exceptions, the Lords-Lieutenant who were Magnates by birth (noblemen), to consent to the appointment of administrators, or in other words virtually to abandon their office. For although these gentlemen still retain the title of Lords-Lieutenant, the duties of the office are de facto performed by the Administrators. It is the Administrator who presides at the County Congregations, corresponds with the Government, and who is in fact the bonâ fide Lord Lieutenant of the county. An Administrator has also a salary of 600*l.* per annum paid from the Royal Treasury, which, de facto, is not under Dietal control, the funds of which it disposes being derived from the salt monopoly, the royal mines, the Hungarian customs duties, and other sources.

Leaving out of the question the 3 counties in which the office of Lord-Lieutenant is held ex-officio, and which have always had Administrators, and the 3 re-incorporated Transylvanian counties, which are still in an anomalous state, I find, by referring to the Hungarian Schematismus of 1848, that of the remaining 49 counties 29 have Administrators, viz., 6 in which the Lord-Lieutenancy is vacant, 4 in which the Lords-Lieutenant are nobles, and 19 in which they are noblemen (Magnates by birth); and that 9 of the remaining 20 counties are presided over by Lords-Lieutenant who are nobles, and 11 by Lords-Lieutenant who are noblemen, and with one or perhaps two exceptions of the Conservative party. The salary of the 29 Administrators will amount to 17,400*l.* The amount of the secret-service money which it is said to have been placed at their disposal it is of course impossible to ascertain.

This system of Count Apponyi's was a well-concerted plan, and, regarded merely in an Austrian point of view, might have produced the most beneficial results.

It is obvious that if the system were suffered to take root, a kind of Austrian bureaucracy would by degrees be engrafted on the Hungarian institutions. A talented administrator would be rewarded for his services by being made a Lord-Lieutenant. The candidates for Comitatal offices, a very numerous class in Hungary, would make the office of Administrator, with its 600*l.* salary and the prospect of a Lord-Lieutenancy, the highest object of their ambition; to obtain which they would only have to renounce their ideas of Hungarian nationality and independence; whereas to be elected to the office of Vice-Comes (Sheriff), which is at present the highest honour they can aspire to, they frequently have to spend several hundred, and sometimes several thousand pounds sterling, although the salary is not more than 60*l.*, with but three years' tenure of office. The ultimate result of the system would probably be, the conversion of Hungary into an Austrian province, and the Diet into a mere registrative Board, or, at most, an Administrative Council, similar to the Landstände of the hereditary provinces.

When the question comes before the Delegates, the Opposition will strive to show that it has given rise both to general and special grievances (gravamina). To general grievances,—1st, On account of it being illegal, that is to say, contrary to statute law; 2nd, On account of it being contrary to the spirit of the Hungarian Constitution. And to special grievances,—1st. On account of salaries having been paid to public officers without a Dietal sanction, and from funds over which the Diet has de facto no control; and, 2nd, On account of Administrators having been appointed in, I believe, 2 or 3 counties, without the consent of the Lords-Lieutenant of the said counties; as it is alleged was the case in the county of Varasdin, in Croatia, of which Count Erdödy is the hereditary Lord-Lieutenant.

Presburg, February 3, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency a summary of the debate on the question of General Taxation.

By referring to the summary [p. 11] previously transmitted, it will be seen that in the nuncium of the Delegates, two kinds of taxes are indicated—a Comitatal tax, viz., the present county rates, and a Regnicolar or general tax. Previous to the debate taking place, the Magnates of the Conservative party held frequent meetings, at which a decided hostility to the payment of county-rates by the nobles was unfortunately but too apparent.

After much fruitless discussion, Count Emilius Dessewffy, one of the most talented men of the party, persuaded them to admit the principle of the payment of county-rates by the nobles. They would, he said, be only doing what they now did; there being scarcely a county in Hungary in which, of late years, the nobles had not contributed large sums for Comitatal purposes by a so-called voluntary subsidy. (The expenses incurred in erecting the new County Hall in Presburg, for instance, were defrayed by a rate levied exclusively on the nobles of the county.)

It was finally resolved that the Conservatives should not directly oppose the measure, but should strive to adjourn it until a bill for the co-ordination of the counties, that is to say, for a thorough reform of the present system of Comitatal administration, should be brought before the Diet; a bill, be it observed, of which there is actually no question.

To the payment of a Regnicolar tax no valid objections could be raised. The Conservatives therefore resolved to support this measure; that part of the Delegates' nuncium in which the expediency of raising funds for national (Regnicolar) purposes more by indirect than by direct taxation is suggested, having, it would appear, met with their special approbation. This suggestion was made, however, on the supposition that the Magnates would agree to the proposed payment of county-rates by the nobles; a fact which the Delegates will no doubt take care to remind them of.

This task of stating the views of the party, was entrusted to Count Anthony Szécsén.

It will be seen by referring to the summary, that the noble Count acquitted himself of his task with his usual ability.

The favourite plan of the Conservatives is to vote a Regnicolar tax—not more than 300,000*l.*—to be levied exclusively on the nobles. It must be borne in mind, that the Diet, in time of war, has frequently voted what is termed a voluntary war subsidy; that is to say, the nobles have consented to pay a specific sum for a specific purpose, by a rate levied exclusively on allodial property. If the proposed Regnicolar tax be also levied exclusively on such property, it may be termed a peace-subsidy, and be regarded not as a permanent tax, but as a voluntary contribution voted for a specific object, namely, for public works. This course has in fact been recommended by the avita Constitutionem conservandam writers, such a voluntary peace-subsidy, as they term it, not being taxation, and therefore not intrrenching on the privilege of Hungary's nobility.

(Extract.)

THE Delegates recommenced their sittings on the 7th, the Magnates on the 12th of January.

The Delegates sent a deputation to wish the Magnates a happy new year; a courtesy which the latter duly responded to, by sending a similar deputation to the Delegates. His Excellency the Bishop of Raab, who headed this deputation, told the "Praiseworthy States," as the Delegates are termed in official language, that the year 1848 was, not only for the legislature, but also for the country at large, a most important year, a decisive year, a year in which it was expected that measures of a comprehensive nature would be adopted for the material and intellectual development of the nation. The worthy prelate then proceeded to tell the Delegates that the measures which would produce such results, were indicated in the royal propositions, and he therefore conjured them to lay aside all secondary considerations, and exclusively devote their attention to the furtherance of the national prosperity, and concluded by invoking the aid of Divine Providence for the favourable solution of the questions submitted to their deliberations.

Deputations were also sent to present the usual compliments of the season to the Palatine, and to congratulate His Imperial Highness on his recovery from the measles.

1. General Taxation.

The nuncium of the Delegates on this question was discussed by the Magnates on the 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, and 23rd of January.

Count Anthony Szécsén [pronounced Say-chain] opened the debate by a speech in which he displayed more than his usual cleverness. The task he had undertaken was, as I have elsewhere observed, to express the consent of his party to the appointment of the proposed Dietal Committee, but in a manner that would not bind them to the conditions stated in the nuncium of the Delegates, especially to that of the nobles paying, conjointly with the peasants, the rates levied for the Cassa Domestica.

With three or four exceptions, all the Conservatives voted for Count Szécsén's motion; several of them insisting strongly on the necessary guarantees against mal-administration of the funds being afforded before they could give their consent to the payment of county rates.

The Opposition Magnates, with the exception of Count George Károly, voted for the nuncium of the Delegates, viz., that it should be accepted without amendments.

On the fourth day of the debate, the Palatine suggested that they should state in their renuncium, that without pretending in the present stage of their proceedings, to give a preference to either of these kinds of taxation, the Committee should be instructed to inquire into the most expedient manner of applying the admitted principle of general taxation to both; the Magnates reserving to themselves full liberty to come to a final decision on the subject when the report of the Committee should be submitted to their consideration.

This proposal of the Palatine was adopted by general acclamation amidst the most enthusiastic cheering from all sides of the House.

The Magnates met the following day to authenticate the renuncium, which was duly transmitted to the Delegates.

No. 5.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Mar. 20.)
MY LORD, Vienna, March 14, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship some papers I have received from Mr. Blackwell, on the Hungarian Diet.

I have, &c.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.

(Extract.)

Presburg, February 29, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a continuation of the summary. The commutation of the Roboth is one of the most urgent questions of the day, not only in Hungary, but also in Moravia, Bohemia, and other provinces of the Austrian Empire. In Moravia the commutation is going on very rapidly; and preliminary measures have been adopted in Bohemia for effecting it, the landlords, since the sanguinary events of Galicia, having become aware of the imminent danger in which they will be placed, should the system be maintained much longer. Yet, notwithstanding this conviction, which is also shared by the Hungarian legislators, a nuncium, founded on a resolution to appoint a committee on the subject, passed by the Lower House on December 6th, was not brought before the Upper House until February 3rd; and another month has been suffered to elapse before the suggestions of the Magnates have been taken into consideration by the Delegates. Three months are thus required for the appointment of a committee on a question, which is by no means a party question, and on which, in fact, no essential difference of opinion prevails among the members of either House. The same may be said in respect to the Committee on Taxation, Szemere's motion having been made on November 29th, and the committee not being as yet definitively appointed.

REINCORPORATION OF THE TRANSYLVANIAN COUNTIES.

THIS question was brought before the Lower House on January 14, by Kossuth, who made a 2 hours' speech on the occasion, which was listened to with profound attention, the popular orator only being interrupted by loud cheers from all parts of the House, as well as from the turbulent young juris-consults in the galleries, whenever he relieved his dry statement of facts by an impassioned burst of his peculiar eloquence.

Although this Reincorporation question might be regarded as a mere squabble between Hungary and Transylvania, and therefore totally devoid of interest, it will be found on closer examination to throw a great light on the policy which the Austrian Government has been in the habit of pursuing in regard to Hungary, and under this point of view to be by no means undeserving of attention.

Kossuth began his speech by declaring that he should not attempt to work on the feelings of the House by a display of eloquence, but should lay before them a simple statement of facts, and make no assertion that he was not able to corroborate by the most irrefragable documentary evidence.

"I find," he said, "that the Act 21 §, 1836, consists of 2 distinct parts, one respecting the representation of the reincorporated counties at the Diet, the other regarding their administration. Now I shall show that the Government has rendered the first part of this Act illusory, by not having thought proper to put the second part in execution. I shall in fact have to make 9 distinct charges against the Government, viz. :

"1. That that part of the Dietal Act which it was the duty of the Government to put in execution has remained to this day a dead letter.

"2. That the Government, by this gross dereliction of a sacred duty, has rendered the first part of the Act illusory, the reincorporated counties not having as yet sent Delegates to the Diet.

"3. That a judicial sentence pronounced by a competent tribunal against the said counties for their refractory conduct has not been executed.

"4. That by these unconstitutional proceedings the highest authority in the realm has been compromised.

"5. That the persons who have set at defiance the acts of the Legislature and the decree of the Sovereign have been loaded with honours, while those who endeavoured to obey the laws have not been protected from oppression.

"6. That with the sacrifice of its own independence the Hungarian Government has submitted to the dictates of a foreign (Transylvanian) Government.

"7. That the most odious means have been employed to stifle the sympathy that prevails in the reincorporated counties for Hungary, and to create a feeling of antipathy against Hungarian laws and institutions.

"8. That as an excuse for having suffered 7 Dietal Acts, passed within a period of 120 years, 5 Royal Decrees, and numerous Royal Rescripts, to be braved with impunity, the Government now bring forward the alleged opposition of Transylvania to a measure respecting which they ought to have been aware Transylvania has no right to interfere.

"9. That they now strive to make the de facto reincorporation of counties which have long since been reincorporated de jure, depend on the passing of fresh Dietal Acts, in order, it would appear, completely to extinguish the sympathy that still prevails in these counties for Hungary, notwithstanding all the efforts that have been made to awaken a contrary feeling.

"As the Government, and newspapers in the pay of Government, lay a great weight on the opposition of Transylvania to the de facto reincorporation of the counties in question, I shall now show that, in alleging this opposition as a motive or a pretext for the dereliction of official duties, they (both the Government and its hireling scribes), betray a profound ignorance of the facts recorded in the diplomatic archives of the kingdom, as well as in the impartial pages of history."

Kossuth then proceeded to give a full account of the transactions respecting the reincorporated counties, constantly referring to Dietal Acts, diplomatic Treaties, and other documentary evidence of unquestionable authority which were lying on the table before him, and from which he frequently read passages in corroboration of his statements.

From the facts adduced it would appear that in conformity with 7 Treaties of peace, beginning with that of Grosswardein in 1583, and ending with that of Linz in 1645, the counties of Kraszna, Zaránd, and Middle-Szolnok, with the district of Kövár; as well as the counties of Marmaros, Bihar, and other counties and districts situated beyond the River Theiss, were ceded to the Princes of Transylvania, with the proviso that on their dynasty becoming extinct, the counties and districts in question should devolve to the Crown of Hungary. It would further appear that these counties were never formally incorporated with Transylvania, but were always regarded as "partium Regni Hungariæ Domini," and therefore not subjected to the tax levied in the bond fide Transylvanian counties, to pay the tribute imposed by the Turks.

When Transylvania, in the year 1687, again became a dependence of the Hungarian Crown, the counties in question became, ipso facto, reincorporated, and by a decree of 1693 are expressly declared to be integral and component parts of the kingdom.

From this period until the year 1729 they were duly summoned, and sent Delegates to the Diet.

Until 1732 they continued under the jurisdiction of the Hungarian Vice-Regal Council.

Acts were passed by the Diets of 1715, 1723, and 1729, to effect an administrative reincorporation; the laws and usages of Transylvania being still in use in the counties; in consequence of which they were in a great measure dependent on the Transylvanian tribunals.

Disputes having subsequently arisen between the Hungarian and Transylvanian authorities, King Charles III (better known in history as the Emperor Charles VI) appointed a commission, under the presidency of Count Nesselrode, to investigate the matter. The Delegates of Transylvania who appeared before this commission, did not venture to urge the re-incorporation of the counties with the Principality, on historical grounds, but merely on motives of policy; and as no Diet was held in Hungary at that period, their arguments, such as they were, could not be refuted.

Charles III (VI) by the advice of this commission, but without summoning a Diet, issued a Royal decree, commonly called the “Resolutio Carolina,” by virtue of which the counties were incorporated either with Hungary or Transylvania, according to their respective proximity to the one or the other of these States; the words of the decree being “ut illi comitatus eo, quo quivis eorum proximius adjacet, ex integro applicentur.”

In this manner Krasna, Zaránd, Middle-Szolnok and Köwar were incorporated with Transylvania; Marmaros, Bihar, and the other Trans-Tybian counties and districts with Hungary.

Although no Diet was held at the time, the Hungarian Viceregal Council, in 1733, entered a formal and most energetic protest against the Resolutio Carolina.

The first Diet summoned after the issuing of the Resolutio Carolina was in 1741, and its first act was to protest against this decree of the late Sovereign, and Maria Theresa acknowledged in the § 5 of the Royal Resolutions, that the Diet by so doing had exercised a constitutional right, promising at the same time that the counties should be reincorporated with Hungary.

In consequence of this Royal promise, the same Diet passed an Act, § 18, 1741, which received the Royal sanction, and by which the reincorporation of the said counties was imperatively decreed “jurisdictioni istius Regni reddi, restitui, ac integraliter effectiveque reincorporari curabit.”

This Act having remained, as usual, a dead letter, the Diet of 1751 urged the Government to put it in execution, and only granted a subsidy on condition that the counties should be de facto reincorporated whilst the Diet was sitting; “ad regnum optimo ac indubitato jure spectantes, regno stante hac adhuc Dieta uniantur,” being the words made use of in the representation.

In consequence of this representation, or rather in order to obtain the subsidy, a Royal promise was given that the reincorporation should be effected, the said Royal promise being duly embodied in the Dietal Act, 24 §, 1751, “quod ad effectum, Act 10, 1741, incorporationis incorporandorum et restitutionis restituendorum negotium pro regia et materna in regnum hoc sollicitudine sibi curæ futurum sit.”

This Royal promise not having been performed, the Diet of 1764 again sent a representation on the subject.

In 1791 the counties petitioned not to be reincorporated, as they regarded the reincorporation as subsisting de jure, but that the Act 10 §, 1741, should, without any further delay, be put in execution.

In consequence of this petition and the energetic representations of the Diet, the Act 11 §, 1792, was passed and sanctioned by the Sovereign. In this Act the reincorporation is imperatively decreed; but Kossuth admitted that it contained, as well as the Act 10 §, 1741, the clause auditis etiam Transylvanis; and said, that although he could produce satisfactory evidence to show that the clause was interpolated, still he would take it as it stood, and would ask what interpretation could be given to it, that the reincorporation should not take place until the Transylvanians had been heard? Most assuredly not; both Acts in which this suspected clause occurred, imperatively decreeing that the counties should be reincorporated. The auditis etiam Transylvanis could, therefore, he contended, only refer to the administrative details of the reincorporation, and not to the reincorporation itself. Besides the Transylvanians had been heard, 1st, by the Nesselrode Commission; 2nd, in 1751; and, 3rd, in 1792, in consequence of 2 Royal resolutions issued for that purpose; so that even this plausible pretext alleged by the Government was of no validity.

The Diets of 1825 and 1832 placed the non-execution of the Act 11 §, 1792, in the list of preferential gravamina.

Five more representations on the subject were laid before the Throne, until the Dietal Act 21 §, 1836, was finally passed and sanctioned by the Sovereign. This Act is the most imperative of the three, for it is not enacted that the counties shall or must be reincorporated, but that "the said counties are hereby fully and completely reincorporated with the kingdom of Hungary."

"Here we have," continued Kossuth, "a formal Act. The Transylvanians had been heard, and there was nothing more to be said on the question. His Majesty, however, in a Royal rescript addressed to the Transylvanian Diet of 1837, requested them to send Commissioners to act in conjunction with the Hungarian Commissioners appointed to effect the reincorporation. His Majesty took this step, 'moved,' to use his own words, 'by paternal solicitude,' and not, it must be borne in mind, in consequence of the Act of the Hungarian Diet requiring such co-operation. The Transylvanian Diet did not condescend to listen to this request of the Sovereign. His Majesty, therefore, in another Royal rescript, dated February 20, 1839, and addressed to the States of Transylvania in Diet assembled, declared that as they had not complied with his wishes, and as the reincorporation of the counties had been, moreover, ipso facto, effected by the Hungarian Dietal Act 21 §, 1836, any further discussion of the question would be useless, and it was therefore His Majesty's wish that none should take place.

"Yet, notwithstanding these facts, the counties still remain unincorporated, and the Government still alleges as an excuse for their non-incorporation, the opposition of Transylvania to the measure, forgetting that the Transylvanians ground their pretended claim to the said counties solely on the Resolutio Carolina; or, in other words, that in order to justify their claim, they appeal to the arbitrary Act which caused the grievance that we have been striving for upwards of a century to have redressed? It must also be borne in mind that the King of Hungary and the Prince of Transylvania are one and the same person. Now, when we see that the Transylvanian Government sets the Acts of the Hungarian Diet at defiance, and completely paralyses the executive power of the Hungarian Government, it is impossible to explain this abnormal state of things otherwise than that in ultimo analysi, neither the Hungarian Government manages Hungarian affairs, nor the Transylvanian Government Transylvanian affairs, but that both these Governments are dependent on a foreign bureaucracy."

Kossuth then proceeded to show that the minor obstacles which were said to have rendered the execution of the Act very difficult, did not exist nor ever had existed. And even admitting, he said, that such obstacles really did exist, still it was a well-known fact that the Government had frequently effected the reincorporation of districts and provinces when obstacles of a much more formidable nature had to be surmounted. Galicia and Bukowina, for instance, had been converted into Austrian provinces in the course of a few months, and the reincorporation of that part of Hungary lying beyond the Save, together with the Hungarian Littoral, was effected in a much shorter period. In respect to the administration of these districts a double reincorporation had in fact taken place, the Austrian administrative system having been substituted for the French, and the Hungarian for the Austrian. He must also remind the House, that Count Mailáth, President of the Commission appointed for the incorporation of these Trans-Savian districts, received his instructions on September 25, 1822, and that before the end of October the reincorporation had been fully effected.

"I shall now proceed," he continued, "to that part of the Act respecting the representation of the reincorporated counties at the Diet; and first in regard to the district of Kövar. Now it is expressly stated in the Act that Kövar is to be summoned to send Delegates to the Diet. The Act, be it remembered, was passed in 1836, and up to the present day Kövar never has been summoned. If it be alleged, as it is alleged by the Government, that Kövar was formerly not represented at the Diet, I must reply that this has nothing to do with the question, Kövar having by the Act of 1836 acquired the right of being represented, whether it had formerly been so or not. However, in order not to leave the Government a single loop-hole, I will show that Kövar formerly sent Delegates to the Diet."

After reading several documents relating to Dietal proceedings, which fully bore out his assertions, he continued his discourse by observing that the counties of Kraszna, Zaránd and Middle-Szolnok, had been summoned but had not hitherto obeyed the Royal mandate. As the "patriot nobles" (i.e., the nobles of the Liberal party) of these counties had already petitioned the Diet on the subject, he should content himself by referring the House to that petition, in which they would find ample data to prove that the patriotic nobles had been prevented from exercising their constitutional rights by the agents of the Government.

“I cannot however refrain,” he continued, “from noticing the conduct of these agents in the county of Middle-Szolnok. The King summonses this county—the county be it remembered, and not its Lord-Lieutenant—to send Delegates to the present Diet, and the Lord-Lieutenant does not even deliver the Royal letter of summons addressed to the county, to the Comitatal authorities. The Government transmits the Acts of the Diet to the county, and the Lord-Lieutenant prevents these Acts from being promulgated! The County Congregation meets for the purpose of electing Delegates, and the Lord-Lieutenant prevents the nobles from exercising their constitutional rights by the employ of an armed force. The nobles petition the Diet; they lay their griefs before the Throne, and demand in an humble representation, that the Lord-Lieutenant be punished for these flagrant acts of injustice. The Lord-Lieutenant continues to pursue the same arbitrary policy. I will not enumerate the other misdeeds of this Lord-Lieutenant. There was a time when a Lord Lieutenant, for much more venial offences, would have had his head severed from his shoulders by virtue of a judicial sentence within these very walls of Presburg. I am not one of those who wish for the revival of the sanguinary punishments inflicted on State criminals by our forefathers; but, on the other hand, I cannot admit that a Lord-Lieutenant should be suffered to commit such illegal and unconstitutional acts with impunity. Some kind of punishment ought most assuredly to have been inflicted. But what has been the punishment inflicted on the Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Middle-Szolnok? This punishment has been no other than that of his being promoted to the rank of Privy Councillor to the Prince of Transylvania;—to a prince who is at the same time the King of Hungary! A fact which needs no comment on my part, and from which I leave the House to draw the necessary conclusions.

“The second fact which I shall have to adduce, and which I find recorded in the book lying before me (pointing to a volume of Dietal papers of the year 1839), is that in a letter from the ex-Chancellor of Transylvania, Ropes, to the Lord-Lieutenant, who has been rewarded—I meant to say punished—in the manner I have mentioned, the following passage occurs:—‘Take especial care that, by a well-calculated tactic and a clever combination of circumstances, no Delegates be elected’ (in the county of Middle-Szolnok). And the Lord-Lieutenant did take especial care that no Delegates were elected, his clever combination of circumstances consisting in his keeping the Royal letter of summons in his pocket, and preventing the County Congregation from assembling.

“The third fact—I will not fatigue the House by adducing any more, these three being sufficient to show the spirit that animates the Government agents—relates to the county of Kraszna. In 1846 this county sent a delegate to the Transylvanian Diet, with instructions to the Diet to the effect that Kraszna regarded itself, both de jure and de facto, reincorporated with Hungary, and would not therefore send Delegates any longer to the Transylvanian Diet, except compelled to do so by the authorities in Vienna. Now this delegate, although he had of course taken a solemn oath to act according to his instructions, acted precisely contrary to them. And what has been his punishment? Why when the recent unconstitutional system of Comitatal administration was introduced—a system which, I trust, ere the present Diet is brought to a close, we shall get rid of—this subservient Delegate was made the administrator of his county. He has, I must confess, shown himself to be a faithful servant of his worthy employers. Kraszna, be it remembered, some 50 years ago, was the first to demand its reincorporation with Hungary; and during the space of 50 years, Kraszna is the county that has the most strongly insisted on the reincorporation being de facto effected. Now when Kraszna was summoned by His Majesty to send Delegates to the present Diet, this honourable administrator had the General Congregation held in the court-yard of his house, and 3 barrels of wine placed before the chair, which he occupied as President of the Assembly. By means of these 3 barrels of wine, he persuaded the Congregation to pass a resolution to the effect that Kraszna had no wish to be reincorporated with Hungary, and therefore would not send delegates to the Hungarian Diet. It has thus happened that the numerous resolutions passed during 50 years of sobriety have been annulled in a moment of drunkenness. Still the Government does not make any allusion to the steps taken by Kraszna during half a century, but appeals to this last resolution, founded on 3 barrels of wine. (Laughter and cheers.)

“When we compare the data I have submitted to the House, and take into consideration the line of policy pursued by the Government, how can we blame the reincorporated counties for not sending delegates to the Diet? These counties are perfectly aware that the Prince of Transylvania and the King of Hungary are one and the same person, and therefore that the will of the one cannot be opposed to the will of the other, both being identic. They see, nevertheless, that the Transylvanian Government agitates: and that those who support this agitation, instead of being punished or reprimanded, are loaded with honours, while the Hungarian Government looks on and suffers laws to remain unpromulgated, and the decrees of Royalty to be treated with contumely. The counties are also aware that the Government might instantly put an end to such an abnormal state of things, by letting His Majesty, for instance, state in a Royal rescript, that, from a certain day, the said counties should cease to have any administrative connection with Transylvania; and that all their representations, petitions, &c., should be transmitted to His Majesty through the Hungarian Vice-Regal Council. But they see that the Government, instead of taking this decisive step, prefers remaining under the humiliating tutelage of the Transylvanian Government, and braving the censures of the Hungarian Legislature. When, I repeat, the reincorporated counties take all these circumstances into consideration, they must be in utter despair.

“All these transactions furnish us with a compact proof of the tortuous policy of the Government; a policy of which the leading principle is, to delay as long as possible the fulfilment of the wishes of the Hungarian nation; and when delay is no longer possible, to strive, by administrative means, to render illusory everything that has been obtained by the efforts of the Legislature.” (Loud cheers.)

Kossuth then proceeded to show that the sentence passed by the Tabula Regia, condemning the refractory counties to the usual fines and penalties, had not yet been put in execution.

“The last Diet,” he continued, “requested that His Majesty would at least send an admonitory rescript to the counties, but His Majesty was made to reply, in a Royal rescript dated November 4, 1844, that such a proceeding was not necessary, the affair being already in the hands of justice. Yet at this very time when the Royal rescript was issued, the Transylvanians were ordered by the Government, or at least instigated by the agents of the Government, to oppose any measures that might be taken for the effective reincorporation of the counties.

“What need I say more? I have placed the facts before you, it is for you to draw the necessary conclusions from them. It will be for the nation to decide how long we are still to endure a Government, by whose unconstitutional acts, the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary powers of the State have been utterly degraded. How long? Can I ask the question? Oh, if such acts can be any longer tolerated—tolerated too, at a period when despotism quails before the renascent spirit of freedom, and nations benumbed into decrepitude, re-acquire their pristine vitality, I shall despair of my country. (Enthusiastic cheers.)

Kossuth then proceeded to say, that having, he trusted, fully shown that this Reincorporation question constituted one of the grievances of the nation, he should conclude by pointing out the way in which this grievance might be remedied. Now they might seek redress in the usual way by means of a representation to His Majesty ; but as both parties appeared to be sincerely desirous of making the present Diet a Reform, and not a Gravaminal Diet, he should not advise the House to have recourse to this somewhat worn-out method. They had in fact had too many Gravaminal Diets. Repeatedly had they laid before the Throne a long list of national grievances, and yet how few, how very few of these grievances had been redressed. He was therefore of opinion that they ought to seek redress, in the first instance, at least, by means of a Palatinal intermediation. One of the brightest prerogatives, one of the most pleasing duties of an Hungarian Palatine, was that of being the mediator between the Throne and the nation ; and Hungary now possessed a Palatine elected by the general acclamation of the nation, and of whom the nation had every reason to be proud.

After citing several instances to show that such a Palatinal intermediation was not an unprecedented way of proceeding, he proposed that in a nuncium in which all the facts relating to the question should be amply stated, they should desire the Magnates to concur with them in requesting the Palatine to make the grievance which they had sought so long to have redressed, the object of his special mediation ; this mediation to be effected in a manner that would insure the speedy and full execution of the Act 21 §, 1836, the principal point claiming the attention of His Imperial Highness, being to have the reincorporated counties withdrawn from their dependence on the Transylvanian administrative and judiciary departments, and placed under the Hungarian Vice-Regal Council and the Royal courts of justice, without further delay. Kossuth concluded his speech by remarking that the effective reincorporation of these counties would greatly facilitate the union of Hungary and Transylvania, a union which had so long formed one of the most ardent wishes of both nations. He had proposed a Palatinal intermediation, in the hope that this Reincorporation question might thereby be brought to a favourable issue. It would be needless for him to observe that if they should be disappointed in this hope, much more energetic measures must be had recourse to ; for whatever might be the consequences, he, for one, was determined not to let the matter rest until every clause of the Act 21 §, 1836, had been fully and effectively put in execution. (Enthusiastic cheers.)

Kossuth's motion was seconded by Babarczy [Babartsy], Delegate of the county of Csongrád [Tshon-grahd], one of the Conservative or Government counties, who declared that by so doing he acted in strict conformity with his instructions, the county of Csongrád regarding the non-execution of the Act 21 §, 1836, as a serious grievance. Several obstacles might and no doubt did exist to render the execution of this Act a work of some difficulty ; he was however obliged to admit that, whatever these obstacles might be, the non-execution of a Dietal Act sanctioned by the Sovereign might unquestionably be regarded as constituting a national grievance.

Babarczy further observed that although he differed from the honourable Delegate of the county of Pesth on several points, and thought that many of his accusations against the Government were unfounded, still, as he wished to avoid giving rise to the discussion of a question respecting the main points, of which he believed there could be only one opinion, he should second the honourable Delegate's motion, the more so as a Palatinal intermediation was a strictly constitutional way of seeking redress for a national grievance. (Loud cheers.)

Szemere [Sem-er-y], l'ázimándy, and several other Delegates of the Liberal party who had signified their intention of speaking on the question, on hearing this declaration of Babarczy, desisted from their purpose. Kossuth's motion was accordingly carried by general acclamation. The chairman for the day (it was of course a Circular sitting), Sigismund Bűkk, who is Szemere's co-Delegate of the county of Borsod [Borshod], then rose and said, that in the life of a people as in the life of an individual there were moments that ought to be held sacred. On that day the House had unanimously passed a resolution respecting the non-execution of a Dietal Act sanctioned by the Sovereign, and shown thereby that however parties might differ in their views and opinions, these parties coalesced and appeared as the united Representatives of the nation whenever a question of such vital importance as that under discussion was brought before them. In his opinion the hallowed moment in which this unanimity prevailed ought not to be profaned by the discussion of any other question, and he should therefore move that the House "do now adjourn." This motion was carried.

The nuncium drawn up in conformity with Kossuth's motion was read at a Dietal sitting of the Delegates on February 12. It is a very long document, giving an account of all the transactions relating to the reincorporation of the counties, and showing, frequently in very strong terms, the culpable negligence of the Government in not putting the last Dietal Act on the subject in execution. It is in fact Kossuth's speech in another form.

After the nuncium had been read, the "Personal" endeavoured to exculpate the Government, saying that he could not admit that the Hungarian Government was under an anti-constitutional and anti-national influence, and contending, moreover, that there was no real difference of opinion between the House and the Government respecting the Dietal Act 21 §, 1836. Both, he said, were willing to put the Act in execution; they only differed as to the most expedient manner in which this might be effected. He was therefore of opinion that they ought not to request the mediation of His Imperial Highness the Palatine, as recourse should only be had to a Palatinal inter-mediation when a question was in ultimo stadio, which with the present question was not the case.

Kossuth said that in reply to the somewhat singular arguments which it had pleased the "Personal" to make use of, he should simply refer the honourable and learned gentleman to the nuncium, in which such arguments were amply refuted by stubborn facts. This nuncium had been unanimously adopted in the Circular sitting, and he trusted that the same unanimity would prevail in the present one.

After Somsich [Shom-sich], Delegate of the County of Baranya, and the "Personal" had made a few more observations, the latter put the question, Whether the House would adopt the nuncium as it stood? and was answered by a general cry of "Maradjon" (Let it remain as it is).

This resolution was duly announced by the "Personal" declaring that "the nuncium respecting the re-incorporation of the Transylvanian counties, drawn up in conformity with a motion made by the honourable Delegate of the county of Pesth, in a Circular sitting on January 14, had been adopted in the present Dietal sitting, nemine contradicente."

THE COMITATAL ADMINISTRATION QUESTION.

On February 1 a Mixed sitting was held for the purpose of hearing read a Royal rescript which the Palatine had brought with him from Vienna.

This document, drawn up in the usual Chancery style, is entitled, "Royal Rescript respecting the measures relating to Comitatal Administration, taken since the last Diet."

The 5 sentences of which it consists may be rendered as follows:—

"We, Ferdinand, by the grace of God, &c.

"The so-sincerely desired and lovefully-fostered welfare and prosperity of our cherished Kingdom of Hungary, form much too essential a part of our constant Royal solicitude, as that under those objects which exercise in any manner whatsoever, an influence on this solicitude, we should not have directed our attention to those griefs and doubts which have arisen in respect to Comitatal administration, on account of the measures we have taken since the last Diet, namely, the numerous nominations, in divers jurisdictions, of administrators of Lords-Lieutenant—nominations called for by existing exceptional relations, and which, owing entirely to a misconception of our paternal intentions, have caused a so-much-to-be-regretted irritation, and in some jurisdictions even a retardment of the public administrative service. The impression which this has made on our paternal heart is the more painful, because, since the first moment of our reign, we have regarded the inviolate maintenance of the ancient Constitution, and the spotless preservation of the Comitatal system on which it is essentially grounded, as well as the strict observance of the national laws, especially of the 10th Fundamental Article of the year 1790, as the most sacred and inviolable of our Royal duties; and we feel this the more profoundly and intensely, from the conviction that as by the above-mentioned measures our sole and unique object was to attain, through a moderately progressive development, to a salutary result in the Comitatal and Regnicolar administration, the legal bounds of the executive power of the State have not in the least degree been overstepped. This experience nevertheless increases our legitimate pain, since the fears caused in the manner before mentioned, and the erroneous idea that—contrary to the Dietal Act 56 §, 1723—a change in the Comitatal administrative system, sanctioned by national laws, was contemplated, not only still prevails in several jurisdictions, but appears also to exercise such a detrimental influence on the course of the present Diet, that the effective solution—by us so ardently desired—of the grave questions belonging to the domain of legislation, will be thereby rendered much more difficult. As it is, however, the most ardent wish of our parental heart, that between our Royal Throne and our beloved Kingdom of Hungary no griefs of any kind whatsoever be suffered to take root, but, on the contrary, be stifled in their germ, we have, in a feeling of legality, turned our steps, as well as those endeavours directed solely to the public welfare, effectively to remove these fears, which, although without any just grounds, still in point of fact exist and are entertained by our loyal subjects, and also to appease the irritation in the public mind; and therefore, moved by the impulsions of our own heart, wish hereby to assure you that by the recent nominations of Administrators of Lords-Lieutenant,—which, although founded on a century's usage, have been owing to the exigency of peculiar circumstances, more numerous than on ordinary occasions, neither the legitimate position of the counties has been changed, nor the sphere of action of their Lords-Lieutenant infringed, nor any kind of a novel system, at variance with the spirit of the Dietal Acts 56 §, 1723, and 10 §, 1790, introduced, nor the declaration made in the Royal Rescript of May 28, 1827, sub No. 6888, set aside; but that the principal object desired to be obtained by these nominations was, that under the more vivacious manifestations of public life occasioned by the progress of time, the Regnicolar administration, rendered itself more difficult by peculiar local relations, should be placed in a more legitimate activity, and the Comital administrative and judiciary functions that form its chief condition, should, in conformity with the spirit of the Dietal Act 56 §, 1723, by which these functions are subjected to the constant control of a chief Administrator, be more strictly, accurately, and effectively exercised; and also at the same time that by the removal of various obstacles which several Lords-Lieutenant had to encounter in consequence of personal and official relations, the chief Administrator of a county, in respect to the thorough fulfilment of the duties of his station, should be placed in a position to respond, in the fullest sense of the term, to the salutary enactments of the above-mentioned law. Be you, therefore, beloved and faithful States, again assured that, for the Government of our cherished Kingdom of Hungary, and for the progressive development of its social institutions, we desire nothing so much as to act constitutionally; and it is precisely because our paternal intentions are far removed from attempting to evade the laws of the land, that, in strict adherence to the sense of the Royal Rescript of May 28, 1827, sub. No. 6888, we hereby declare that it is our firm resolution to reserve the nomination of Administrators of Lords-Lieutenant for exceptional cases, and at the same time to maintain in full vigour the ancient Comital administrative system, as well as the legitimacy of the dignity of Lord-Lieutenant, and, so soon as the above-mentioned obstacles shall be removed, everywhere to replace the Lords-Lieutenant in the full exercise of their legitimate functions; and we moreover confidently expect that after this our Royal declaration respecting measures taken solely with a view to insure the real welfare of our beloved Kingdom of Hungary, and not in the least deviating from the legal path, that, liberated from that anxiety which had arisen in the minds of many, and inspired by sentiments of filial confidence, you will, keeping before you the Dietal Act 13 §, 1790, direct with impartiality your patriotic endeavours to those grave legislative questions, in the favourable solution of which we perceive the grounds for the future prosperity of the country, and the realization of the most ardent wishes of our paternal heart.

“ Given in our city of Vienna in Austria, January 30, 1848.

“ With Imperial Royal grace we remain, &c.

“ COUNT GEORGE APPONYI.

“ FERDINAND.”

“ EDUARD ZSEDENYI.”

The rescript was read at a Circular sitting on February 5th, the 3 days previous to which the House did not meet, both parties being engaged in conferences on the subject, neither of them being at all satisfied with the rescript; the Conservatives, because they regarded it as too great a concession to public opinion; the Liberals, because they saw in it nothing but a vague promise never intended to be fulfilled. In this respect, however, a difference of opinion prevailed among the Liberals, which became apparent at the sitting.

Szentiványi, first Delegate of the county of Gönör, rose and said that although the rescript was far from being as satisfactory as he could have wished, he would nevertheless regard it as a step towards restoring that confidence between the Throne and the nation which had been all but utterly destroyed. He should therefore move that they should, in their representation, express their thanks to His Majesty for having at heart the maintenance of the Constitution, and for his intention of replacing the Lords-Lieutenant in the exercise of their legitimate functions, but, at the same time, should state that their anxiety was far from being groundless, and that whilst His Majesty's promise afforded them great satisfaction they must humbly request that this promise be realized during the present Diet by the total abolition of the system of Comitatal administration recently introduced, intimating, at the same time, that on this condition, they would abstain from entering into a special examination of the national grievances, and follow the path of moderation which they had hitherto pursued, with the hope that the favourable solution of the questions submitted to them might thereby be greatly facilitated, and the results anticipated by His Majesty obtained.

Lónyay, 1st Delegate of the county of Beregh (also a Liberal county), said, that as he differed in some respects from the honourable Delegate of Gönör, he should move that they should state in their representation, that although the numerous nominations of administrators had caused a considerable degree of anxiety to prevail, they would not dwell any longer upon the subject, as His Majesty had been graciously pleased to assure them that he regarded these nominations as exceptional cases, and that it was his firm intention to replace the Lords-Lieutenant in the exercise of their legitimate functions. Relying with confidence on this assurance they would proceed to the consideration of the questions of social reform with the hope of arriving at a favourable result.

Somsics [Shom-shitch], first Delegate of the county of Baranya (a Conservative county), said that although he and the party to which he was proud of belonging, could not perceive anything like a grievance in the administrative system which had been so violently and unjustly attacked, and therefore regarded the Royal rescript as in some measure superfluous, he should nevertheless vote for the motion of the honourable Delegate of Beregh.

Kossuth then rose amidst the most enthusiastic cheering, and attempted to show that the new system of Comitatal administration constituted a national grievance. This system, he said, was anti-constitutional in its tendency, not only on account of the nomination of 30 salaried administrators, but also because those Lords-Lieutenant who had been suffered to remain at their posts, from motives which the House would know how to appreciate, were obliged to perform duties incompatible with their legitimate functions. A Lord-Lieutenant, by virtue of various Dietal Acts, was not entrusted with the administration of his county, but had merely the chief inspection over the magistrates in whose hands this administration had been exclusively placed, both by law and long-established usage. Another anti-constitutional feature of the system was the practice, that became every day more prevalent, of transmitting the instructions, ordinances, &c., of the Government to the counties through the Hungarian Chancery in Vienna; whereas it was needless for him to observe that the Hungarian Viceregal Council was the only supreme administrative authority which the counties were bound to recognize.

Kossuth then gave a sketch of the present state of Europe, and observed that they no doubt might take advantage of the critical position in which Austria was placed by the stirring events that a despotic system of policy had given rise to, but he would not deviate from the path which his party had hitherto followed. He would place his reliance on the known rectitude of His Majesty, and, above all, on the Constitutional spirit that animated their beloved Palatine—a Palatine who had identified himself with the nation, whom the nation was justly proud of possessing, and under whose enlightened guidance they would never despair. (Loud cheers.) His party, he said, had shown during the present Diet, that they were sincerely desirous of meeting the views of the Government, whenever those views were grounded on Constitutional principles, and the best proof of their moderation was the motion of the Delegate of Gömör, to which he should lend his support.

After a few more speeches the voting commenced, the votes in favour of the Gömör motion giving rise to loud cheers from the galleries, while those for the Beregh motion were received by groans, hisses, and other signs of popular disapprobation.

When Bihar was called on for its vote, Reviczky, second Delegate of the county, voted for the Beregh motion, upon which Papszász, the first Delegate, rose, and said that Bihar was known to have been for centuries one of the most Liberal counties in the kingdom, and he rejoiced to say that in spite of the manœuvres of a contemptible clique, it still continued to be so. He should therefore support the Gömör motion, and by so doing annul the vote of his colleague.

Two other counties (Veszprém and Csanád) abstained from voting. The final result of this stormy voting was that each motion was supported by the votes of 23 counties; on which the Delegate of Croatia (whose right of voting is contested by the Opposition) gave his vote in favour of the Beregh motion, which was consequently carried, to the great disappointment of the Liberals.

An indescribable scene of confusion ensued. Hot words passed between several of the Delegates (in consequence of which 2 duels were fought the next morning), and the chairman tried in vain to restore something like order. When the uproar had somewhat subsided, Kossuth rose and said that it was a notorious fact that 30 counties had declared Count Apponyi's system of Comitatal administration to be a national grievance. How several honourable Delegates could therefore reconcile their votes for the Beregh motion with their consciences, he would not pretend to say. He would merely observe, that if the Conservatives regarded the result of this strange vote as a triumph, they would find themselves sadly mistaken. The Liberals possessed a power which they had hitherto refrained from availing themselves of, but moderation had its bounds. Let those who forced them to quit the path they had hitherto followed, beware.

Simon [She-mon], first Delegate of the county of Soprony (Oedenburg), frankly avowed that he had voted contrary to his instructions, as those instructions were drawn up at a congregation in which the Liberals obtained a factitious majority by a party manœuvre, and he was persuaded that his present vote would be approved of at the next congregation that was held under more favourable auspices.

Szemere, in a speech that was listened to, as usual, with profound attention, commented on the Royal rescript, phrase by phrase, in order to show that it contained no definite promise. When certain obstacles were removed, the Lords-Lieutenant were to be replaced in the exercise of their legitimate functions. What were these obstacles? He found them nowhere specified. He only found that several Lords-Lieutenant had to encounter these undefined and indefinable obstacles, "in consequence of personal and official relations," which was the enunciation of an anti-constitutional principle that deserved their serious attention. He had always disapproved of the system that had so long prevailed, of furnishing Delegates with instructions, and the voting that had taken place showed but too clearly the futility of the system. Instructions might be given, but honour and patriotism could not be infused by a written piece of paper.

After a long altercation, the debate was adjourned until the following Monday, (the 7th,) without any resolution having been pronounced by the chairman.

The debate was continued on the 7th and 8th, without leading to any result, although several Delegates who had voted for the Beregh motion now supported a kind of mezzo-termine motion made by Tomcsányi, first Delegate of the county of Békés.

On the 9th no sitting was held. The House met on the 10th, but adjourned without proceeding to business. The Liberals meanwhile held frequent conferences. On the 10th, Kossuth and the Delegates of Gömör, Beregh, and Békés, met in the house of Szemere, when Szemere drew up a representation which it was finally agreed should be supported by the whole Opposition.

This representation was read the next day at a Circular sitting, and ordered to be printed.

In this sitting Lónyay made an exculpatory speech in justification of his conduct, for which he had been severely reproached by the Liberals. He had worded his motion, he said, in the most moderate terms possible, as he was sincerely desirous of following a conciliatory line of policy in respect to the Government, and bringing at least the most important questions submitted to the present Diet to a satisfactory conclusion; for if they should again return home without having remedied any of the evils under which the country had so long laboured, and the hopes of the nation were again disappointed, he for one would not answer for the consequences that were likely to ensue.

In the Circular sitting of February 12th the printed representation was read, after which every one appeared to be extremely anxious to hear what the Delegates of Beregh would say respecting it, whereupon Szintay, the second Delegate of Beregh, rose, and declared in the name of his county that he fully approved of the representation.

Kossuth also supported the representation, and again attempted to show the anti-constitutional tendency of Count Apponyi's system. All orders, decrees, &c., respecting Comitatal administration ought, he said, to emanate from the Vice-Regal Council, and be addressed not to the Administrators, nor even to the Lords-Lieutenant, but to the counties themselves. This fundamental principle of the Constitution had not been infringed even during the absolute reign of the Emperor Joseph, whereas Count Apponyi sent his instructions direct from the Hungarian Chancery without even the knowledge of the Vice-Regal Council and not to the counties, but to the salaried Administrators of these counties. And from what source did these Administrators receive their salaries? That was not known officially even to the Vice-Regal Council. While the Lords-Lieutenant were performing their legislative duties in the Upper House their salaried Administrators were agitating in the counties in order that supplementary instructions drawn up in the interest of the Conservative party might be sent to the Delegates. The whole system was decidedly anti-constitutional, and if he and his party were forced to make this a Gravamina Diet the whole blame would rest on the Conservatives; for whatever might be the consequences, and in the present state of Europe he would not venture to predict what those consequences might be, the Liberals, supported as they were by the voice of the nation, were fully determined not to suffer such an odious and pernicious system to take root.

Somsich and several other Conservatives declared that their principles would not allow them to support the representation that had been read to the House.

When the voting took place, the representation was carried by a majority of 13—31 counties voting for and 18 against it, being adopted.

A Dietal sitting was then held, when the "Personal" endeavoured to persuade the Liberals to strike out several phrases in the representation. He was however answered by a general cry of 'Maradjon,' and was finally obliged to announce that the decision of the Circular sitting had been confirmed.

The representation was accordingly transmitted with a nuncium to the Magnates. It is worded as follows:

"May it please Your Majesty, &c.

"As the anxiety that prevails in the country on account of the measures taken since the last Diet respecting the office of Lord-Lieutenant—the duties of which had already been strictly defined by the Dietal Act 56 §, 1723,—and also respecting the Comitatal Municipalities—the rights of which had been guaranteed by the Act 36 §, 1536—is intense, we have seen, with a commensurate feeling of thankfulness, by the Royal Rescript of January 30, that, moved by the impulsions of your paternal heart, your Majesty's Royal cares are directed to the allayment of this anxiety; and that it is your Majesty's Royal will and intention to maintain the Comitatal Municipalities in their lawful vigour, under the chief inspection of their Lords-Lieutenant, in conformity with the provisions of the Dietal Act 56 §, 1723; and to restore the office of Lord-Lieutenant to its legitimate dignity.

"In consequence of that grateful confidence which we feel for this expression of your Majesty's Royal intentions, we shall now willingly abstain from entering into an examination of the circumstances by which this anxiety has been caused; and, relying on the sacredness of the Royal word, shall await, with sincere confidence, the effective execution of your Majesty's Royal will; and we moreover declare, in a spirit of humble loyalty, that the above-mentioned measures being set aside as incompatible with the fundamental Articles 70 and 12 §§, 1790, we trust and expect that the supreme Comitatal administration will be exercised by the Vice-Regal Council in such a manner that the Royal rescripts, decrees, &c. be addressed to the counties themselves; and that the right which the counties possess of sending representations to the Throne, as well as all other Comital rights and privileges guaranteed by the Act 58 §, 1790, be fully maintained.

“ We moreover finally request,—the office of Lord-Lieutenant having been restored to its legitimate dignity, and especially the chief inspection over the political and judiciary administration of counties exercised by Lords-Lieutenant, kept within the limits prescribed by the Act 56 §, 1723,—that the constitutional opinion expressed in the Dietal Representation of April 3, 1827, which gave rise to the Royal Rescript of May 28, 1827, in which the nomination of administrators is regarded as a grievance, be taken into consideration.

“ Since the commencement of your Majesty's reign, we have been convinced that the faithfulness shown by your Majesty in maintaining the laws, affords us the best guarantee for the maintenance of our Constitution and of the Comital system on which this Constitution is essentially grounded.

“ Animated by this conviction, we hereby humbly beseech, with sentiments of sincere loyalty, that your Majesty may be graciously pleased to fulfil our just requests above mentioned, in conformity with the Act 13 §, 1790; and speedily to afford us, in this respect, the consolation required.

“ Trusting, with inflexible confidence, in the fulfilment of these our just requests, we regard it as our duty to offer your Majesty the expression of our sincere thanks for the fresh Royal guarantee for the maintenance of the laws and the constitution that will thus be afforded; and this the more as we have learned with great joy from the Royal Rescript, that in the favourable solution of the grave questions brought before the present Diet, your Majesty perceives the foundations for the future prosperity of the kingdom, as well as for the fulfilment of the most ardent wishes of your paternal heart; to contribute to which, by all the means in our power, we shall regard as our most sacred vocation.

“ The confidence and affection of the people form the support of the Throne; the confidence and affection of the Sovereign, the glory of the people; the union of the will of the people and the will of the Sovereign, the power of States.

“ Your Majesty's gracious Royal Rescript is designed to calm a prevailing anxiety, while it serves at the same time as a gage that questions, the consideration of which have become imperatively necessary, will be brought to a favourable issue on principles strictly constitutional; and this pleasing conviction will be afforded to the undying affection of the nation when your Majesty is thoroughly persuaded that the loyal land of the Magyars will ever be, as it ever has been, and is now, the firm and inflexible support of the Throne of its Sovereign.

“ It is thus that the views of the Sovereign and the wishes of the nation will coalesce—the kingdom be free and powerful—the Government of your Majesty mighty and glorious.

We remain, &c.
